The Eel River Route.

[From the Logansport Pharos.]

The opening of the Detroit, Eel River and Illinois Railroad was an epoch in the local history of Logansport, so recent that it is not necessary to refer to it here. But of its growth, extent and business importance we desire to make proper mention. An enterprise that has had so many vicissitudes, and has finally triumphed over them all, has certainly something about it of more than ordinary interest and importance. It is twenty years since the Eel River Road was projected, and hardly a year since the first train came into Logansport, making the Detroit, Eel River and Illinois Railroad an accomplished fact. The history of the road is not dissimilar to the history of like enterprises, without, indeed, it be in the fact that its building was met by a sturdy and combined resistance on the part of certain interests, but through the indomitable perseverence of the gentlemen who had the work in charge, it finally triumphed over all obstacles, and their labors were crowned with complete success in December, 1872. The Eel River Road proper extends from Logansport to Butler, a point on the Michigan Southern and Lake Shore road, ninety-three miles distant from this city. At Butler it connects with the last named road, making a continuous route to Toledo and Detroit, and all Northern and Eastern cities. The distance from this city to Toledo by the Eel River route is one hundred and sixty four miles, or about four miles shorter than by the Toledo road. The running time of the trains is seven hours, making also the quickest time of any other road. The building and equipping of the road has been under the immediate supervision of D. L. Quirk, Esq., of Ypsilanti, Michigan who is at present the Vice President of the company, and Managing Director. Mr. Quirk has had large experience in railroading, and when he became interested in the Eel River route it was a guarantee that there was an honest, sagacious and capable gentleman at the head of its affairs, and that guarantee has been more than fulfilled in the completion of the finest piece of road bed in the country—one that is as smooth and evenly balanced as any of the older and more wealthy lines. In this particular the road is a surprise to every one who passes over it, as there is an entire absence of the unpleasant noise and jolting incident to old as well as new lines. After the road was finished to Auburn, the Directors found it necessary to have an outlet to Toledo. It was distanced twelve miles to Butler and by building this link such an outlet was at once obtained. With that characteristic energy that has marked every step in the progress of the road, the officers set about building and equipping the twelve miles. The people of Butler, Toledo and Auburn, furnished the money to grade and gravel the line and in a few months after it was projected the link was completed, and the Eel River in possession of a continuous route East.

In July of the present year, A. J. Southard, Esq., former Superintendent of the P., L. & C. railroad, a gentleman of large experience and capacity, took charge of the road as General Superintendent. At once he instituted a thorough reform in its management, displacing incompetents with a corps of faithful and experienced assistants, and assiduously laboring to give the road, at home and abroad, a character for prompt dealing and quick transportation, equal to any of the older lines. In his efforts he has been heartily seconded by Mr. Quirk, and the result is that the business of the road is rapidly increasing and the line becoming a popular one for both shippers and travelers.

The Eel River Route makes connection at this city with the Peoria and Pan-Handle lines, which give a continuous line from the Mississippi river and Chicago east, and ultimately it must be the great carrying line between this point and Toledo and Detroit. Its arrangements are so thorough and its transportation so rapid, that it recommends itself to the shipping public. As a local line, eventually, it will be the most profitable to Logansport of any of the roads centering here. The country through which it passes is the most magnificent farming region in Indiana, the products of which must find both an outlet and market here and at Toledo. As far as North Manchester the local trade must come to Logansport, and will come as rapidly as we can accommodate it.

Considering the difficulties that have always beset the road, the doubts and fears of its best friends, its final triumph is a matter of congratulation and pride to the people of the Eel River Valley, and for that triumph we are indebted to James S. Collins and D. L. Quirk—two men whose honesty, indomitable perseverance and faith in their work has been crowned with a marvelous success; and now that it is completed, may they live long to enjoy the substantial rewards they have so deservingly earned.

The Back-Pay Theft.

The New York World, Boston Post, Cincinnati Enquirer, and every Democratic city and country journal in the United States denounce the action of the few Democratic Congressmen in Washington, who, by implication, tried to commit the Democratic party to the endorsement of the Radical Salary Grab theft. The action of Randall, Eldridge & Co. has raised a storm of indignation seldom witnessed in the country. The Grab is a Radical bantling. Let that party own it. Grant pocketed $100,000 by the measure and yet receives the cordial support of all Radical newspapers and party. The New York City Democracy express the universal feeling of the Democracy of the nation in the following resolutions passed at a meeting of the Tammany Hall General Committee on Friday night last:

Resolved, That this General Committee, composed of the representatives of the Democratic party from each assembly and election district in the city and county of New York, readopts and reaffirms in letter and spirit the resolution heretofore adopted by the conventions of the State and county of New York in regard to the bill or law of the last Congress, generally known as the salary grab and back pay steal, and we respectfully request the Democratic representatives in Congress to advocate and vote for its unconditional repeal, and we disapprove and condemn the action of the majority of the members of said Democratic caucus in their refusal to recognize and endorse the action and resolutions of the Democracy in their recent contests with the Republican party, and by which such glorious victories have been won.

Resolved, That we cordially approve of the action of Representatives Cox, Holman and others, in said caucus, who endeavored to endorse and affirm the position and policy of the Democratic party in regard to said question of the increase of salaries and of back pay; believing that thereby they represented truly and fully the views of the Democracy of the country on that subject, and we tender to them our thanks and congratulations for their intelligent and conservative comprehension of this important political issue and its consequences to the Democratic party and in the well settled opinion of the people of the whole nation.

An Unexpected Bill.

A few days since, a well dressed couple in the prime of life, stopped at a hotel in a neighboring town, and sought out a Justice of the Peace, informed that functionary that they wished to be married. The Justice said, "All right," and inquired their names. After being told, it struck him that he had performed the same service for the lady some years before. Upon inquiring if such was not the case, the lady said she had been married previously. "Have you a bill from your former husband?" asked Mr. Justice.

"Yes," she replied. "I have a bill."

This being satisfactory, the ceremony was performed, and the couple were declared "man and wife." As they were about departing the Justice, who had never seen a bill of divorce, and having a strong desire to behold the document, thought this an excellent opportunity to satisfy his curiosity. He therefore said to the lady,—

"Have you the bill with you?"

"Oh yes," she replied.

"Have you any objections to allowing me to see the bill?" said our friend.

"None whatever," he replied, stepping to the door, and calling to a little boy some three or four years of age, she said,—

"Here, Bill, come here quick, here is a gentleman that wishes to see you."

The gentleman wilted.

A Beaver county, Pennsylvania, man threatens to bring suit against a young farmer who persists in sitting up with his daughter Sunday nights till 4 o'clock in the morning. The stern parent claims, firstly, that the following day being washday, his gal ain't of no account; secondly, that if they could only use two chairs the one they do use wouldn't cost so much for repairs.

The Sabine Virgins,

Rome, like every other new colony except New England Plymouth, was founded mainly by men. But the Romans, lacking wives, caught them by guile. Proclaiming an international festival, they called in visitors from neighboring States. Then in the midst of the exhibition they seized and carried off for wives the Sabine maidens. This friendly violence has always been a favorite theme with artists, and appears glorified in picture galleries.

Nebraska now lacks women. In 1870 the excess of males over females there was 17,857. Bitter is the Nebraska regret that Gov. Slade is dead, and that with him died a philanthropic scheme for forwarding the surplus of school mistresses beyond the Mississippi, and even the Missouri. The demand for such teachers was never and nowhere proportionately so great as to-day in Nebraska. No State east of it has so large a school fund. Nowhere do school mistresses [illegible] so fast into matrons—"as the stars of glory die." [illegible]

History repeats itself, and Nebraskians if all other expedients fail—will imitate the Romans. More than a thousand trans-continental passengers weekly traverse Nebraska, from side to side. No train but bears scores of damsles, the glory and honor of the nations, who could supply the lack of the Nebraskians, as the Sabine women supplemented the Roman State. Rumor tells of matches made when the cars have been accidentally detained. What wonder if the Nebraskians should stop the iron horse on purpose, and even repeat the immortal audacity of Roman youth among the Sabine guests. Such assaults can scarcely be averted, unless by some association which will furnish the Nebraskians wives on terms as easy as the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad have furnished them farms, such as low prices, fares and interest, long credit, first payment long deferred, great bounty on prompt tillage, &c., &c.

Donn Piatt, writing up the organization of the House, thus speaks of Hon. Alex. H. Stephens: "This gentleman had centered upon him the eyes of the multitude bunked up in the galleries above. He sat on one of the front seats, near the speaker, with a slouched hat over his secesh countenance, and the hat seemed a huge extinguisher over a very slender, limp candle. It was odd to see one of the great leaders of the late Confederacy occupying a place under the flag of our Union in the Cave of the Winds. Jeff Davis' reappearance in the Senate would not create a more profound sensation. And such a slender, ghostly looking man. He seemed the ghost of the South returning to haunt the place where so lately it lorded over all. Our mind went back to the day when this man, with his shrill voice, was master, and every word he uttered carried with it a volume of fear. The master then is the ghost of now. He was kindly helped to his seat among scalawags, carpet-baggers and negroes, and his present associates not only thronged about him to secure the honor of a recognition, but by vote unanimously permitted him to select his seat without being subject to the uncertainty of the lottery.

"What is your name?" asked the clerk of a witness about to be sworn before a Justice of the Peace. "Ottiwell Wood," was the reply. "How do you spell your name?" then asked the somewhat puzzled Judge. Mr Wood replied, "O double T I double U E double L, double U double O D." The astonished Judge thought that was one of the most extraordinary names he ever knew, and after two or three attempts to record it, both he and the clerk gave it up amid roars of laughter.

A Washington dispatch says that a bill has been framed, and it is to be introduced in Congress after the recess, abolishing the office of Chief Justice. It is said to have the support of Conkling, Morton and others of the leading legal minds in the Senate. It is contended that the presiding or chief of the Justices should be selected by the voice of the body, if at all, and that his compeers would be best able to make a selection which would be satisfactory and creditable.

A Boston till tapper recently purchased a half gallon of molasses at a grocery, and, in default of a jug, got the grocer to pour it in his hat, which he clapped on the grocer's head, and while the latter was sputtering thro' the flood of syrup, deliberately robbed the drawer and decamped. Experience is a hard teacher.

CHRISTMAS REVERIES.

Is the season changed? Is the change in me?
Is Christmas the joy that it used to be?
Are the berries as red, the leaves as bright?
If so, then my eyes are but dull to-night.
Is the music as gay, the dance as wild,
As when my heart danced with the dancing child,
I see them as they lightly fleet,
Mocked by their shadows on the wall,
But beat no measures with my feet;
To me a change is over all.
Is that alone in me?

I sit and wonder, I think and gaze;
Is love what love was in by-gone days?
Are the kisses as sweet to rosy lips?
Does the blood still rush to the finger-tips,
And the glad heart throb at a touch, a word,
At a wonted tone or a sigh half heard?
I gaze as at an acted play,
Strangely incredulous of all,
And see, while these are bright and gay,
The shadow of the curtain fall
Alike on them and me.

Just now's mistletoe spray was cast
By a heedless hand, as the dancers pass'd—
Cast at my feet, and then dragged aside;
"[illegible] kisses!" the girls in their laughing cried.
Ah, yes, and crushed hearts, too, men have known,
Jested about in as merry a tone,
I hear the music in a dream,
The strings are throbbing dull and dead;
My thoughts run back with thoughts of old,
I hear through years that long have fled;
And left a wreck of me?

A Christmas memory stirs my heart,
Again in the past I play my part;
The friends I have loved my pleasure share,
The faces that youth and joy make fair;
And gayly the joyous laughter rings,
As bubbling fresh from the heart it springs;
And from the midst a fragile form
Trips forward with a glad surprise,
And puts a little hand in mine
And looks up with her trustful eyes,
While smiling upon me.

Those trusting eyes, that winning smile,
My life from loneliness beguile;
I love—I am loved; oh, doubly blest!
A boy's heart throbs in my happy breast,
Till swift, in an instant, my joy is fled;
I am moaning alone. "Not dead? Not dead?"
Since that dark hour I look on life
Through the distorting gloom of years,
And happy faces, gentle forms,
Seem wan and wasted through my tears,
And have no joy for me.

Still I ask my heart, "Is there truth in this?
Is the world as full of light and bliss,
By sorrow and suffering unsubdued?
Is it I alone who am sad of mood?"
(Sad, but, thank Heaven! not bitter—no!
I am not soured by the touch of woe.)
And mournful answer still is made,
"Delight is in the summer days,
And when the winter sunsets fade
The Christmas logs as brightly blaze;
The change is but in thee."

Let me depart, then, this joyous scene,
Lest a sigh be heard, or a tear be seen—
Lest one face yield up a happy glance,
One step drag wearily in the dance;
Taught by suffering, school'd in woe,
In silence and sadness let me go;
Sad, for the grief my face reveals;
Silent, because of choking tears,
Yet wishing happiness to all,
And love to light them through the years
Dark evermore to me.

ONLY A BABY'S GRAVE.

Only a baby's grave!
Some foot or two at the most
Of grassy sod; yet I think that God
Knows what that little grave cost.

Only a baby's grave!
Strange! how we moan and fret
For a little face that was here such a space—
O, more strange could we forget.

Only a baby's grave!
Did we measure grief by this,
Few tears were shed on our baby dead;
I know how they fell on this.

Only a baby's grave!
Will the little life be much
Too small a gem for His diadem,
Whose kingdom is made of such?

Only a baby's grave!
Yet often we come and sit
By the little stone, and thank God to own
We are nearer heaven for it.

A CHRISTMAS PARTY.

A friend of ours in Berkshire invited my sister and myself to share her Christmas festivities. We gladly accepted; as our family could not all meet that year, we had concluded to give up our usual tree. We arrived at Mrs. Morton's hospitable home Christmas Eve. Her house was like an English country house. She lived with her two daughters, Mary and little Amy. They were seldom without company, and now they had gathered a most charming circle of people to spend the holidays with them.

At the depot, Mary's cousin, a dashing young officer, met us, and drove directly up the lawn to the house. Rows of colored lanterns were hung on each side of the way, making the snowy covering of the lawn more brilliant even than the millions of stars that were giving us their light from above. We received a hearty welcome when we arrived. Even Carlo seemed to understand it was time to be merry, and dashed about in the snow as if he were mad. We went directly to our cosy little room, where we found a nice, blazing fire on the hearth, shedding its cheerful light over the fresh evergreens that decorated the walls—emblems of that never-failing love which grows brighter when the snows of life's winter whiten our heads and chill the ardor of youth.

We had no regular tea-table; but a nice little tray was sent to our room with smoking-hot coffee and sandwiches. The large drawing-room was locked, and every one was busy dressing. We finished our toilet as quickly as possible, and when Mary's gentle tap was heard at the door were quite ready to accompany her to the sitting-room, where we found assembled some charming people.

Fast the guests arrived; merry greetings and shouts of laughter resounded through the house. As I raised the curtain and gazed from the window, I, too, shouted with delight; it looked like fairy-land. The dark evergreens, loaded with snow and icicles, seemed covered with sparkling diamonds and precious stones of all hues; the colored lanterns cast a brilliant, varied light; it was as if a rainbow had been scattered over them. I forgot everything for a time and stood entranced, until the band struck up "Hail Columbia." Mrs. Morton walked forward and took Judge Dowley by the arm; all followed in couples. Black Sam threw open the doors of the mysterious room with a flourish. At first, the gorgeous tree, one mass of light, dazzled us; it towered up to the ceiling; a light fence of green boughs prevented our going close to it, for some little one might have caught her dress on fire. We marched all around, and soon the band struck up a merry tune, and all danced round the tree in a ring. One old gentleman capered so high I was thankful I was not near him; he entered into it heart and soul; his example was quite catching, and soon we grew almost too noisy.

All of a sudden the music stopped, and we heard the notes of a bugle-horn at a distance. The sound came nearer and nearer, and in rushed six little girls, all dressed as fairies, in white, thin dresses covered with white silver stars, silver-spotted wings, silver crowns, and silver wands; they drew a car covered with white satin, on which was a gilded throne, where, half reclining, sat the fairy queen. I never saw a more lovely object. Her dress was made of some light gossamer material, spangled with gold; her wings were gilded; her crown was gold, with a diamond star in front; glittering bracelets were on her arms; her tiny feet even had gilded shoes; her hair, golden brown, hung in long, ringlets to her waist; her dimpled cheeks and pouting lips tried to look demure and dignified, as she waved a long golden wand over her head; but our happy, sunny little Amy's irrepressible smile betrayed her. All drew back as they approached, and slowly passed around the tree, singing some beautiful Christmas verses Mary had written for the occasion. (I left out one important person. Fred Dowley, dressed as Mercury, came in before them, sounding a silver bugle.) Every one stood entranced with delight; such a tableau vivant is a rare sight! All the fairies were lovely, and, what is still better, were not conscious of it, and were real children, not little old women. (Children, you know, my friends, are rare things now.) At a signal from the queen they stopped, then springing to the floor and bowing low, she exclaimed:

"Ladies and gentlemen, we have sent old Santa Claus on a distant mission; therefore, we have come ourselves, with our maids of honor and our faithful messenger, to bestow our annual Christmas gifts as we shall see fit."

Then they drew back the car, and with their long wands took the presents from the tree and gave them to Fred to pass around as they were marked. Mary assisted him.

Mrs. Morton, being generous as well as rich, gave to all handsome presents. The heavy ones were placed around the tree, just inside the green barricade. I had a beautiful writing-desk, and an elegant bracelet of Mary's hair. The tree was filled with all sorts of pretty little things. Mr. L. stood talking to me, and had been quite attentive all the evening; Amy, with a merry twinkle, passed over on the end of her wand a little teapot and some Berlin iron chairs, and with a mock bow said, "We give you these to commence housekeeping." She sent a large monkey to her cousin; he wore a full beard, and she always called him "her dear pet monkey." One little boy, in the excess of his admiration, drew off a gold ring, and kneeling down, presented it to Amy. Her majesty drew herself up, and with great dignity exclaimed, "It is for us to give gifts to you mortals, not to receive." His crest-fallen look touched her heart, so she tossed him a horn of fresh flowers. The children all wished Christmas would come every day. Their gifts were legion; little drums filled with candy, whistles, fifes, whips, horses, dolls, cradles, books, etc. The ladies received ornaments, beautiful vases, etc., knick-knacks of all kinds, besides books; the gentlemen had worked slippers, smoking-caps, books, etc. Every one was more than content. Mrs. Morton had a peculiar gift of reading character; she could tell just what would suit each person.

Supper for the children was soon announced. We elder ones all helped serve them. Plain cakes, of all shapes and kinds, frosted with sugar-plums, to make them attractive; winter fruits, bonbons, etc., were all, yet the table was bountiful. They, too, had a ring cake, and little Lily Harris, one of the silver fairies, won it. The motto on the ring was "Be ever watchful." Mrs. Morton was urged on all sides to explain it. She said "it was to teach them to consider the wants of others, and in that way they would be unselfish." After supper they had a merry romp and a dance; then, with weary little feet and happy hearts, they wended their way home. We had supper between ten and eleven; all kinds of game, oysters, salads, fruit, ices, cake, confectionery, and a large ring cake. An old bachelor won the ring; he would not give it to any lady. After that, some of the elder ones retired to their homes; the younger portion danced till twelve.

After talking over the party awhile we all retired to our rooms. Visions of loveliness hovered over our pillows; the fairies seemed to turn into angels, and appeared floating in the heavens on a rainbow. We did not rise till near nine o'clock the next morning. Mrs. Morton, ever mindful of the health of her guests, determined we should have a full allowance of sleep. We all gathered round a bountiful breakfast, and, after a fervent thanksgiving from Mrs. Morton, we did full justice to her tempting viands. As she arose from the table, she touched a silver bell to assemble her household together. Sam brought in a large pile of Bibles and handed them all around. She asked us to turn to the account of the birth of our Savior, and we each read two verses. After reading some beautiful prayers for the day, all joined in the Lord's Prayer. Then Mary quietly took her seat at a small house-organ and played "St. Martyn's," and we all joined in singing that beautiful hymn, "While shepherds watched their flocks by night."

It was a lovely winter's day. Mrs. Morton invited us to go to church, as she had two large sleighs; and we were soon dressed and dashing along through the snow, with our minds at peace with all the world, and rightly tuned to enjoy the exercises of the day. Even Mary's gay cousin was thoughtful and attentive.

When we returned home, Amy proposed a frolic in the snow; so in we rushed to change our garments for hoods, cloaks, mittens and india-rubber boots. The snow-balls flew fast and thick. We attacked Uncle John Morton and the dashing officer, and completely covered them with snow. Finally we lost breath and they conquered, and rolled us in the snow. Off went hoods, and down came long masses of hair; hair-pins flew on all sides; until, satisfied with their victory, they left us, to run into the house and dress for dinner. After dinner the gentlemen smoked, and we looked over our presents, and talked of the tree. In the evening several friends came in, and we played games, such as Proverbs, "Twenty Questions," Capping Poetry, and Charades.

The first word given was Bondage. It was capitally acted. For bond, Cousin Harry and Mr. L. took the part of Antonio and Shylock in the "Merchant of Venice."

Harry, as Antonio, wore Mary's velvet talma, fastened in cavalier style on one shoulder, and her black riding hat with plumes on his head. He looked so handsome all eyes were on him. I watched pretty Lucy Dowley's face as he entered. She blushed scarlet. I saw plainly Cupid had shot an arrow at her.

Mr. L. was Shylock. His dark eyes and long beard, with a red crape scarf wound around his head in Eastern style, gave him a Jewish look. He wore Mrs. Morton's old-fashioned long black silk cloak, with hanging sleeves; a red scarf bound about his waist with a carving-knife stuck in it. He came striding in with a savage scowl that made us all tremble.

Antonio exclaimed:

"I pray thee, hear me speak!"
Shylock—"I'll have my bond. I will not hear thee speak!
I'll have my bond, and therefore speak no more.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Follow not!
I'll have no speaking. I will have my bond."

Mr. L. recited the latter splendidly. It made us shudder and turn pale; we even forgot to guess the word. Soon in came Harry, all transformed with a wig, an old-fashioned white overcoat, a large cane, and Carlo leading him; for he had hold of a string fastened to the dog's neck. He seemed bowed down with age. All exclaimed at once, "Age," and out he went.

Then they acted the whole word. Harry's face was covered with black crape—it gives the skin at a little distance the look of a black person—his hands were colored with burnt cork, his head tied up with a red and yellow silk handkerchief, his hands were bound behind him with the dog-chain and fastened to one of his feet. Mr. L. was slave-driver. He had an empty candle-box carried into the drawing-room, on which the slave stood; and he persuaded Judge Dowley and Uncle John to bid for the slave. He came in leading Harry, and made him mount the box. Mr. L. began then, with a Yankee drawl, to expatiate on the good qualities of his slave, and offered him for sale. Uncle John walked up and examined him closely, then made a bid. Judge Dowley did the same; so on, till at last some one cried out "Bondage;" another, "Do stop." So they all departed. It was remarkably well acted. We had two other words. Charades, when well prepared, are a charming amusement; but it requires wit and ingenuity to get them up.

The next day Mrs. Morton gave us a splendid sleigh ride over to see the Shakers. They gave us a warm welcome, Mrs. M. being a great favorite with them. "Sister Martha" called Mary their "great sister" (she had a commanding figure), and Amy, the "little sister." They gave us some new cheese, delicious bread and butter, and large, red apples. We made them disappear rapidly, as the clear, cold air had given us an appetite. We returned home just in time for dinner.

In the evening we attended a large party, about a mile off; indeed, the whole week was spent in merry-making. New Year's Day we received calls; and even in that country place we had quite a number.

Mrs. Morton's sister, Mrs. Tracy, gave a Twelfth Night party. Lucy Dowley and Harry got the rings. I believe they exchanged them; at any rate, I know this, that two years after madcap Harry sobered down, and became the husband of pretty Lucy. As for the broken sixpences, one fell to my sister, and one to Mr. L. He offered to exchange, but she declined. There was a loved one far away, thoughts of whom shook her faith in the old saying.

The next morning we bade our kind hostess and her daughters farewell, and with hearts full of gratitude returned to our homes.—Oliver Optic's Magazine.

Who Introduced Railroads in America?

The Springfield Republican publishes the following letter from L. Q. C. Elmer, of Bridgeton, N. J.: "Reading the very interesting account of the Hoosac tunnel in your paper of Nov. 28, I find a new illustration of the difficulty of obtaining correct historical data. The writer states that in 1826 Dr. Phelps presented the first proposition ever made for a railroad before any legislative body in the United States. This is a mistake. About 1811 Col. John Stevens, of Hoboken, N. J., presented a memorial to the Legislature to authorize a railroad in New Jersey, and in February, 1815, a law was passed incorporating 'The New Jersey Railroad Company,' authorizing a road from Trenton to New Brunswick. This road was not built. In 1820, I saw, at Hoboken, Col. Stevens' short railroad, laid as an experiment. Locomotive steam-engines had not been perfected, and the best engineer did not suppose there would be sufficient traction in plain wheels to draw a heavy weight. The railway put up by Stevens was provided with a middle rail having teeth, for a driving-rack. This gentleman was father of the Messrs. Stevens who built the first railroad in New Jersey by virtue of the act of 1832. He entered into competition with Fulton to run the first steamboat on the waters of the Hudson, and thus obtain the monopoly granted by the law of New York, but falling a little behind in time, he sent his boat round to the Delaware, and I was carried by her in 1812. The family maintained a line of boats on the Delaware, individually or by the company, until their death."

CONGRESS having failed to renew Langstroth's patent on the movable frame principle in bee hives, there is no longer any restriction upon its use, and this is the only feature of any real value in the various hives which have been patented. A simple box hive, with movable frames, is as good a thing as a bee-keeper can get, unless he makes his colonies strong and constructs his hives with "two stories." Langstroth, by his inventions, changed the entire system of bee management, but his patent was infringed upon very generally, and he spent such large sums of money in attempts to protect his interests that he is said never to have made much out of the invention. The old, old story of inventors!

An Indian's Experience with a Breech-Loading Rifle.

Max Adeler says: "When breech-loading rifles were first introduced among the Kickapoo Indians, the principle upon which the weapons are constructed was not exactly understood. Jumping Bear got hold of one, the barrel of which opened at the rear with a spring and was attached to the stock with a hinge. The chief got it open and put the cartridge in, and then he was deeply perplexed to know how to get the barrel back in its place again. After making sundry futile efforts, he abandoned the attempt and carried the gun around with the stock hanging loose. He thought he would use it as a club, at any rate, even if it wouldn't shoot. One day, soon afterward, he became engaged in a discussion with an Arrapahoe Indian, probably on the subject of Cæsarism, or hired girls, or the price of mutton, or something of the sort—and he attempted to convince the other gentleman of the unsoundness of his views by whanging him over the head with the demoralized gun. As the butt struck the noble savage, it shut on the end of the barrel with a slam, exploded the cartridge, and in less than a minute that exasperated leader of the Kickapoo section of the North American Indian race was browsing around in the happy hunting-grounds in a condition of unfeigned astonishment. His bereaved family neglected to load up that sacred relic of their departed head until they had taken a few lessons; but now, when an Arrapahoe Indian presents heretical opinions concerning mutton or such things, they perforate him properly."

Prussian Finances.

The financial statement of the Prussian Government for 1872, which has recently been published, shows a very economical administration of the public funds. This surplus of income over expenditure for the year amounted to 28,000,000 thalers, while the public debt was reduced 80,000,000 thalers during the same time. The French indemnity money, of which Prussia received the largest part, sufficiently accounts for the reduction of the public debt; but the handsome surplus over expenses shows a thriftiness and economy which undoubtedly lie at the bottom of Prussia's power, and which will continue to give that country a predominance in Europe so long as these virtues are practiced. This saving is all the more remarkable when the enormous military expenses of the country are considered. The American Register says that it is stated, on reliable authority, that the Government holds in gold 480,000,000 thalers, and about 700,000,000 thalers in bills on London. With this plethora of money on hand, Prussia can well afford to dictate in Europe.

Polyandry in India.

An officer of the Bengal army, in an essay just published in London, describes the practice of polyandry as it exists at this day in one of the hill tribes of India: "A husband and wife are betrothed, dowries being exchanged between the husband and the father of the bride. After marriage, without any rites or ceremonies, but with the approval of parents, and in full cognizance of the village community of relatives, the wife accompanies her husband to his own house. If the husband has brothers or very near relatives all living together, they may each, if she and he consent, participate in the right to be considered her husband also, on making up a share of the dowry that has been paid. Younger brothers, as they grow up to maturity, and other brothers, as they become widowed, may each either take separate wives, or purchase shares in those already in the family. Any degree of complication in perfectly lawful wedded life may now be met with; from the sample of the single man living with a single wife, to that of a family of relatives married to a group of wives. All their children are held to be brothers and sisters. In poor districts several men have to be content with one wife between them; but, as women become more numerous, a greater proportion of men are able to procure a wife apiece."

The Grizzly Bear.

The grizzly stands at the head of the bear family, and is more feared and respected than all others. He is a treacherous, sullen, malicious, desperate, ill-mannered, uncouth, shaggy brute,—one who stubbornly resists all advances toward friendship, and is ready at any time to die in the last ditch. Like the immortal "Old Guard" of Napoleon, your genuine grizzly never surrenders, but is game to the last. The grizzly has a lordly, independent bearing, and on his native-mountain-sides or in the forests will hardly deign to make room for man himself. If you meet one in the road the chances are that he will not budge an inch, unless he happens to be in an accommodating mood, and then he will trot out one side a few yards, rear himself upon his enormous haunches, and graciously wait for you to pass. No matter whether you are armed with a breech-loading Ballard, needle-gun, Winchester, or Sharp, never attack a grizzly alone or out in the open country. The only safe position is on the back of a good horse or in the limbs of a cottonwood tree. Many persons, disregarding this advice, have paid for their temerity with their lives; for no matter where you shoot a grizzly, whether through the heart or the brain-box, he never gives up the ghost without a struggle, and will fight as long as he can lift a paw.—Denver Letter.

How to Cook a Beefsteak.

A beefsteak is always best broiled; but the following method is recommended when broiling is not convenient: The frying pan being wiped dry, place it upon the stove to become hot. In the meantime pepper and salt the steak, then lay it on the hot dry pan and instantly cover as tightly as possible. When the raw flesh touches the heated pan, of course it seethes and adheres to it, but in a few seconds it becomes loosened and juicy. Every half minute turn the steak; but be careful to keep it much as possible under cover. When nearly done lay a small piece of butter upon it, and if you want much gravy add a tablespoonful of strong coffee. This makes the meat delicious, delicately broiled steak, full of juice, yet retaining all the healthy, beef flavor that any John Bull could require. The same method may be applied to mutton chops or ham, only they require more cooking to prevent them from being rare. An excellent gravy may be made by adding a little cream, thickened by a pinch of flour, into which, when off the fire and partially cool, stir the yolk of an egg, well beaten.

Important Decision.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the appeal of the Union Pacific Railroad Company against the Treasurer of Lincoln county, Neb., resisting a county tax levy on the property of the road, has decided that the taxing power of a State is independent of the Constitution of the United States, and that, as an attribute of sovereignty, it may be exercised over all property and business within the boundaries of the State, except in so far as it may have been surrendered to the Federal Government. The county tax on the Union Pacific railroad is therefore valid. Justice Strong delivered the majority opinion of the court, but Justice Bradley filed a dissenting opinion, in which the tax of the Union Pacific road is held to be an unlawful interference with instrumentalities created in this case by the General Government.

RECENTLY, two young men living in Detroit, anxious to exhibit their nerve, laid a wager with a third person, which resulted in some rifle shooting of an extraordinary character. A dozen apples were procured, and one of the gentlemen stood 40 feet distant from the other, who shot with a rifle each of the dozen apples in succession from his friend's head, after the manner of the late William Tell. Not satisfied with that, the apple holder procured a common paste-board match-box cover, and held it close to his head, between his finger and thumb, and in that position permitted his friend to fire three times at it, each going "plumb" center.

IRON-MOLD IN LINEN.—Wash the spots in a strong solution of cream of tartar and water. Repeat if necessary and dry in the sun. Another method—Rub the spots with a little powdered oxalic acid, or salts of lemon and warm water. Let it remain a few minutes, and then rinse well in clean water.

THE CHRISTMAS GIFT.

Around the Christmas tree we stood, and watched the children's faces
As they their little gifts received with childish airs and graces.
We grown folks had our share of fun in making wee ones merry,
And laughed to see the juveniles kiss 'neath the "holly berry."
Beside me sat sweet Bessie Moore, a lovely dark-eyed maiden,
While near her stood our little Eve, her arms with love-gifts laden,
Until around the room she went, the blue-eyed baby, shyly,
And, blushing red, into each lap her offerings dropped slyly.

But when to me the darling came, all empty-handed was she,
And when I asked, "Why slight me thus?" she answered, "Oh! betause we—
We dinna know you tumming here!" and then, with blue eyes shining,
To Bessie's side she went, her arms her sister's neck entwining.
"But something I must have," said I, "my Christmas night to gladden."
A shade of thought the baby face seemed presently to assume,
Till all at once, with gleeful laugh—"Oh! I know what I do, sir!
I've only sister Bessie left, but I'll div her to you, sir!"

Amid the laugh that came from all I drew my new gift to me,
While with flushed cheeks her eyes met mine, and sent a thrill all through me.
"Oh! blessed little Eve!" cried I, "your gift I welcome gladly!"
The little one looked up at me, half-wonderingly, half-sadly.
Then to her father straight I turned, and humbly asked his blessing
Upon my Christmas gift, the while my long-stored hopes confessing.
And as his aged hands were raised above our heads, bowed lowly,
The blessed time of Christmas ne'er had seemed to me so holy.

Tunneling from France to England.

The tunnel under Dover Straits is again under consideration by the French Government. A public inquest has been ordered by the Minister of Public Works into the project of Messrs. Low, De Gamond and others. A working model of their plan was on view at the grand exhibition of 1867. It received at that time the sanction of Napoleon III., who proposed to help it by a Government subsidy. The Prussian war prevented this plan from being carried out, but the company are now willing to build the tunnel at their own expense, provided the Government will make their grant a perpetual monopoly. This the Government will not accede to. It is probable, however, that a limited monopoly will be granted.

Origin of the Prairies.

Dr. Newberry, of Ohio, in an article in Appleton's Journal, expresses himself as of the opinion that prairies are the results of a diminished rainfall. In reply to this statement, Dr. Chase, of Kansas, says that, having resided four years in the heart of the minimum rainfall district, lying between the Missouri river and the Rocky Mountains, he has observed hundreds of magnificent oaks, from one to three feet in diameter, far from perennial streams, but protected from fires by rocky hill-sides; second, groves of cotton-wood, a water-loving tree, which now are often found thirty feet high, and a foot in diameter; third, groves of young trees, often covering an area of a hundred acres or more, and as thrifty as any among the Catskills; fourth, thousands of acres covered with tall, long-jointed grasses, which ten years ago produced nothing but short, wiry, Buffalo grass.

A Sad but True Story.

A large, wooden building, dilapidated and weather-beaten, and yet suggesting in its architecture something of old-time elegance and comfort, stands on Fifth avenue, near Seventy-sixth street. It faces the Park, and, from its size and evident age, attracts the notice of every passer-by. The house was formerly the residence of one of our oldest and most aristocratic families. A daughter was born in this old homestead, who, as years passed away, grew up beautiful and accomplished. She received a fine education, and, arriving at womanhood a few years since, entered society a few years since, and was as much admired for her mental accomplishments as for the graces of her person. An heiress to a large fortune, her admirers were many, and many eligible offers were made her. Her heart, however, remained free until a [illegible] man of Southern parentage, an employe in a down-town house. His character and connections are said to be irreproachable. The heiress made a deep impression upon him, and he began to pay his suit to her. The young man proceeded from the outset in a manly, honorable manner, and sought an interview with the father of the young lady and asked his permission to make a proposal of marriage. The father told him that, although he respected him, there was a serious and to him insurmountable obstacle to a union. "You are a poor young man," said he, "and have your way to make in the world. I have always intended that my daughter shall marry a man whose fortune equals that which shall be hers. For this reason, which is with me one of grave importance, I hope there will be no more of this. I esteem you, and believe you to be a gentleman of honor, and I trust you will have a regard for my feelings in this matter." The young man replied that he should never enter any family an unwelcome member. The young lady saw him no more. At first she wondered, then sorrowed, and finally a settled despondency took possession of her. Her parents, neither of whom had told her that her lover had asked her hand of them, sought vainly to divert and arouse her from a state of mind which began to cause them serious uneasiness. At length they planned a trip to Europe for her; and, although the season of the year was not that in which pleasure journeys thither are usually undertaken, they made all haste to get her off. She herself was utterly indifferent, and saw the preparations for her departure hurried without manifesting any interest in them or the projected journey. Her friends, hearing of her intended departure, gathered to wish her a happy trip and a safe return. Finally the day of departure arrived, and from the dock the girl's parents waved their farewells and their prayers went up for her safety and happiness.

The ship steamed gallantly out to sea and was lost to sight. Days after came the news of a terrible disaster. The vessel was the Ville du Havre, and the name of the daughter was in the list of the lost.—New York Graphic.

Shall Our Bodies be Burned?

We have recently announced to our readers that a society had been organized in Hanover, Germany, the members of which pledged themselves to insert a clause in their wills requiring that their bodies be burnt after death. Since making that announcement, it has come to our knowledge that a similar effort is being made in this city, and that a number of thoughtful men have become interested in this question of the cremation of dead bodies. Having already expressed an opinion in favor of a thoughtful discussion of this subject, we will not at present say any more respecting the claims it has upon public attention. It is evident that the question is one not to be dismissed with a shake of the head or a shudder, and, now that health and sanitary associations are doing so much toward the prevention rather than cure of disease, would it not be well to consider whether the germs of many dangerous maladies may not be fostered by the common exposure of the stricken and inanimate body, or its conveyance through the main thoroughfares of a crowded city? From a recent number of the Union Medicale we learn that one Dr. Polli has been making certain experiments in the cremation of dead bodies, the methods and results of which are described as follows: "In the cylindrical retort of refractory clay he placed the body of a dog, ten kilogrammes in weight. The apparatus was heated by a crown of flames issuing from a circular tube, perforated so as to render the combustion more active, the ordinary gas being mixed with a certain quantity of pure air. The cremation continued several hours, producing a thick smoke and the odor of roasting meat. (The smoke was easily burnt by applying flame at the upper orifice.) After carbonization, a complete incineration was obtained; that is to say, the calcination of all solid parts of the body, represented by a weight of 830 grammes. This first attempt proves the possibility of reducing to ashes the body of an animal to about one-twelfth of its weight. The pipes bringing the gas were then disposed so as better to favor its mixture with air. In this way a large dog, weighing nineteen kilogrammes, was incinerated in two hours, leaving a residue of 973 grammes of ashes."—Appletons' Journal.

WILL WONDERS NEVER CEASE?—When Dr. Walker proclaimed that he had produced from the medicinal herbs of California an Elixir that would regenerate the sinking system and cure every form of disease not organic, the incredulous shook their heads. Yet his VINEGAR BITTERS is now the Standard Restorative of the Western World. Under the operation of the new remedy, Dyspeptics regain their health; the Bilious and Constipated are relieved of every distressing symptom; the Consumptive and Rheumatic rapidly recover; Intermittent and Remittent Fevers are broken; the hereditary taint of Scrofula is eradicated! Skepticism is routed, and this wonderful preparation is to-day the most popular Tonic, Alterative, and Blood Depurent ever advertised in America. We don't sell Rum under the guise of medicine. We advertise and sell a pure medicine which will stand analysis by any chemist in the country. 22

CONSUMPTION And Its Cure.

WILLSON'S

Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

Put up in large wedge-shaped bottles, bearing the inventor's signature, and is sold by the best Druggists. Prepared by

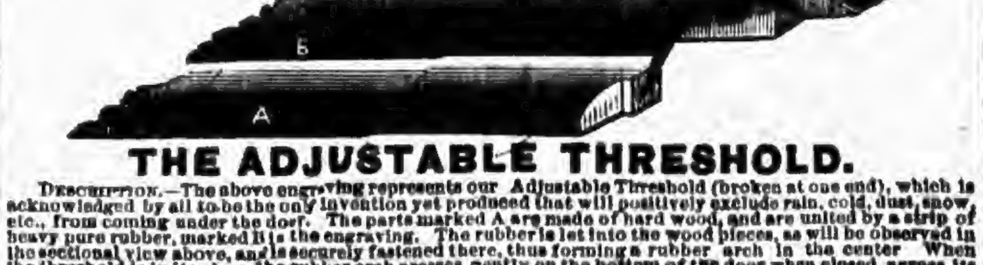
NO MORE WET CARPETS! NO MORE COLD FEET!



THE ADJUSTABLE THRESHOLD.

DESCRIPTION.—The above engraving represents our Adjustable Threshold (broken at one end), which is acknowledged by all to be the only invention yet produced that will positively exclude rain, cold, dust, snow, etc., from coming under the door. The parts marked A are made of hard wood, and are united by a strip of heavy pure rubber, marked B in the engraving. The rubber is let into the wood pieces, as will be observed in the sectional view above, and is securely fastened there, thus forming a rubber arch in the center. When the threshold is in its place, the rubber arch presses gently on the bottom of the door when closed, across its entire width, completely excluding rain, cold, dust, etc. Its durability has been tested for years, and we will guarantee it to outwear any ordinary wooden threshold. It is impossible for it to get out of order, is easily swept over, and is, in short, the most durable, simple, and effectual weather protector that has yet been invented. Not only so, but it is the only PATENT ADJUSTABLE THRESHOLD ever invented, and has no competitor in the known world.

PRICES.

For Single Door (width two feet six inches to three feet), $1.50 each. For Double Door (width four feet six inches to five feet), $2.50 each.

☞ They will save their cost in one season, in the consumption of fuel.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS Please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Jan. 1, 1874.

Gov. Booth was last Saturday elected U. S. Senator by the California Legislature, to succeed Eugine Casserly.

◆

There has been a pretty general strike among the locomotive engineers on the different railroads, because of an attempt by the companies to reduce their wages.

◆

An Honest Man.

Says the Cincinnati Times, a Republican paper: "Hon. W. S. Holman, of Indiana, is an honest man, with an obstinate firmness which can be put to good use. If a reconstruction of parties should become necessary, Holman is one whom reformers can tie to."

◆

They do say—and you can judge the truth of it—that General Grant has put his foot down and ordered the Senators under pain of his severest displeasure, to confirm the Mrs. Williams' and Mrs. Grant's candidate for the Chief Justice. The President, it is said, can't understand how the committee can trifle with ladies' feelings in this unseemly fashion?

◆

Senator Morton recently declared in the Senate that "he believed in the [illegible] that a State had rights which were sacred and inviolate, and that Congress had no right to encroach upon them." If this is not stealing the Democratic doctrine of State rights, pray what is it? Senator Morton stands a pretty good chance of being arrested for grand larceny.

◆

Forgetting, for a few moments, his favorite hobby (demanding additional privilege for Sambo) Senator Sumner recently introduced a resolution instructing a committee to report a bill abolishing the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and doing away with the present mode of collecting this revenue, substituting stamps, and subjecting all unstamped articles which are provided by law to pay revenue to seizure and confiscation.

◆

The way the "Republican party stands committed against the salary grab," may be inferred by the election of Mat. Carpenter for Vice President pro tem, the appointment and confirmation of John A. Bingham as Minister to Japan and by giving the leadership of the House of Representatives to such men as Butler, Dawes & Co. We think it "stands committed," and the jury of the people will see that it stands convicted.

The Virginius Farce.

A tragedy which startled the civilized world and aroused the indignation of our own people to fever heat has ended in a miserble farce, at a cost of many millions, without conferring the least benefit or satisfying any substantial demand.

Spanish diplomacy has again triumphed, with the aid of Spanish gold. It is the old story repeated in a new form. The United States come off with the husks and Spain with the choice fruit. This is the result of the Virginius affair, stripped of its lies and subterfuges.

Down With the Middlemen.

At a recent public meeting of the Farmers' Club, at Monticello, Illinois a preacher who was a member through the ownership of a stock farm in an adjoining county, took occasion to harangue his brotherhood on the profits accruing to the middlemen, who by their sharp dealing were swindling the tiller of the soil out of his legitimate earnings, and advised his hearers from this time forth to sell at head-quarters and to buy in the same way, avoiding all contact with those who put themselves between the producer and the consumer. A butcher who happened to be present, and, by the way, was a member of the preacher's congregation, took offense at the gist of the preacher's remarks, and resolved to let him know the state of his mind at the first opportunity.

The next morning the parson, with basket in hand, visited the meat shop, and inquired the price of a roast for dinner. The butcher usually waited upon his spiritual adviser with alacrity, but at this particular time he was moody, and refused to deal any longer with the eloquent farmer preacher.

"What is the matter now?" said the middleman in religious matters, "have I not always paid you for the meat I bought?"

"Yes," replied the butcher, "but that speech of yours last night did the business for me. Hereafter I follow your advice, so far as you are concerned: in future you will go to the bullock for your meat, and I will go directly to Jesus Christ for my salvation."

Our best Tea we still keep at the reduction of 15 cents per pound. We have all other grades, from 30 cents per pound up. Our 1 10 is the best in the market, and equal to any Tea sold at 50 cents more. Our only secret in selling Teas so much lower than other houses is that our immense sales of two and three chests a day enable us to purchase direct from importers, and we, selling direct to the cusumer, our customers save the profit of the speculator, and wholesale merchant, which is at least 10 to 20 cents per pound.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

J. A. BARNS, Conductor.

Examination of Teachers.

Examinations will be held at Auburn, on the first Saturday in each month until further notice.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co., Supt.

I. M. Thomas is putting Webster's Unabridged Dictionary into all his schools. Shaffer, of Jackson township, has already done the same, and doubtless other trustees will soon gladden the hearts of their teachers in the same way.

ANSWER TO QUESTION.—"Can a teacher put into a school, a text book on reading or arithmetic different from those adopted by the County Board?" Certainly not. This is one of the very things we are trying to stop. You may prefer Wilson's readers, and have them put into the school, and next year B. takes your place, and as he prefers Saunders' readers, will use his utmost endeavors to have another change, and so on year after year. It was to stop this constant changing and useless expense, that the Board adopted a text book in reading, and it is to be hoped that no teacher will attempt to set aside their decision.

Township Institutes.

RICHLAND TOWNSHIP.
Corunna, DeKalb Co., Ind.

The teachers of Richland township held their Institute at the Corunna school house on Saturday, Dec. 13th, 1873. Number of teachers present, eight; absent, seven; whole number fifteen. On motion, Mr. Conrad was chosen Chairman, Miss Callie Britton, Secretary and Mr. Johnston Critic. Mr. Conrad then made a few brief remarks on the manner of conducting Institutes, their use &c. Next in order Mr. Baugs took up the subject of physiology, and with the usual spirit manifested by the gentleman, made the recitation both interesting and instructive. Mr. Johnston next took up arithmetic for a short time, and the manner in which he conducted the class proved that he was an efficient teacher. The subject of mathematical geography was then discussed by the teachers generally; the recitation was conducted in an entertaining and agreeable manner by Mr. Ackley. The Institute then joined in an exercise in spelling, which was proposed and conducted by Mr. Conrad, and which served to make the Institute lively for a short time. After a general discussion on various subjects, the Institute adjourned, to meet at the Myers School House, known as district number thirteen, in said township, on the 2nd Saturday of January, 1874. All friends of education are invited to attend.

A. CONRAD, Chairman.
C. BRITTON, Secretary.

CONCORD TOWNSHIP.

The Concord township Teachers Institute met at Spencerville December 20th. Mr. M. Young was appointed President, and Miss L. Daniels Secretary. Most of the teachers in the township were present; also the Trustee and a number of spectators, among whom were several teachers from Jackson township. Different methods of teaching some of the legal branches were discussed by the members. The teachers seemed to be earnest, energetic workers, which made the session an interesting one. A programme was arranged, in which each teacher was given his especial work for the next institute, which is to meet in four weeks at the same place.

L. DANIELS, Secretary.

UNION TOWNSHIP.

Seven of the nine teachers of Union township met at Husselman's School House on Saturday, December 27th, 1873. Mr. Barns being present, took the chair and conducted exercises in reading, spelling, arithmetic and grammar; each recitation being followed by a discussion, in which most of those present participated. At the close of the session, Mr. Thomas, township trustee, appointed Charles Emanuel chairman for the ensuing meetings, and T. H. Shoub was elected secretary. Several visitors were present Misses McNerney and Griswold, of the Auburn school, were also in attendance, and took part with us. This is as it should be. All teachers should feel sufficient interest to attend these meetings, whether the law requires it or not. Our next meeting is at No. 2 one mile south of Waterloo.

T. H. SHOUD, Secretary.

STAFFORD TOWNSHIP.

The teachers of Stafford township met at the Center School House on Saturday, December 20th, 1873, Mr. Barns being present, call the teachers to order and proceeded to the institute work by giving instructions in reading and the best methods of teaching primary classes. This was followed by exercises in grammar and false syntax, spelling and similar subjects, each of which was thoroughly discussed. Work to be done at the next meeting was then assigned to each member. Every teacher was present. Four out of five were ladies, and their prompt attendance on such a day speaks well for their interest in the work. All seemed interested in the exercises. Next meeting is on the second Saturday in January, 1874

We have in our midst a dollar store.

Wood seems to be plenty in the market this week.

Wheat is begining to come in, and our buyers are busy.

The delinquent tax list appears in this issue.

See the new business cards on the first page.

Live chicken, turkeys, etc., are very scarce.

The hog market is seemingly very light this winter.

The saloons, on Seventh street, were closed on Christmas.

Leave your measure with Totten for a new silk hat. He warrants a perfect fit

Protracted meeting is still going on at the Methodist church in this place.

Some valuable presents were placed upon the Christmas trees last week.

Some two or three "sports" spent their Christmas in our jail.

Ed. Picker, a typo form Toledo, is visiting his parental home.

The Jewelry Store sold a large number of toys on Christmas.

Long & Co., have occupied the old post office building.

Read the business cards on the drop curtain at the entertainment to-night.

Our school teachers received some valuable present from their scholars on Christmas.

Remember that the COURIER office is in Odd Fellows' building second story.

Several of our young roosters have eloped on account a Bender, last Christmas.

People shold clean off the ice and snow on their side walks, as it helps the looks of the streets very much.

We want it understood among the boys that no loafing will be allowed in this office.

The dance last week on Wednesday was not as largely attend as anticipated, however a pleasant time was had.

Five hundred dollars is the worth of the presents placed upon the Christmas tree at the Presbyterian church.

Go to Vordermark's when you want a neat fitting boot or shoe. They sell very cheap, and deal in good material.

No. 1 fine shirts made to order by leaving your measure at the store of T B Totten's

A collection of $19 dollars was taken up at the Methodist church last Sunday evening to defray expenses of the protracted meeting.

Prepare for the entertainment at Ensly's Hall Thursday evening January 1st, 1873. Tickets 25 cents, reserved seats 50 cents, babies $10.

This week is the first time this winter that we had snow enough so that sleighs would run. It did not last long, but the people generally made good use of it.

If you want to be a granger and with grangers stand, go to Vordermarks under the COURIER office for your boots & shoes They keep them in large assortment and at the lowest prices.

The popular prices offered by the new boot & shoe store, in the Odd Fellows' building are creating quite a rush and people find that they can buy goods just as cheap as at Fort Wayne.

Have you seen those nobby styles of fine boots made at Vordermarks? They are the handsomest out. For a reliable boot you cannot do better than by giving them a call.

We call attention to the new card of C. A. O. McClellan in this paper. He proposes a new feature in the collection of claims by making advances on those that are good. See card.

We notice a fine display of photoes in our Postoffice, from Johnson's gallery, Waterloo, Ind. They are certainly very fine. Call and see them. 2t

We saw a most beautiful bureau at Mr. Long's furniture establishment yesterday He keeps a good stock of everything in this line.

On Wednesday before Christmas, S. W. Ralston & Son took in about $2000 worth of clover seed and it wasnt a good day for clover seed either. Price $4 90

T. H. Galloway, of Haysville, Ohio, gave us a call the other day while visiting his sons residents here. He knew Auburn years ago, and was astonished at the rapid growth of our town.

A large number of our boys, not over 15 years of age were in a miserable state of intoxication all day last Christmas.—Old bender not to stand the blame for the crowd.

Dr. Ford has his residence now lighted up with gas on the same plan as the Swineford hotel. The new brick block should be lighted the same way, and now is the time to put it in.

We have been using buckwheat flour from the Eagle Mill, and find it No. 1. It is free from sand and is superbly ground. Go to the Eagle Mills if you want a good article of flour.

We learn that our friend Chas. Shepherd received a caining at the Presbyterian church the other evening. Too bad. But he took it so gracefully that we are wholy in sympathy with him.

Chapman, one of the fellows charged with complicity in the Eel River car robbery, and who remained after the other two escaped was found guilty and sentenced to the county jail six months and $5 fine.

The members of the Auburn Silver Band desire to return their thanks to Mrs. J. W Shaffer, for the sumptuous repast spread for their benefit on Friday evening Dec. 19th. The boys speak flatteringly of the splendid oyster stew served on the occasion.

I. M. Thomas has purchased the grounds on which the stock yards are located and will go to work at once to construct a plaining mill, having already bought an engine for that purpose. We have long needed an enterprise of this kind and are glad to know that we are soon to have one.

We know of a couple of men who invested about five hundred and fifty dollars in real estate at this place and have realized from the sales of the same over three thousand. They also bought some for four hundred and sold for fifteen hundred. How is that for high? Another for two hundred and ninety. Sold one-third for two hundred, and so it goes,

We are in receipt, from the committee on Invitation, of an invitation to attend the second annual "Old Folks' Hop," at Auburn, on Tuesday evening, Jan 6, 1874 Thanks. It shall be our pleasure to attend, if our time will permit.

The Press of the surrounding neighborhood were provided with invitations but the above was the only respose we have seen. We are glad that we have one courteous neighbor.

Considering the almost inpassible condition of the roads, the attendance at the McClellan school house, in Jackson tp., was quite large. The object of the meeting was to discuss the question of organizing a grange. Mr. M. Waterman was present, by request, and stated what he knew of the workings of the order. After other remarks the meeting adjourned to meet next Saturday evening at the Center school house to take preparatory steps for an organization.

DRAMATIC.—Do not forget that the Auburn Dramatic Troupe make their first appearance this (Thursday) evening at Ensley's Hall, in the splendid comedy of Solon Shingle, or the People's Lawyer and the laughable farce of Barney the Baron.—They have put in a fine new scenery, stage and are now fully equiped to give a first-class entertainment. They have been to great expense but we doubt not a liberal patronage will be extended to them. Turn out and hear them to-night.

We have no doubt of the ability of Charley to manufacture anything to suit his purpose, and the less truth he can work into it the more the fabric suits him. But if we had the desire and ability we would not have occasion to follow suit, for his acts are on record, on the question they are recorded in black and white and says plainly to the people: "I am for whisky, intemperance and immorality. I take the side of the whisky ring. (signed) "MR. CHAS. BAXTER."

We met a farmer from Jackson township the other day, that said he did not go much on the grange movement. He was afraid of it, of course, he was a Grant Republican. He does not sing:

O yes, I'll be a granger,
And with the granger stand,
With a half or quarter section
In the hollow of my hand.
I'll rise up in the morning,
And go out and dig my peas,
While the little steers are warbling,
Their songs, up in the trees.

And when the sun is hottest,
My body will recline
Amid the balmy fragrance,
Of the spreading turnip vine;
And then, what sport at evening,
When my work is done, you see,
To chase the little rabbits,
Up the tall cucumber tree,

MUSIC, MUSIC.

Those interested in a musical education will find the advantages and facilities of a course in thorough bass at the residence of Mrs. Cone. Class to be organized January 6th. Terms $5.

There is a rumor that a young man by the name of Btller, formerly of Waterloo was shot at Logansport last Tuesday morning. Being a railroad employee it is thought that it was on account of the late railroad strikes.

An extensive One Dollar store has opened in the room one door south of the Auburn House, where a very fine assortment of Chromos, Picture Frames, Brackets, &c is displayed. Any article for one dollar. Go and see the handsome stock.

Circuit Court adjourned last Saturday, and will convene again on the 3d Monday of this month. There were very few civil cases tried owing to the large amount of criminal matters attended to. We hear Judge Best complimented by all for his manner of conducting business and his good practical sense in the disposition of cases under his jurisdiction.

Christmas passed off very quietly in our place. The evening before there were four Christmas trees, at as many churches, each place being densely packed The Presbyterians made the most costly one, the Methodist the largest. Each of the German churches celebrated the same way. These are joyous seasons for the little folks, and big ones too, and we like to see them encouraged.

THE HOP—Everybody is on the qui vive in regard to the coming Old Folks' Hop and every arrangement is going forward to make it an interesting occasion. Ensley's new hall, though not entirely finished, will be decorated, and Lifel's full orchestra, of Fort Wayne, have been engaged. The supper at the Swineford House will be a leading feature of the occasion.

New Location.

We are now snugly quartered in the second story of the Odd Fellows' building where, we intend to have things neat and clean, and we can therefore with a good grace ask all our friends, and the public generally, to call and see us. We are now in tip top shape for all kinds of Job Work, which we turn out in good style at reasonable prices.

The following truly affecting note was found on the kitchen table at one of our Main street residences on Sunday morning, the author of which had departed, never more to return. There is a strain pathos and eloquence in it that the inspired writers of poesy might be proud of. We are requested to state that if she will come back, the lady of the house will do all the work and give her $3 a week. She will be allowed to sit on the instrument while its being played. Slops shall be unknown, and the best room, and bonnet shall be hers. Thou art gone like a summer flower, come back, come back, they cry with grief, we'll never hear thy charming voice again:

Now Mrs——— when you read this you will know that I am gon not to come back hear nomore, for I hav caried All of the slopes And set back And watted All I intento, for I never was treated so before And miss treated other ways, if folks come to play because I am A hired girl I can set in the kitchen like As if I was A niger the 20 cents will just pay me for working last sunday, the work is nothing but the treatment, if I had of bin treated as I was at Mr. H. I would of staid All winter but I cant work wheare I am treated as I am hear I have gon home.

Personal Jokes.

EDITOR COURIER.—Many people are fond of craking jokes at the expense of others not thinking how much pain and mortification they may cause to their feelings.—Jokes are well enough in their kind and in their proper place, but young men and boys who are so fond of enjoying jokes, should be cautious about the character of the jokes they attempt for they are certain to react on their authors. I can take a joke and enjoy the hearty laugh as well as anyone, but there are some things which are a little too much for human nature. Mr. D. McQuiston thoughtlessly practiced one of the jokes of the latter kind but after he reflected upon it he honorably apologized to me in a satisfactory manner. I may add in conclusion that this instance serves to illustrate anew the fact that personal jokes are rarely, if ever, in good taste.

L. VORDERMARK.

A CARD.

EDITOR COURIER.—With your permission I will say a few words through your columns in explanation of a little episod that occurred last Sabbath evening in the choir of the Presbyterian church. During the day I thought to play a joke at the expense of Mr. Vordermark, who is a member of the choir, and I procured a bottle filled with spiritous liquor and placed it in his pocket, not supposing it would fall out under such mortifying circumstandes. It was a thoughtless act on my part and I have made honorable amends to Mr. V., and write this communication in order that the public may exonerate him entirely from all blame in the matter.

Communication.

EDITOR COURIER.—Christmas Eve was a gala one at the Presbyterian church.—We had a Christmas tree; something our church has not had for many years. It was an impromtu affair, gotten up on the impulse of the moment, and thus more heartily entered into than if it had been the object of long pre-considered plans, and being of a social and domestic nature added also to its enjoyment. The tree was a beautiful one, and when completed its evergreen branches were ladened with presents from loving hearts for waiting and anxious friends. Before the distribution commenced the choir sang, with an inspiration caught from the occasion, a grand christmas anthem Then began the distribution of presents. There were costly bracelets, rings sets of jewelery, etc. for the older ones, while the display of toys for the little folks was complete, amounting in all to the value of not less than $500. Many persons were taken by surprise—coming with nothing, expecting nothing, going home with arms laden with presents, and with happy hearts. But few were more surprised than were Mrs. Atright and Mrs. A. J. Ralston, at the receipt of small packages, which when opened were found to contain each a gold watch with superb chain, gifts from their husbands. After the distribution came the presentation of several articles of general interest. First Mr. & Mrs. W. Griswold were called up. Noble pair. Many years ago they had stood side by side together, willing to meet whatever life might bring to them. They were younger then and full of hope, but on this eve they stood as unitedly as then—a few honored wrinkles crossing the happy face of the one and the snows of life's winter, which never melt, had drifted into the locks of the other; but they were not forgotten in the hearts of their many friends, and tokens of respect were presented them. Eloquently did they receive them: there is no eloquence greater than silence and tears. Then our excellent organist Mr. C. F. Shepherd, was called for and presented with a beautiful gold-headed cane, as an expression of our appreciation of his services, which was gracefully received and acknowledged by him. Then, to the great surprise of the parties Rev. Mr. & Mrs. Fisher were called to stand up It was the voice of their elder and they obeyed, when with an eloquent little speech he presented them, in the name of the ladies of the congregation, with as handsome a silver butter dish and knife as we have ever seen. It is needless to say that is was accepted with grateful hearts.

With perfect love and hearts brought nearer together we all went home glad for our presents, and thankful to God for a christmas day.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE steamer Edgar Stewart, which made a successful landing of her fifth cargo of arms and men upon the island of Cuba, is said to be fitting out at Baltimore for another run.

ANOTHER member of the Tweed ring, Senator Henry W. Genet, of New York, has been convicted.

A SERIOUS collision occurred on the Eastern railroad, near Kennebunk, Maine, last week, by which three persons were killed outright, and two dangerously wounded.... The Coroner of Brooklyn, N. Y., is charged with holding bogus inquests. It is said the city, during the past year, has paid for 623 bogus cases of small-pox alone.

IT is now asserted that proofs have been found against Woodruff & Robinson, an importing firm of New York, of customs irregularities which, under the law, make their aggregate penalties the large sum of $2,000,000. ....Henry W. Genet, of New York, the last convicted member of the Tweed ring, was permitted by the Sheriff to visit his wife a few nights ago, and has not since been seen. It is thought he has fled to Canada, whence he will sail for Europe.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says the majority of the Senate are not in favor of the total repeal of the Bankruptcy act, but of amending it in such particulars as will guard a debtor from the exactions of a small minority of his creditors, leaving the question of involuntary bankruptcy to be determined by those largely interested.... The increase of receipts of internal revenue warrants the belief that the auto-panic average will soon be regained, and the Secretary of the Treasury expects his reserve will hold out till next May.... The Government Directors of the Union Pacific railroad have made their report to the Secretary of the Interior. They say that the condition of the road is vastly improved since the last annual examination, and speak very encouragingly of its future prospects. They assert that the road can be made to pay $12,000,000 per annum with no exertion beyond reasonably good management. Calculating operating expenses at 55 per cent., they estimate that this will pay interest on the first mortgage income and Government subsidy bonds, besides 5 per cent. of net earnings to the Government, and leave $700,000 for dividends on stock. The earnings last year were a little over $10,000,000. They take the ground that the road is completed in the meaning of the act that applies 5 per cent. of the net earnings to form a sinking fund.

THE wife of Alexander Agassiz, son of the late Professor, died last week in Boston, of pneumonia, superinduced by fatigue in attending upon her father-in-law.

The West.

TWO-THIRDS of the business portion of the town of Hudsonville, Ill., was recently burned. Loss, $50,000, with little or no insurance.

THE great bridge across the Mississippi river at St. Louis rapidly approaches completion. All the arches have been closed, and it is calculated that trains will be running over it by the 1st of July.... Andrew J. Perteet, the negro who murdered his wife in Chicago three years ago by cutting her throat with a razor, was executed at Joliet, Ill., on Friday, Dec. 19, 1873.... The immense wheat crop of Iowa is beginning to move.... Three highwaymen, who had murdered and robbed a farmer on the road, were recently caught in Saline county, Mo., and hung to a tree.

THERE is considerable excitement in the Indian Territory over the recommendation of President Grant, in his message to Congress, to organize a Territorial Government there for the purpose of locating the wild Indian tribes among those people. The civilized Indians protest against the scheme, and desire to be adopted as citizens of the United States.... The cashier of the freight department of the Michigan Southern railroad, at Chicago, is a defaulter to the tune of $70,000.... The defalcation of the late Treasurer of Chicago, David A. Gage, is ascertained to be exactly $507,985.89.... The well-known trotting horse Ripon Boy died last week in Oshkosh, Wis., of hydrophobia. He was valued at $30,000.... An immense meeting of workingmen was held in Chicago on the night of Sunday, Dec. 21, to consider the condition of the unemployed classes. Speeches were made in English, French, German, Scandinavian and Polish, and the sentiments were to some extent very radical. The general ground taken was, that it was the duty of the Government to find work for the unemployed laborers. The press was denounced as in league with capital against labor. Similar meetings were held in Indianapolis and Cincinnati on the same day.

THE unemployed workingmen of Chicago, to the number of about 5,000, marched in procession to the City Hall, the other night, and, through a committee, had a conference with the Mayor and Council. Mayor Colvin assured them that he would do everything in his power to afford employment and relieve the prevailing distress, after which the procession dispersed and everybody went home apparently satisfied. Similar movements have been had in Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Philadelphia, and other cities, arising from lack of employment. In the latter city there has been some rioting among the dock laborers.

A WATCH FACTORY is to be established at Rockford, Ill.... The town of Lincoln, New Mexico, was lately the scene of a bloody tragedy, in which David Warner, Mr. Herrold, J. L. Glynn, and Juan Martin were killed. Martin was a constable, and, with a posse, tried to arrest the other. Warner killed him. The Sheriff's party killed Warner, and the other two named were also found dead riddled with bullets.... Edward Schwarzvoegel, his child and wife, all Prussians, and recently from Baltimore, Md., were found in their room at a hotel in Cincinnati, the other morning, the two former dead, and the latter dying, from inhaling the gas, which they had neglected to turn off before retiring.

Washington.

THE President has nominated Henry Kessler for Postmaster at Cincinnati; also A. C. West, at Milwaukee, and H. W. Haslock, at Nashville.... Officers of the Engineering Bureau have reported in favor of dedicating the Island of Mackinac to public use as a park.

THE nomination of Henry Kessler to be Postmaster at Cincinnati has been withdrawn by the President.... Naval deserters are offered a full pardon if they will return by Feb. 1.... The House Ways and Means Committee are said to be averse to any present increase in taxation.... It is the opinion of many well-informed politicians at the capital that the nomination of Judge Williams will be rejected by the Senate on the reassembling of Congress. ....A movement is on foot for the uniting of the Western and Southern Congressmen in some definite plan for cheapening transportation to the seaboard.... It is understood that the Senate Judiciary Committee have agreed to report a bill repealing so much of the Bankruptcy law as provides for involuntary proceedings, and will leave the remaining features of the bill for voluntary benefit intact.

CONGRESSMEN WILSON, of Indiana, and Eldridge, of Wisconsin, of the House Judiciary Committee, have gone to New Orleans to take testimony upon which articles of impeachment against Judge Durell may be presented. ....A Washington dispatch of the 21st of December says: "It seems now to be understood in official circles that the Attorney-General has given his opinion that the Virginius had forfeited the right to bear the flag of the United States, and at the time of her capture was carrying it without right and improperly. In view of this opinion, our Government will, in accordance with the terms of the protocol, institute inquiry, and begin proceedings against the Virginius, and against any persons who may appear to have been guilty of illegal acts in connection therewith. As Spain has proven to the satisfaction of the United States, according to the Attorney-General's opinion, that the Virginius was, at the time of her capture, carrying the United States flag without right and improperly, the salute to the flag on the 25th day of December will be dispensed with, as not now necessary, but the United States will expect a disclaimer of intent to offer indignity to its flag in the act which was committed."

PRESIDENT GRANT is reported as saying that he has no intention of withdrawing the nomination of Attorney-General Williams as Chief Justice of the United States.

Foreign.

THE story of Capt. Surmont, of the lost steamer Ville du Havre, agrees mainly with those heretofore published. He woke at 2 o'clock, arose and went on deck, when he saw a large sailing-vessel bearing down upon them, and so near that nothing could avert the collision. Then he tells the sad, tragic tale of the passengers, who were suddenly awakened and brought face to face with death. He believes that few lives would have been lost if the masts had not fallen on the boats and crushed them, mangling their human freight, just as they were about being launched over the side of the vessel.... The King of the Sandwich Islands has withdrawn his proposition for a reciprocity treaty with the United States.

THE Spanish Volunteers have suffered another severe blow at the hands of the Cuban Patriots. Five hundred of the Spanish troops were sent out to capture a depot of arms near Guaimaro but fell into an ambush. Only 100 out of 500 escaped with their lives, but the Cubans showed their superior civilization by sending the wounded back to the Spanish lines under an escort. It was more than the Volunteers would have done for them.... The surviving portion of the crew and passengers of the Virginius were delivered to the United States steamer Juniata, at Santiago, on the 18th inst.... The French Assembly has voted to increase the salary of President MacMahon.

A BLOODY election riot recently occurred in the streets of Matamoras, Mexico, in which the Mayor and six policemen were shot and badly wounded.... Emperor William of Germany has had a slight attack of apoplexy.... A ferryboat capsized in the river Thames, the other day, and thirteen persons were drowned. ....Information comes from Havana that the British Consul-General there has received a dispatch from Lord Granville to instruct all naval commanders in the West Indies to immediately rendezvous in Cuban ports. It is stated that in Havana official circles it is certainly known that the British Government will demand the punishment of Burriel.... A doubtful rumor comes from Madrid that the Spanish Cabinet has decided to make a demand on the United States for the return of the steamer Virginius.... Gen. Sickles has determined to tender his resignation as Minister to Spain.... Rapid progress is being made by the Spanish forces in the siege of Cartagena.... A Calcutta dispatch says one-half the food in Bengal is exhausted, and that a famine cannot be averted.

A KEY WEST telegram to the New York Tribune gives an interesting account of the surrender of the Virginius prisoners to Lieutenant-Commander Braine, of the Juniata. It appears that the Spanish authorities to the last moment kept the poor wretches in ignorance of their prospective release, and with base inhumanity led them to suppose that they were to be executed. Friends were with them, taking their confessions and dying declarations, and imploring them to look to God for pardon. They were taken out of prison in despair, but on their way to the slaughter-pen, as they supposed, their eyes fell upon the Juniata flying the flag of the United States. When they realized the truth, a scene occurred which beggars description. The enthusiasm knew no bounds. They were speedily transferred to the deck of the Juniata, and gave vent to the most extravagant but touching demonstrations of joy, embracing each other, some crying, some kissing, and others audibly offering thanks to the Almighty for their deliverance from the horrors of their dungeon and the prospect of an ignominious death. On the night before the surrender the officers and crew of the Juniata were stationed at quarters, her guns being turned on the city. The Spanish volunteers having been excited to open riot by the rumor that the surrender was to take place, a large number of volunteers went in a body to the Governor's palace and begged permission to attempt the capture of the Juniata, saying that they could do it with knives alone. The Governor refused to grant permission. The poor prisoners presented a most pitiable sight in their tattered and filthy rags, and every heart was touched by the spectacle. They report that their treatment was most barbarous.

GEN. IGNACIO GONZALES has been elected President of San Domingo. The new administration, it is said, will attempt to annul the lease of Samana Bay.... A dispatch from the Hague announces that the Sultan of Acheen, seeing defeat inevitable, has given in his submission to the Dutch commander.... Advices from Santiago de Cuba represent the situation there as very serious. A short time ago twenty-five citizens were arrested, and after a mock-trial, without evidence being adduced against them, they were told to go home. On their way they were cruelly waylaid and killed. Only one escaped and he was riddled with bullets. The Americans are continually in fear for their lives, and bitterly complain that nothing has been done to relieve their wrongs. ....An official denial is given in London to the story of the New York Times, that the English Government has demanded the punishment of Gen. Burriel.... Rochefort, the Communist, is reported to have died recently in the penal colony of New Caledonia, whence he was banished.... The German Emperor is seriously ill.

Political.

AT the third and last day of their meeting, the Illinois State Farmers' Association adopted a platform of principles, in which they declare (1) that it is the duty of citizens to attend primary meetings and take active part in political campaigns; (2) that the recent record of both the old political parties is such as to forfeit the respect and confidence of the people, who are, therefore, absolved from all allegiance to them, and should act no longer with them; (3) that the Salary bill must be repealed absolutely; (4) in favor of reducing the salaries of public officers; (5) for a reform of the abuses in the civil service; (6) that the navigation of the lakes and rivers be improved as early as practicable; (7) plain and uncompromising opposition to the whole system of a protective tariff; (8) against further grants of land, and against the loaning of Government credit to corporations; (9), in favor of repealing the National Currency act, and the issue of all currency direct from the United States Treasury, to be interconvertible with low interest-bearing bonds; (10) for the revision and restriction of the patent laws; (11) against such a construction of the State Constitution as will authorize annual sessions of the Legislature; (12) approval of the existing railway legislation in Illinois, and the demand that the National Government shall not interfere on the ground of regulating commerce between the States; (13) the right of the Legislature to control railroads; (14) the prohibition of free passes for public officers; (15) reduction in public expenditures; and (16) against the combination of the plow-makers. Some of the resolutions were discussed at length, especially that concerning the formation of a new party.

WASHINGTON correspondents intimate that the Hon. Roscoe Conkling is actively but quietly engaged in laying the ropes for his nomination to the Presidency.

THE California Legislature, after a series of ballots, has elected Gov. Newton Booth to the United States Senate.

JUDGE HAGER, of San Francisco, has been elected to the short term in the United States Senate from California. He takes Mr. Casserly's unexpired term, which runs till March 4, 1875.

The Grange.

THE Executive Committee of the Iowa State Grange have completed a contract at Des Moines for the manufacture of 100 Werner Harvesters.... Over 200 delegates were present at the recent session of the Nebraska State Grange, and the utmost harmony and good feeling prevailed.... James Brainerd, Secretary of the Wisconsin State Grange, has issued instructions to the various Granges throughout the State for the annual meeting at Janesville, Jan 20. All Masters of Granges and their wives are admitted as members, and Past-Masters and their wives as honorary members. The State Grange will pay all hotel bills of members entitled to vote. All the hotels will board Grangers at reduced rates.

THE State Grange of Minnesota, recently in session at Minneapolis, was very largely attended, 300 of the 400 subordinate granges in the State being represented, and the deliberations manifested a stern determination on the part of the delegates to do their utmost to defeat the monopolists. J. H. Denman was elected State Agent for the ensuing year, and his salary fixed at $1,500.... A meeting of Grangers was recently held at Circleville, O., at which it was resolved to hereafter buy groceries at Cincinnati at wholesale prices, through an agent.

General.

IT is stated that the Virginius is to be taken to Washington, where her status will be examined into.

THE signs of peace are increased by an order cutting off all extra work at the Charlestown Navy Yard. It amounts to an official declaration that there is no longer any danger of a naval war with Spain.... The lines of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company have been bought by the Western Union Company. ....The St. Louis Globe, a paper that has been persistently refused admission to a selfish monopoly known as the "Western Associated Press," has been detected in surreptitiously obtaining possession of the telegraphic dispatches belonging to the Association, through the aid of a telegraph operator, and there is a howl of virtuous indignation among the members of the aforesaid selfish monopoly.

THE remains of the late Judge Dent were buried in Bellefontaine Cemetery, St. Louis, on the 20th inst. President Grant, son-in-law of the deceased, accompanied the remains from Washington.

THE opinion of Attorney-General Williams in the case of the steamer Virginius has been published. The opinion is based mainly on the law of 1792. He decides, after a full investigation, that the papers of the Virginius were procured by false swearing, and that the vessel was really the property of certain Cubans, who had purchased her for an illicit traffic. He decides, therefore, that the Virginius had no right as against the United States to carry the American flag. He holds, nevertheless, that while carrying this flag she was as exempt from interference on the high seas by foreign powers as if she had been properly registered, on the ground that neither Spain nor any other Government could assume a jurisdiction belonging exclusively to the United States. This decision relieves Spain from the obligation of saluting the American flag, under the terms of the protocol, and it makes it incumbent on the United States to prosecute the Virginius under the laws of this country.

THE Virginius prisoners, who were surrendered at Santiago de Cuba, say that when the officers from the Tornado boarded the Virginius, one of them, in hauling down the flag of the United States, tore it into ribbons and trampled upon it, asserting, with an oath: "This is what I wanted."... The transfer steamer connecting Cairo and the Kentucky shore made its first trip on the 24th of December. This is the last link in the Mississippi Central railroad, which makes a through all-rail route from Chicago to New Orleans.

CONGRESS.

THURSDAY, Dec. 18.—Senate.—The House bill on salaries was introduced, twice read, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.... A resolution was adopted instructing the Committee on Pensions to inquire into the expediency of placing on the pension roll the names of all honorably discharged soldiers of the war of 1812, irrespective of their terms of service.... The most of the day's session was occupied in a discussion of the Finance Committee's resolution for the resumption of specie payments. Views were expressed in favor of expansion, contraction and inaction, Sumner and Morton being the most conspicuous figures in the debate.... An attempt was made and defeated to get the resolution through adjourning for the holidays.

House.—A large portion of the day was consumed in a wordy war between Hale, Wilson (Ind.) and Eldridge. Hale charged Wilson with having sneaked and dodged votes, and that he had not the courage nor manliness to vote squarely on the Salary bill. He then concluded by saying that some men and beasts who were extremely filthy never were satisfied until they had besmeared their fellows, and that curs, after rolling in gutters, are wont to rub against and befoul decent people; that a cur in doing so certainly defiled those with whom he came, but he still remained himself a dirty dog. Wilson, on taking the floor, remarked that they had just had a splendid exhibition of a dirty dog, which statement was greeted with applause. The Speaker promptly rapped to order, and reminded the gentlemen that they must keep within bounds of propriety.... The Speaker announced that he had appointed Messrs. E. R. Hoar, Cox and Hazleton Regents of the Smithsonian Institute for the next two years.... The amendment to the bill making extra appropriations for expenses of the naval service, increasing the amount from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000, was reported back from the Senate and concurred in.... A bill was passed appropriating [illegible] for the year's salaries of five official reporters of debates. ....Dawes introduced a Postal Telegraph bill, which was referred.... The Judiciary Committee reported a supplemental Civil Rights bill, which makes the refusal of hotels, cars, stages, steamboats, theaters, public schools, or cemeteries to "entertain" persons on account of race or color punishable with a fine of from $100 to $5,000, besides rendering the parties so refusing liable to suits for damages.

FRIDAY, Dec. 19.—Senate.—A bill was passed allowing distillery warehouses to be continued after change in the management.... The Committee on Retrenchment reported a substitute for the House bill repealing the Salary act. It provides (1) for the repeal of all increase in the salaries of Congressmen and Congressional employes, and for fixing their compensation at what it was before the passage of the bill of last March; (2) that all heads of Departments shall receive salaries of $8,000 a year; and (3) that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have authority to cover back into the Treasury all increase of pay yet undrawn, or that has been or may yet be returned.... The Senate voted (32 to 27) to adjourn till Jan. 5.

House.—A resolution was adopted authorizing the Judiciary Committee to send a sub-committee to New Orleans to take testimony in the matter of the impeachment of Judge Durell.... Butler's supplemental Civil Rights bill was discussed without action.... Coburn, from the Military Committee, offered a resolution requesting the President to convene a military court of inquiry to investigate the charges against Gen. O. O. Howard. After discussion the whole matter was recommitted.... Cessna (Pa.) gave notice that he would demand the reopening and re-examination of the Chorpenning claim, on the ground that Mr. Chorpenning was not heard in the committee at the time it was settled.... Adjourned to Jan. 5.

The Age of Adulteration.

This nineteenth century of ours will hereafter be surely known as the "age of adulteration." Gold, brass, iron, having each reigned over the world, now seems to have arrived the cycle of shoddy. From birth to death our fate is to be the helpless victims of veneer, the doomed martyrs to the Juggernaut of adulteration. On entering this world of simulacra, we are speedily weaned upon a diet of typhoid-watered milk, while our infantine disorders are attacked with spurious drugs, infinitely diluted. Advancing in age, our tender chests are protected with flannel, half cotton, our little limbs clad in shoddy cloth, our chilly feet encased in brown-paper-soled boots, and our cherry-ripe noses operated on with silk handkerchiefs, heavy with stiffening. Having survived these crucial tests of constitution, we place an eight carat gold wedding ring on a dainty finger, and amidst sham tears, and equally sham rejoicings, we travel off by that greatest of all make-believes, an express train, in search of an imaginary happiness. Settling down to housekeeping, we refresh ourselves each morning with a decoction of Maloo mixture and steel filings, sweetened with sand, and we assuage appetite with alumed bread, larded butter, fresh eggs from Kamtschatka, and ox-tongues not unacquainted with omnibus life; while on our return home in the evening, we partake of Dartmoor mutton from Northamptonshire, sanctify it with a bottle of petroleum champagne and some Hamburg sherry, and top off with Swiss cheese from Ayrshire and a glass of port from any hedge. Then, determined on enjoyment, we kick off our brown paper boots, light a delicious Houndsditch Havana, loll back in an arm-chair covered with imitation morocco, and stuffed with ash-pit pickings, warm our shoddy-covered legs at a brisk slate fire, mix a tumbler of methylated spirits called whisky, and conscientiously subscribe a guinea to a local charity, because our neighbor has only given a pound. Next day we are ill; the doctor, shamming interest in our case, writes a prescription in sham Latin; the chemist dispenses it in diluted drugs; the family lawyer, pretending pity, verbosely writes our will in sham English phraseology to increase his charges; and just when our sham gold repeater, warranted to last or fifty years, stops, we stop too, and end with these shams of life. Then amidst the gloomy faces of expectant heirs, our shoddy-velvet-covered coffin, studded with lacquered nails, is borne away by dyed horses proudly bearing sham ostrich plumes, false manes and fictitious tails, while hired mourners lengthen out their funeral faces at so much per inch, and cheat at that. Last of all we are duly covered in with patent stone, warranted not to dissolve, and our epitaph pretends that our friends are inconsolable for their loss. Altogether, from cradle to grave, we have been surrounded by delusions, fictions and portentous adulterations, until the real, true and sterling have at last seemed to become mere shams, wretched veneers to cover worthless trash. In which, perhaps, our clerical friends may find the reason for that "want of faith," of which they accuse the existing generation.—Land and Water.

Death of Dead-Headism.

The pass-question has been settled. The result was reached at a meeting held yesterday, in the Chicago and Northwestern railway offices. The officers present were: J. M. Walker, President Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railway; T. B. Blackstone, President Chicago and Alton railway; J. H. Mitchell, President St. Louis, Kansas City and Great Northern railway; S. S. Merrill, General Manager, and John C. Gault, Assistant General Manager, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway; Hugh Riddle, Vice-President and General Superintendent Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railway; Albert Keep, President, H. H. Porter, General Manager, and M. Hughitt, General Superintendent, Chicago and Northwestern railway; President, John Newell, and A. Mitchell, General Superintendent, Illinois Central railway; H. Pearson, Superintendent Chicago, Danville and Vincennes railway; and F. C. Hinckley, President of several railroads, and receiver of one—the Gilman, Clinton and Springfield railway.

The session lasted two hours and a half. The result arrived at will be satisfactory to every reformer. Every pass will expire with this year, and no ticket will be given to any one for which an equivalent is not received. A considerable disposition to favor ministers with half-fare tickets was shown, but it was concluded this could not be done without violating the terms of the Illinois law against discrimination. No more half-fare tickets will, therefore, be issued by the Western railroads. Members of the Legislature, State Railroad Commissioners, Judges, et al., who have hitherto "dead-headed" their traveling way over all railroads in their respective States, will be mercilessly cut off and made to pay their fare after Dec. 31.—Chicago Tribune, Dec. 11.

THE EFFECT OF SUNLIGHT ON FLOUR.—Recent experiments have shown that the inferior quality of certain kinds of wheat and rye flour is frequently due to the action of sunlight, by which, even when in bags or barrels, the gluten suffers a metamorphosis similar to that occasioned by heating in the mill. The tendency thus imparted to it to become lumpy, and to form dough without toughness, is similar to that of flour from moist grain, or of flour when it is too fresh, or made from grain ground too early, or when adulterated with barley meal. Such flour can be improved by keeping for some weeks.—Journal of Chemistry.

LINES, as they are commonly made, are heavy and cumbersome, and always in the plowman's way. If around the neck or body they are always falling down, getting under the plow-handles, or slipping too much to the right or left at every turning about. The Scotch method is better. Two outside lines above are used. These terminate at the plow-handles, the plowman holding a line in each hand with the handle. The horses being attached together are easily governed by the outside lines.

Surprising Escape From Instant Death or Mutilation.

Jane Dixon is rapidly recovering, and in a few days will resume her place in the ballet in Niblo's Garden. An incident of her fall last Tuesday night from a pedestal fifteen feet high has not before been related. As she stood upon the little disk at the top of the slender support she in some way became conscious that she could not keep her balance, and cried out to the stage carpenter, who was managing a part of the machinery at a little distance, "I'm going to fall." The stage carpenter, with rare presence of mind, told her not to jump, fearing that the pedestal would give way and throw her upon her head.

"Keep the muscles of your limbs relaxed," he cried, "and let yourself drop." She obeyed his instructions, and thus possibly saved her life. She struck the stage in a sitting posture and fell over upon her back. The first jar was in this way transmitted through the entire length of her spine, between the vertebræ of which nature has placed elastic cartilages. Had she fallen on her side or upon her breast, or even on her shoulders, rupture or dislocation would have been certain. As it was, two hours after the accident, she was so far convalescent that she was able to sit upright and partake of grape and wine.

A year or two ago the writer stood with others at a newspaper office window on Nassau street, where the attention of all was directed to a fat-cheeked little youngster leaning out of the fifth-story window of a building opposite. It was enjoying itself in that hilarious, childish fashion so pleasant to see, but which only added to the horror of the observers as they looked up and saw it utterly beyond their efforts to save it. They dared not cry out for fear of startling it, and stood for some moments spellbound with horror. Pretty soon a cry burst from the whole party, as the little thing toppled over and, losing its infantile hold, turned over and over and over in its fearful fall. It descended past three stories and then struck an awning, where it bounded up two or three feet like a piece of india-rubber. The stout canvas held firm and, bellying down, formed a kind of pocket, in which the child seemed to gather its scattered senses for a moment, and then, seeming to think its dignity had been invaded, set up an angry cry. A lawyer in the second story of the building crept carefully out on the iron support of the awning, and seizing it by one of its legs drew it to him, and so rescued it comparatively unharmed.

About a year ago, on Thirteenth street and Avenue A, an older sister was rolling an infant in its little carriage on the roof of a five-story tenement house. Unexpectedly, she lost her hold of the carriage-tongue, and in another instant it had rolled over the edge of the roof. In falling, the wheels remained underneath, and struck the pavement first. The carriage was broken to fragments, and even the iron supports of the movable top were bent, but the little inmate, enveloped in its pillows and shawls, was only stunned by its fall, and in a few days was as well as ever.

Five or six days ago a young woman domestic employed at Madame Demorest's, Broadway and Thirteenth street, ascended to the roof to remove a piece of carpet that had been placed over a portion of the skylight. Trusting too much to the strength of the framework in which the panes of glass were set, she broke through them and was precipitated headlong down through the skylight shaft, past two stories, and struck on the dining-room floor, a distance of forty-two feet. In what position she was when she struck the floor, she, of course, does not know. Her friends hearing the sound of her fall ran to the dining-room, and as the truth flashed on their minds they were almost palsied with alarm. They found her lying on her back, unconscious, and at once removed her to a sofa, with no expectation that their exertions to restore her to life would prove successful. She soon recovered her senses, however, and is now recovering. She thinks she must have turned once or twice in her descent, but her memory of what occurred after breaking through the skylight is very much confused. Notwithstanding the extreme height from which she fell, not a bone was broken nor a joint dislocated.—New York Graphic.

A Considerate Murderer.

On Sunday afternoon as Mr. Brutsche, the active agent of the Adams Express Company at Denison, Texas, sat quietly reading his family Bible, preparing for his evening devotions, a stranger burst into his office, and, in the rough manner common to those regions, demanded to know the cost of sending a corpse to Dallas. Mr. Brutsche, regarding this as an act analogous to helping his neighbor's ox out of the pit, did not think it would interfere with the fervency of his subsequent devotions, and figured it out to the stranger at thirty dollars, and in answer to his inquiry told him the train left at six that evening. The stranger guessed he would have the corpse fixed up. But the agent had his duty to the express company to perform, and told the man he would require a physician's certificate as to the disease which had made the corpse so far ready for shipment. "Disease, hell!" exclaimed the stranger. "I don't want no certificate; I shot him this morning, the d—d horse-thief. I want to send him home to his mother." Cincinnati Enquirer.

NOT A NUMEROUS CHURCH.—In its organized form Swedenborgianism seems to have gained no great success in this country, according to a writer in the New Church Magazine. It is nearly ninety years since the doctrines of Swedenborg were first openly proclaimed in America, and now the avowed believers in them do not number over 4,000 or 5,000. The first society was organized eighty years ago, in Baltimore, and the regular attendants are less than 150. The society in Philadelphia is fifty years old, and has 200 attendants—50 less than 46 years ago. The New York society is fifty-seven years old, and all the attendance in New York and Brooklyn is less than 300. The present number of members is 3,558.—Independent.

The Ville du Havre—How the Steamer Went Down.

[From the London Times' Account of the Disaster.]

The following is the narrative of one of the seamen belonging to the Ville du Havre:

"I think it was about twenty minutes to 2 o'clock when I felt the shock of the collision. I had been on the sick-list for some days, and was then sleeping in my berth. The first thing I heard after our ship was struck was a call for all hands to come on deck. I rushed up the gangway at once, and then I saw immediately what had happened. We—that is, myself and some of my mates—tried to get one of the boats ready, but the panic was so great that we could not do it. The passengers were crying, shrieking and calling out, 'Help! help!' They made a rush at the boat, and I don't believe you could have kept them back—no, not even if you had threatened to shoot them.

"Didn't we see the Loch Earn coming? Well, yes, I believe somebody must have seen her, for there were twenty men or more on deck. I heard that the second officer saw her fifteen minutes before she struck us, but of course I can't say. The Captain came out of his berth just as her jibboom was comin' over our bulwarks, and he says to the Quartermaster: 'Why didn't you call me?' He blew the whistle, but it was too late then. She was down on us with a crash like a thunderclap, and the water came pouring in terrifically. Don't say anything against the Captain, for he had been three days and nights keeping watch, and only laid himself down that night on the sofa about half-past 11.

"When she was struck, the passengers, as I said, came rushing up from below and began to fill the boats. There were about fifty of them in one of the long-boats when the mainmast fell bang on it; and oh, I shall never forget that scene! Some of them were killed right out, some had their heads smashed, others had their arms and their legs broken. The screaming of the women—but there! I can't tell how awful it was. The mast struck me across the forehead as it fell, and the boatswain was killed by my side. Some of the sailors I picked up with their legs broken; but all we could do was just to move them out of the way, poor fellows. The mainmast brought down the mizzenmast along with it, and that too smashed a boat with fifty or sixty people in it. I think everybody in that boat was either killed or injured. Could not we have got some of the others into the boats? Lor' bless you, sir! they were too frightened and excited. If they had been quiet and waited a bit, we might have saved some of them; but there was no order—not a bit. But there! it's always so. I've been shipwrecked three times myself, and nobody knows what such scenes are that don't go through them. The Loch Earn smashed two of the boats with her spars and rigging, and when the two long ones had been broken up by the falling masts, there were only four others left, and two of them were small. It was the masts, however, that did all the mischief afterward. If they had not fallen, and if we only could have kept the passengers quiet a bit, I don't believe twenty of them would have been lost.

"Why did they not jump on the Loch Earn's bow? There wasn't time for that, sir. She was going at twelve knots and a half, and we were doing twelve, so that she bounded back and was gone from us directly. Our Captain remained on his bridge all the time, giving orders, and was on it when she went down below the water. I went down with her too—I should think twenty or thirty fathoms deep. On coming to the surface again, I looked round, and saw a great many poor struggling creatures in the water. There was a boat near me, and I held on to the keel until I could get inside. I pulled in three or four women—leastways, I gave them a hold on to the boat until they could be dragged in. Then I pulled off some of my clothes, and jumped into the water and swam to the Loch Earn. Three or four lines were thrown out to me, and at last I was hauled on board."

Residences of Dignitaries at Washington.

President Grant has recently announced his intention of fixing his permanent residence in Washington, and will shortly buy and build. Atty.-Gen. Williams has a new house, which he has just occupied at a cost of $30,000, and his remaining real estate will bring his investment in the District to $100,000. Secretaries Belknap and Robeson have bought lots, and will build in the spring, at a cost of $25,000 each. Secretary Delano proposes soon to erect a fine residence, and Mr. Creswell already owns a house worth $25,000. Mr. Fish lives in one of the houses belonging to ex-Senator Morgan, of New York, who made a timely investment in Washington property, which is now worth $200,000. The Justices and Judges of the courts are nearly all comfortable provided for, and there is no end of palatial residences owned and occupied by Senators and Representatives.—Washington Letter.

Bazaine.

Marshal Bazaine was born in Lorraine, and entered the army in 1831, at the age of twenty. He rose steadily in the service. He fought in Algeria against Abd-el-Kader, and subsequently joined the foreign legion which fought on the side of Queen Christine in Spain. Rejoining the French army after the defeat of the Carlists, he rose to a General of brigade at the breaking out of the Crimean war. He became a General of division at the close of the war, and later, accompanied the French expedition to Mexico, of which he soon became Commander-in-Chief, with rank of Marshal. When the United States compelled the withdrawal of the French troops Bazaine was still in command, and after his return to France was intrusted with the command of the Third Army Corps, and subsequently of the Imperial Guard. Soon after the breaking out of the war with Germany, Bazaine, with the Third Corps, the command of which he had resumed, was shut up and besieged in Metz.

Singular Combination of Accidents.

The gentleman who sends us the following particulars of a recent marriage says the event was the most remarkable he ever witnessed. We should think as much. The marriage took place in Lancaster, N. H., between William Evans and Mary E Lamb. The day fixed for the ceremony was a Thursday, but the dress for Miss Lamb not being ready in time, a postponement was made until the Wednesday following. Unfortunately, for that day the frosting would not adhere to the cake, and another postponement was made until Saturday. On Saturday the friends of the happy pair assembled at the house. The pastor of the Methodist church was engaged for the occasion, but as he lived some distance from Miss Lamb's house, and as he did not put in an appearance after waiting a necessary time, they sent for the pastor of the Baptist church. This they were obliged to do, as they were to take the six o'clock train for Montreal, and had no time to lose. The Baptist clergyman proceeded at once with the ceremony, and had got half through with it when the Methodist minister arrived. He was very much surprised, and his horse was very much reduced as to wind, but he helped to finish the tie. The American House coach had been engaged to take them to the depot; but the driver forgot the appointment, and nervously waiting for him, they were further unhinged by hearing the whistle of the incoming train. All was confusion at once, and much discomfort and annoyance was apprehended, and would have probably been realized had it not been for the presence of mind of the Methodist clergyman. His horse, already hitched up, was in the barn, and he ran out to get it. In backing it out, the carriage careened over the dump at the door, upsetting both the horse and itself. The Baptist minister, seeing the trouble, proceeded to the rescue by jumping out of a pantry window, and in so doing sprained his ankle, and received other injuries. At this three or four of the guests came to the rescue of the Methodist clergyman. They cut the harness while he held his horse down, and when the animal came up to a perpendicular, which it did with marvelous quickness, the Methodist clergyman was launched in the air, and when he came down he did not jump up with some facetious comment, for the reason that he came down on his head, and with such force as to drive a stove-pipe hat entirely over his ears and mouth, and clean up to his shoulders. The hat had to be cut to pieces before he could be released. In the meantime the bride's sister dispatched a man to the hotel to have them send some one to stop the train, and immediately following after for the same purpose. It was well she did, as her messenger stumbled in going down a hill, and struck head-first in a pile of stone, where he remained some minutes, lost in thought. Reaching the hotel she made known her errand, and frightened the landlord by telling him she would hold him responsible for all damages. He mounted a boy on a fleet horse, and started him to the depot. And the boy tore over a bridge at such speed that he was not able to avoid a woman with twelve bundles in he arms, but ran straight against her, bursting, and scattering the parcels, and injuring her so severely that she had to be carried home. The train was stopped, however, and the happy (?) couple got safely aboard. But it was a singular combination of accidents, and is possibly without a parallel.

A High Old Time at the Capital of Dakota.

[Sioux City (Dec. 16) Telegram.]

The news of the nominations made by President Grant for officers of Dakota is announced this morning in the telegraphic news from Washington, and created a great uproar in Yankton. The information was first received by a private telegram, and its receipt was the occasion for all the heavy politicians of that seat of Government to go on a big drunk. A Sioux City wag who was there started a report that Pennington, the Alabama gentleman named for Governor, was an individual of color, and that he knew him well. No one in Yankton knowing anything to the contrary, the information was considered of great importance. Some were immensely mad, and others hugely rejoiced, and whisky was punished with renewed vigor. The excitement became so great that finally two parties, accounted respectable, held that nothing but a duel would square their account, and thereupon seconds were chosen, and the excited throng repaired to the suburbs of the town. One of the parties was too drunk to stand alone, and had to be supported as he confronted his enemy. A number of shots were exchanged, and at the first firing the drunkest man was let go of and tumbled headlong to the ground. He gave himself up for dead, but finally ascertained that he was unharmed, and continued the fire. No blood was spilled, however, as the weapons had been loaded without ball or other missile. There were other proceedings of a similar character. It may be said emphatically that quite a number lost their heads.

The Profits of Beggary.

A curious case has recently occupied the attention of the St. Louis courts. In 1856, an Italian named Cadamatari came to this country, bringing with him a wife and child, and settled in St. Louis, where he adopted the occupation of a beggar. The little girl did most of the begging, while the father invested the receipts. This part of the business he attended to with much shrewdness, speculating in auction goods, real estate, and so on, with the money she obtained. Becoming comparatively wealthy, Cadamatari determined on a trip to Europe, and went off amply supplied with funds to enjoy himself in his native land. While he was gone the daughter begged as persistently as ever, and in the course of about five years accumulated $12,000, which she deposited with the managers of the St. Louis University. Lately Cadamatari returned from his European tour, and learning of this deposit made haste to claim it for himself, making a draft on the university for the money. The managers refused to acknowledge the old mendicant's right to the funds, and thus the matter came into the courts. The daughter, who during the old man's absence had married one of her countrymen, who was probably well aware of her invaluable qualities as a helpmeet, proved that Cadamatari, when the first came to St. Louis had no means of livelihood except the proceeds of her begging. The case was decided in favor of the daughter.

Keep the Legs and Feet Warm.

During the damp and cold season the legs should be encased in very thick knit woolen drawers, the feet in thick woolen stockings (which must be changed every day), and the shoe soles must be as broad as the feet when fully spread, so that the blood shall have free passage. If the feet are squeezed in the least, the circulation is checked, and coldness is inevitable. This free circulation cannot be secured by a loose upper with a narrow sole. If when the foot stands naked on a sheet of paper it measures three and a half inches, the sole must measure three and a half.

I will suppose you have done all this faithfully, and yet your feet and legs are cold. Now add more woolen, or, if you are to travel much in the cars, or in a sleigh, procure a pair of chamois-skin or wash-leather drawers, which I have found to be most satisfactory.

I have known a number of ladies afflicted with hot and aching head, and other evidence of congestion about the upper parts, who were completely relieved by a pair of chamois-skin drawers and broad-soled shoes. Three ladies in every four suffer from some congestion in the upper part of the body. It is felt in a fullness of the head, in sore throat, in palpitation of the heart, torpid liver, and in many other ways. It is well known that a hot foot-bath will relieve, for the time being, any and all these difficulties. This bath draws the blood into the legs and feet, relieving the congestion above. What the hot foot-bath does for an hour, the broad-shoes, with thick woolen stockings, and a pair of flannel drawers, with a pair of wash-leather drawers added, will do permanently; of course I am speaking of cold weather. No one hesitates to multiply the clothing about the trunk. Why hesitate to increase the clothing about the legs? As a prevention of many common affections about the chest, throat and head, including nasal catarrh, I know nothing so effective as the dress of the lower extremities which I am advocating.

The bath is a good thing, exercise is a good thing, friction is a good thing, but, after all, our main dependence in this climate must ever be, during the cold season, warm clothing. Already we overdo this about our trunks, but not one person in ten wears clothing enough about the legs and feet.—Dio Lewis in To-Day.

Winter Care of Horses.

Considerable is written now-a-days about false economy in various ways. My observation leads to the conclusion that one important item is almost entirely overlooked, and that thousands of dollars are lost each year by the careless wintering of farm horses. For instance, Farmer A owns a fine span of horses; he is not much of a horseman, but in the summer he works them, and keeps a man who takes good care of them. In the fall, after work is over, the horses are put into the stable and fed all the hay they will eat (be it good or bad); are left perhaps a week or two at a time, with little or no exercise, and, when they are driven, are let go at the top of their speed. Fast driving, with stomachs full of undigested hay, is the very worst of treatment. The result is that, in a year or two, the horses have the heaves badly, are spoiled for market, and are unable to do the usual amount of the service on the road; and this alone causes a loss each year so long as the team is used.

This could in some degree be avoided by building a shed with a yard for exercise, and by feeding food of sufficient strength to keep the muscles in full strength. Some say that wintering horses in the field on hay alone will cause a falling away of muscles and strength difficult to regain. No doubt, being chilled by standing in a cold barn is injurious to horses.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

He Went to the Wrong Lodge.

A Richmond (Va.) paper tells a story of a very sagacious dog and a very foolish man, and the man owns the dog. He is a married man, and the other evening told his young wife that he was going to the "lodge." The wife anxiously looked for the return of her husband until the small hours of the morning, and finally there was a scratching at the door. She opened it. The dog was there and something more. He had in his mouth a bloody handkerchief and a round piece of ivory about the size of a silver dollar. She did not know anything about the ivory, but the bloody handkerchief suggested to her a terrible story. She put on her bonnet and followed the dog. He piloted her to the lodge, which was in an upper chamber of a high building, and there on the floor in one corner was her husband, with a badly swollen eye and a bleeding nose and useless legs. He could not walk home, but there was a reason for that, which disappeared in a few hours. That young man wants to dispose of a very faithful, well-meaning dog. He also wants to find the man who hit him on the nose in the gambling-house.

The Particular Man.—The particular man makes more trouble and causes more annoyance and delay than half a dozen careless people. When he is traveling he puts his ticket in a place so remarkably secure that not only dishonest people cannot find it, but he can't find it himself. This tends to make him confused in his search and unreliable in his statements to the conductor; and after working up that worthy to a degree of misery that borders pretty clearly on to profanity, he either pays his fare over, or is put off the train. After he gets home he puts a piece in the local paper, which speaks of the road as a "grinding monopoly."

Household Economy.

Cleaning Cane Seats.—Turn up the chair bottom, and with hot water and a sponge wash the cane-work so that it may be thoroughly soaked. Should it be dirty, use a little soap. Let it dry in the air and it will be as dry and firm as when new, provided the cane is not broken.

To Prepare Wooden Pails.—If a pail receives three coats of common copal varnish on the inside before being used, it will never become water-soaked, nor will it give any disagreeable flavor to water that may be allowed to stand in it for any length of time. Thus its usefulness and durability are greatly increased.—Hearth and Home.

Buckwheat Cakes.—If you want buckwheat cakes at a moment's warning, mix in a large stone or earthen pot. When you take out quantum suffict for breakfast or supper, mix as much in another vessel as you take out, and pour it into the large pot, stirring it well. By observing this rule you will always have nice, light cakes. The large pot must be kept in the cellar.

Renovating Feather Beds.—Old feather beds may be renovated by the careful housewife in the following manner: Put them on a clean grass-plat during a heavy shower; let them become thoroughly wetted; turn them on both sides. When quite dry, beat them with rods; this will lighten the feathers and make them more healthful to sleep on. This process removes dust and rejuvenates the feathers.

To Cook Poultry.—All kinds of poultry and meat can be cooked quicker by adding to the water in which they are boiled a little vinegar or a piece of lemon. By the use of an acid there will be a considerable saving of fuel, as well as shortening of time. Its action is beneficial on old, tough meats, rendering them tender and easy of digestion. Tainted meats and fowls will lose their bad taste and odor if cooked in this way, and if not used too freely no taste of it will be acquired.

To Cleanse Carpets.—One teaspoonful liquid ammonia in one gallon warm water, will often restore the color of carpets, even if produced by acid or alkali. If a ceiling has been whitewashed and the carpet disfigured by drops of the mixture, this will remove it. Or, after the carpet is well beaten and brushed, scour with ox-gall, which will not only extract grease, but freshen the colors; one pint of gall in three gallons of warm water will do a large carpet. Table floor-cloths may be thus washed. The suds left from a wash where ammonia is used, even if almost cold, cleanses these floor-cloths well.

Growth of the Grangers.

The latest weekly circular issued at Washington from the office of the National Grange gives a statement of the number of subordinate and State granges, which illustrates in a striking manner the rapid growth of the organization. On Saturday, the date of latest dispatch, the total number of granges was 8,574; the membership being 643,125. From the 1st to the 22d inst. the number of granges organized was 789. During the present year, so far, the number of new granges organized is 6,257, distributed as follows: January, 153; February, 347; March, 666; April, 571; May, 696; June, 625; July, 612; August, 829; September, 919; October, 1,050; November (22d), 789. The highest number organized during any month of 1872 was 120; the lowest, 54.

The following States have no State Granges: Alabama, 266 subordinate granges; Delaware, none; Florida, 18; Kentucky, 68; Louisiana, 38; Maryland, 14; Maine, 1; Massachusetts, 14; New Jersey, 21; New Hampshire, 8; Virginia, 8. Of Territories, there are, Colorado, 2; and Washington 5, while Canada has 8 granges.

State Granges are organized in the following States and Territories, while the number of subordinate granges named are included in each jurisdiction: Arkansas, 93; California, 117; Georgia, 395; Illinois, 748; Indiana, 633; Iowa, 1,833; Kansas, 679; Michigan, 130; Minnesota, 379; Mississippi, 480; Missouri, 1,079; Nebraska, 350; New York, 24; North Carolina, 120; Ohio, 218; Oregon, 45; Pennsylvania, 48; South Carolina, 190; Tennessee, 229; Texas, 37; Vermont, 31; West Virginia, 22; Wisconsin, 251, and in Dakota, 30. The total number of granges in the South, or rather former slave States, is 2,946.

In New England there are but forty-four Granges organized, and none are found in Connecticut or Rhode Island. Delaware is the only other State without a grange up to date. The order has grown with great rapidity in the former slave States, especially those in the further South. Singularly enough, the order has its largest existence in South Carolina, as far as the South is concerned. No question of color has yet arisen, and it is believed that that matter is easily controlled. The largest number of organized granges are found in Kansas, according to population, while Iowa and Missouri give the largest percentage of membership. So far the Southern adhesions are from the small plantation-holders, and appear to be a desirable acquisition.

The Surrender of the Virginius.

[Bahia Honda Cor. New York Tribune.]

On Tuesday morning Dec. 16, as the bells on the Dispatch struck for 9 o'clock, and before the echo had died away, the American flag flew to the flag-staff of the Virginius, and at the same moment a boat containing Capt. Whiting and Lieut. Mariax put away from the Dispatch. As they ascended the accommodation-ladder of the Virginius, the single man on deck, who proved to be Senor De la Camara, advanced and made a salute. The officers then read their respective instructions, and Capt. De la Camara remarked that in obedience to the requirement of his Government he had the honor to turn over the steamer Virginius to the American authorities. Capt. Whiting accepted, and ascertaining that a receipt would be accepted, gave one. A word or two more were civilly spoken, and the Spainard stepped over the side, signaled to his oarsmen, and in ten minutes was again upon the deck of his own vessel, having discharged with becoming dignity the unpleasant duty imposed upon him by his Government. The Virginius was in the most filthy condition. She was leaking considerably, and the Spanish Captain stated that he had kept the pumps going continually since her arrival in order to keep the water down. Barring the filth, the condition of the vessel was much better than expected.

The Virginius steamed about 200 yards, all going well, when the engines suddenly refused to do duty, and it became necessary for the Dispatch to take her in tow. The two vessels went out of the harbor briskly, the Spanish flag being displayed by the fort as they passed. In an hour we were at sea. The Virginius was soon again under steam. The Dispatch ceased to tow her, and the two vessels steamed together toward Tortugas.

Signs, Tokens and Warnings.

I believe in signs, warnings and tokens. I say this knowing that many will criticise, but I have had too many demonstrations to allow me to doubt that certain coming events cast their shadows before.

If you drop your dish-cloth, it is a sign that some one in the family is going to die. I have seen it tried. My mother dropped her dish-cloth one morning, and just seventeen years after, to an hour, my grandmother fell dead.

If you break a looking-glass, it is a sign that you are going to move soon. I knew a family once where the woman broke a looking-glass and said she defied the sign, and that any one who believed in signs was lacking something in the head. What followed? Why, at midnight that very night her house took fire; the firemen came, and the unbelieving woman was floated right out into the alley.

If the tea-kettle sings, it is a sign of some accident. There was Jones; he didn't believe it; said he'd lick the hide right off of any of his children who entertained any such belief. Now, mark the result. Just eleven years, five months and twenty-six days afterward Jones fell down stairs, drove his thumbs up, broke his knee, put his arm out of joint, and injured his spine for life.

If you happen to set three lights in a row, it is a sign that present plans will turn out as you hope for. I had an uncle who set three lights in a row, and his plans turned out all right. He got the horse, just as he had planned, and was well out of the neighborhood, but the sign couldn't do any more, and he was overhauled by a vigilance committee and left hanging to a tree to meditate. He wasn't worth much, except as a corpse, after he got through meditating.

If you see a white horse, and don't spit over your shoulder and make a wish, it is another bad sign; you are going to meet with a great disappointment. A relative of mine used to pooh, pooh such things; said he'd be busted if he'd spit over his shoulder if he met forty white horses. But he caught it. He didn't get drawn on the Circuit Court jury, as he planned, and was obliged to go to work and earn his bread or starve. Since then he has always spit over his shoulder at the sight of a white horse, and he is always on the jury or gets big wages for being a witness.

If a load of hay tips over in front of your house, it is a good sign; it is a token that friends are coming with presents. I didn't use to believe it, until on one occasion, just as a hard winter was setting in and wood was $12 per cord, a load of hay was upset at my gate, and three days afterward my brother-in-law and family, uncle and family, mother-in-law, two aunts and a cousin arrived at my house to spend a month, bringing me several presents, among which were two pounds of dried apples, a recipe for making a new kind of soft soap, a pair of stockings for the baby, and a bunch of herbs. After these seventeen persons had been in my house a whole month, I was ready to believe in almost any sign or anything.—M. Quad.

Mind Your Stops.

The omission of a comma has frequently given a very awkward turn to a sentence. We remember an epitaph which suffered severely from such an oversight. It ran pretty much as follows:

"Erected to the memory of John Phillips, accidentally shot as a mark of affection by his brother."

A printer, meddling with the verdict of a Coroner's jury, struck out a comma after the word "apoplexy," making it read thus:

"Deceased came to his death by excessive drinking, producing apoplexy in the minds of the jury."

A correspondent introduces a piece of poetry to the editor of an American newspaper in these words:

"The following lines were written fifty years ago by one who has for many years slept in his grave merely for his amusement."

A comma at "grave" would have rendered the sentence, at all events, comprehensible, though nothing would efface its absurd diction.

The Cost of Fencing.

The Journal of the Farm has been at the trouble to dig out the following facts and figures from the United States statistics in relation to this matter:

Worm fence costs 95 cents, post and rail $1.35, board fence $1.26, and stone wall $2.34 per rod in Pennsylvania. This estimate is made on a basis of boards at $16.00 per 1,000, and rails at $56.26 per 1,000. From the same source we find the proportions of the different kinds to be, worm 67, post and rail 17, board 12, and stone wall 4 per cent. The returns embrace 156,377,821 rods of fence inclosing 16,374,641 acres, at a cost of $179,834,494, or an average of 955 rods to each 100 acres, each rod containing an average of $1.15. The annual expense of repairs and interest on cost are estimated at $198,806,182. The interest-bearing national debt, the cost of our fences and the value of our national live stock all amount to about the same thing. Each dollar's worth of stock requires one dollar's worth of fence to keep it in order.

Preserving Timber.—A process has been recently patented in England for charring the surfaces of joists and beams used in buildings as a preservative against decay. A seasoned fence-post, of which the foot, so far as it is buried in the ground or exposed to variations of moisure, has been charred to the depth of a quarter of an inch, is rendered many times more durable than an unprepared post.

Immensity of London.

Looking at London geographically, it is difficult to convey an accurate conception of the space it covers; indeed, it is hard to describe in any respect, for it is the elephant among cities. On the clearest day, from the highest point of observation, the whole city cannot be seen, but beyond the range of vision are long streets and thousands of houses. Taking Charing Cross as a center, the suburbs cannot be reached in any direction in less than eight or ten miles, and in some not in twice that distance. The Thames runs twenty-five miles through the city. If London were put down in Cook county, it would reach along the shore of the lake from Evanston to the Calumet, and spread far out beyond the Desplaines river. On this space is concentrated a population equaling that of the States of Illinois and Wisconsin, or, according to the census of 1873, that of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, St. Louis, New Orleans, and Chicago, all combined. But, immense as is the population of London, it has not ceased to grow. On the contrary, it never added so many people to its numbers as during the last decade. The Board of Public Works report that 149,320 buildings were erected between 1861 and 1871. The addition was but little less than the whole population of New York.—London Letter to Chicago Tribune.

A Racing Anecdote.

The Syracuse Courier is responsible for the following anecdote, relating to a well-known citizen: We came across an item in the history of one of our rising young men, which we hasten to embalm and put on record. The story we heard yesterday relates to a former crier of the courts in this county, who is celebrated for his forensic abilities. It so happened that during a term of County Court there were to be three days' races, which the presiding Judge was very anxious to attend. He accordingly, on the forenoon of the day previous, when the hour of adjournment arrived, directed our friend to adjourn the court. The crier turned to the Judge and asked to what time he would adjourn. The Judge whispered to adjourn till after the races, supposing the crier would take the hint and fix the date beyond that on which the races would terminate; but instead, he announced it in this way: "Hear ye! hear ye! This court will stand adjourned so that the Judge can attend the races!" The effect on the Judge can be imagined when we state that he threw a book at the crier, hitting him a stinging blow on the back of the neck. Thereafter he was very definite in fixing the time to which the crier should adjourn.

Tools for the Farm.

A correspondent of the Farmers' Union writes: There is no better way for a farmer to invest a few dollars than by buying a few tools for the farm. Much time and expense can be saved by repairing broken farming tools yourself, instead of carrying them to a carpenter and paying a high price for a job which perhaps you could have done as well if not better yourself, and at a cost of less than one-quarter the price paid for the work. There are many days of leisure in the early part of the winter that you can devote to the overhauling and repairing of the farming tools to be used early in the spring, and have them in prime order when the hurry of spring work begins. Supposing you have a broken rake handle; instead of throwing it away, lay the head by, or if you have an old handle, put that into the good head, and you have a whole rake that will last you as long as a new one costing thirty cents. If you break a pitchfork handle, don't buy a whole new fork the next time you go to town, but buy a handle and put the old tine into it, and you have as good a fork as can be bought, and for less than half the cost of a new one.

The New York Tribune tells the following good story of Prof. Snell, who has been Professor of Mathematics at Amherst for many years, and who, before the war, had, it is said, only the small salary of eight hundred dollars a year. After the war wealth began to roll in upon Amherst College. This man gave fifty thousand dollars, that man another fifty thousand dollars, and so till the coffers were filled to overflowing. Then the college trustees concluded to raise the salaries of the professors, and from eight hundred dollars they put it up to twenty-five hundred dollars per annum. Snell was sitting in his study when his wife came in to announce the good news. He was pouring over a well-thumbed mathematical treatise. "Ebenezer!" said she, "what do you think? They've done it!" "Done it?" said he, "done what? who?" "Why, the trustees! They've raised your salary to twenty-five hundred dollars a year?" "Snell's face became radiant. "Thank God, Elmira!" said he, "now we can have a codfish."

All cats celebrated for sagacity are consigned to back seats by a most intelligent creature in Preston, Conn.—a cat with a passion for clams, and without anybody to open them for her. First, she stimulates the clam's mouth with her mouth; he closes it on the cat's continuation; she immediately leaps a fence, and thus the clam-shell is broken on the top rail, and the clam himself rewards puss for all the suffering which she has suffered. We may say that we believe this story, inasmuch as it is a matter of no great consequence whether we believe it or not. At the same time we must add that the mania for zoological anecdote is becoming somewhat alarming.

An extensive English farmer says that on two fields he has grown fifteen crops of grain, wheat and beans, in succession, without a fallow, and last year's crop of wheat was forty bushels per acre. On two other fields he has grown fifteen successive crops of wheat, the last crop equaling forty bushels per acre.

A Boat Steered by a Corpse—A Mystery of Lake Erie.

On Sunday morning two farmers and their families, who were driving to Malden to attend church, when about eight miles below, or east of the town, saw a ship's yawl on the lake heading toward the beach and about half a mile away. They could plainly make out a man in the stern sheets steering the boat with an oar, and although there were no vessels in sight, the morning was so pleasant and the sea so smooth that it was supposed the man had put out from shore to pick up something, and but little attention was paid to the yawl. Passing the same spot on their return, the men found the yawl hard on the beach, and the man sitting stiff and motionless in her stern, lifeless, and frozen as hard as a rock. He sat bolt upright on the seat, the oar out behind and both hands clasping the handle, and it required hard work to wrench it from his death-grip. There was about a foot of water in the boat, but the craft did not show rough usage. The man's legs were almost covered with ice as far up as his knees, and the spray had dashed over his back and shoulders and frozen there. There was no name on the boat, and the person who brought the information to Windsor could not say that anything was found on the person of the man to reveal his identity nor to show how he had been cast adrift. He must have been dead at least three days or more. There was neither sail nor mast to the boat, and nothing in it but the one oar, showing that the poor fellow had not intended a long trip anywhere, and that he must have been blown off the shore. He had used his oar to keep before the wind, and had frozen to death on his seat, where he was so firmly held by the ice that it had to be broken with a stone before he could be pulled off.—Detroit Free Press.

Germany's Reorganized Army.

A hand-book recently published at Leipsic gives the first complete resume that has appeared of the newly reorganized army of the German Empire. The most important increase in this of late appears, of course, in the cavalry, which can now put twelve complete divisions into the field in place of the six employed during the late war, and independent of the regiments attached to the divisions of infantry. Including Bavaria there are eighteen army corps in the Empire of which seventeen (that of Elsass-Lorraine is presumably the exception) have every component element perfectly complete. Each corps has, of course, its divisions, and the most striking change in the method of organization as compared with that in use in 1870 is the far greater independence given to each division, this body being no longer regarded as only a fighting but a marching unit, with its equipage and other special service complete. There is still, however, a special reserve of artillery and engineers belonging to the corps headquarters. The number of combatants in the field army is given at 578,000 bayonets, 68,000 sabers, 2,080 guns, and 13,000 engineers; but the ration lists of the army, including train and non-combatants, amount to 847,000 men, with 230,000 horses. These figures are, of course, entirely independent of all the troops of the reserve.

The Tree Girdler.

The other day a lady halted in front of a garden on State street, Portland, and accosting a man at work on some trees with the remark, "What are you doing to those trees?" "I am girdling them, madam, with printer's ink and cotton, to prevent the canker worms from ascending," replied the man. "How much does it cost?" asked the lady. "About twenty-five cents apiece," said the man. "What's your name?" was the lady's next question. "Hill," replied the man. "Well," said the lady, "I wish you would come and girdle ours." The man gave an evasive answer and the lady went home. On telling the story to her husband, she was astonished to see him burst out in fits of laughter. "What on earth are you laughing at?" said the lady. "Why," said her husband, "your man that you asked to girdle your trees was Rev. Dr. Hill, late President of Harvard College, one of the foremost mathematicians living, and now pastor of the First Parish Church."

Spiders.

A contributor to Harper's Bazar gives the following account of the spider: "We do not believe there is much human affection wasted upon the spider; nevertheless it is a very useful creature, and should not be despised. Its specific office is to prevent the dangerous multiplication of winged insects. Entrapping flies is its forte, and it has been remarked that if spiders should strike, and for a single month in summer refuse to set their traps, we could hardly defend ourselves against armies of noxious insects that would take possession of our dwellings. Nevertheless there may be such a thing as too many spiders in the world—a possibility against which Nature has provided. When spiders are thickest and busiest catching flies, a large, peculiar-looking fly appears upon the stage of action, and adroitly seizes the spiders wherever they are found. These spiders are stowed away in secret cells to be food for the young flies. Thus there is compensation all around."

Mr. Frederick W. Schneider, of the Troy Press, set and distributed from Dec. 12, 1872, to Dec. 12, 1873, 3,234,203 ems. This amount, divided among 312 working days, gives 10,366 ems per day, averaging in round numbers 10,000 per day, with a little margin of 114,192. The highest number set in any one day was 17,485. For thirty-eight days Mr. Schneider set 12,000 ems per day, and for five weeks averaged 70,000 per week. For thirty-four weeks he set 60,000 ems. The matter was of a general nature and outside of any department.

Ashes as Manure.—At the recent meeting of the Fruit Growers' Association of Ontario, Mr. Moodie stated that he had been in the habit of using unleached ashes as a manure for his fruit trees, and that he values them more highly for this purpose than barn-yard manure.

Fire-Proof Starch.—To each pound of starch add one teaspoonful of epsom salts, and dissolve in the usual way; by boiling articles starched with this they will be less apt to catch fire.

1873—A Retrospect.

During the year of Christ 1873, which came to an end at the stroke of 12 last night, the three great desolating forces which are the terror and the curse of nations—war, pestilence and famine—either fell upon us not at all or touched us so lightly that the blighting finger was not felt by the mass of men but only by a hapless few. It was a year of general peace, health and plenty. Precious lives, it is true, were lost in the lava beds, but that struggle with a handful of fierce savages did not rise to the proportions of a war; and although sore sickness smote for a season the people of the Southwest, the destroyer trod but a short and narrow walk. For these blessings that come directly from Heaven we had abundant occasion to be thankful. For the more indirect blessings of good government and righteous laws, respecting which the equity of the skies is liable to be perverted by mortal ministers, we had by no means such strong reason for overflowing gratitude. Great good is to be spoken of the breezes that bore health on their wings, of the early and the latter rain, of the corn and the wheat, of the cotton and the rice, and of 'the kindly fruits of the earth,' which were brought forth in due season during the departed year; but not much is to be said for the men who have been most conspicuous before the American people from its opening to its close. It began amid the shame of an exposure that revealed a goodly company of trusted public servants as associated-vote sellers; it ended in financial disaster and general distress which disclosed, first the rottenness of Christian banking, and afterward the rottenness of a good deal of other banking and financeering which were in the hands of the practical heathen. The pale sun of January beheld the fall of Colfax, Patterson, Garfield, Kelly and other long-prayered and light-fingered saints; and the harvest moon lighted Jay Cooke and his confederates to the limbo of lost reputations where their law-making brethren were waiting to receive them. In the language of Gen. Butler, who felt that he was making an observation which by no kind of wild interpretation could be construed to include himself, it was "a bad year for pious men."

But, although the investigations of last winter revealed (only partially, but still clearly) a hideous state of wickedness and corruption in Congress, the legislation of that body which followed these disclosures was far from indicating a healthy state of penitence or a new growth of virtue among its members. Very soon after the rogues of the House had vindicated their virtue by a vote of censure on Mr. Ames and Mr. Brooks for practicing vices in which a large part of the austere majority had had a secret hand, they applied themselves to the back-pay and double-pay bill and other swindling statutes which outraged the sense of the country quite as rudely as the briberies of Ames and the pergeries to which his illustrious pensioners resorted to shake off the odium of his alliance.

Who dares to look for reform in a civil service whose blue-book is little better than a pension list of the brothers, brothers-in-law, cousins, uncles and drinking cronies of the Chief Magistrate and his supporters in Congress, and which can only be shaken out of their seat by a political convulsion as powerful of its kind as a convulsion of nature which should overset the pyramids? What hope is there of amendment in that financial policy which the events of the past year have shown to be radically unsound under the auspices of a Secretary of the Treasury whose financial studies but a little while ago had never extended beyond the footing up of his grocer's pass book in a New England village, and who actually attempted to resume specie payments on a paper issue of hundreds of millions of dollars with a stock of silver little larger than is to be found in the stockings and corner cupboards of many thrifty market women? What security is there for the outraged citizen or the oppressed commonwealth, even in the ultimate sanctuary of justice, the courts, when the highest judicial position in the land is bestowed upon a fifth-rate pettifogger, cunning in evading and violating laws, but strange to the business of righteously expounding them—distinguished in his present office not as a skilled and incorruptable advocate of his Government's rights, but as a mercenary compounder of felonies committed against its laws?
—New York Sun.

The granger movement is progressing finely throughout the whole country.

A Laughable Mistake.

A good many years ago, in a Vermont country village, lived two gentlemen who looked very much alike. One was a minister, and the other a violin player, whose gifts and skill at that day were in much request. This position of things gave rise to the following "comedy of errors:"

As the minister was one day leisurely walking the streets, a couple of negroes approached him. One of them remarked to the other:

"Dat's him now—I know him, for I's seen him often."

"Well, speak to him, den," says the other.

"No, Pete, you speak to him."

Noticing that they wished to hold some intercourse with him, the dominie turned round and said:

"Do you wish to speak to me?"

"Yes sar; we want to know if you be particularly engaged next Monday evening?"

"No, I believe not," replied Mr. N—— the idea of a wedding fee presenting itself, which was not to be slighted on account of the color of the parties. "What is that you want?"

"We want you, if you are 'customed to 'ficiate for colored persons who are willing to pay, next Monday evening to de red house near de toll gate."

"Oh, yes, it's not my practice to refuse anyone on such occasions. At what hour do you wish me to come?"

"Early candle light, if you please. We've not had anything of the kind in a good while."

"Very well, I'll be there," replied the dominie as he turned upon his heel, thinking of the remark that they had had nothing of the kind in a good while meant that no wedding had transpired among them in some time.

True to his appointment, Dominie N—— was at the house designated in good season. The door opened into the principal room of the house, around which sat some twenty or thirty of Africa's sable children, dressed in their very best. According to the instructions they had received from one of their number, they all rose at his entrance. He took a proffered seat, which was behind a little desk at one end of the room, for a moment and then remarked, if the parties were all ready they had better immediately take their places.

In a moment all was bustle and confusion. While some removed the chairs from the room, eight couples formed, as if for a quadrille. The Dominie stared round in utter amazement, when he who had been spokesman in engaging him at the village a few days before, coming up to him, his mouth grinning from ear to ear, said:

"Massa Fuse, haven't you brought your fiddle with you? We haven't got one here."

"Fuse! Fiddle! What do you mean?" exclaimed the Dominie, the whole affair beginning to dawn on his already quick mind. "Isn't this to be a wedding?"

The Dominie saw at a glance that he had been sold, and simply gave his name and occupation, which had about the same effect on the darkies as if a bombshell had dropped among them.

The St. Paul Dispatch has been doing a wholesome but ungrateful work. It has penetrated the rascalities of the Indian Ring—of which the Secretary of the Interior, Delano, is chief, and it proves its points as successfully as a lawyer. The iniquity is found in what is known as the Rust Contract. The parties are some Chippeways and Lac Court Oreilles Indians, of Lake Superior, of the first part, and William A. Rust, Cashier of the Eau Claire (Wis.) Bank. By the contract a quantity of pine timber, belonging to the Indians on their reserve, is sold to Rust for $50,000, in five annual installments. Some circumstances cast a suspicious color upon the face of the contract at the start. It is made and signed October 2, 1872, at the Indian agency in Wisconsin, and in eight days thereafter, on the 10th of the same month, it had reached Washington and found its way through the red tape of the Department and received the approval and signature of Secretary Delano. From this point of history, the Dispatch publishes correspondence proving several points; that soon after when it was intimated to Delano that there was a swindle in the contract, he affected no knowledge of the affair, that other parties came in and offered $200,000 for the same pine timbr, that is really worth $600,000; that, e though Rust had a valid legal contract, he came forward and made a new one, increasing his price $75,000, making the sum $125,000; that it was agreed that the Grant fund should be increased by this sale $10,000: that the Indians were tampered with and deceived by a fraudulent contract; that one Henderson was employed to negotiate with the Indians who is a fugitive from justice in Ohio, and a grand scoundrel; that one Rev. E. P. Smith, an Indian Agent, whom Delano is now pursuing for alleged irregularities, was one of the manipulators of these contracts. All these points are set forth and supported by documentary evidence in the Dispatch, with the promise of more of the same sort in store for immediate and future use. It is a very bad comment on the workings of an administration in which every office and department seems to be made use of as an opportunity for plunder and the fattening of ring and swindlers. In the present case the trouble seems to have sprung from competitors in thievery. Had no one been jealous of Rust's good fortune, and purchase of $600,000 worth of pine, at once a robbery of the Indians and a fraud of the government, might have passed unheard of or forgotten. The Grant fund would have had its $10,000, and any troublesome witness whatever was necessary to tie their tongues. As it is, the nation only sees another head of the hydra which rises wherever the official branches of a thoroughly corrupt government in the hands of a great and arrogant party extend themselves.

The Hurlbut Salary Repeal Bill, which passed the House by a small majority, is a barefaced fraud, and does not meet the demands of the people, as the following summary will show:

I. It raises the pay to $6,000 from $5,000, as it stood before the 4th of March last.

II. It does not restore the back pay received by members of the present Congress who were also members of the last Congress.

III. It does not restore the $2,625 which each member of the present Congress, with a few honorable exceptions, received from the 4th of March last until December, before the House was organized, and by which the Treasury was depleted of about $1,058,750 for that one item of extortion.

IV. It does not repeal the increased pay of the President of the United States.

Nearly all these officers and a host of others, says the New York Sun, covered by a sweeping amendment in general terms, whose pay was previously appropriated to the 30th of June were dated back to the 4th of March, and allowed 16 per cent. in addition to the augmented salaries. Not one of them is touched by the action of the House, and it was not designed that they should be, in order to make the pill more unpalatable to the Senate, and thus prevent any reform at all.

ANOTHER YEAR.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

Another year has gone to come no more;
  Its scenes of joy and hours of grief are done—
'Tis gone where other years have gone before,
  Where all must end that ever was begun;
Where gaunt and gray oblivion loves to dwell,
And infant time first lisped the hours "farewell."

Below the fleecy folds of drifting snow,
  Like beauty laid at rest, the verdure lies.
Beneath the ice, the silent rivers flow,
  The rippling rills are hidden from our eyes,
While time glides by as swiftly as the wind,
And only leaves its memories behind.

The spring-time came, and, ere it passed away,
  The world was robed in beauty everywhere;
The blossoms came and the new-mown hay
  Perfumed the breezes of the summer air;
Then summer came, and with her flying gold,
The simple story of a year was told.

Farewell, Old Year, for thou art gone at last,
  And time has borne thee on his hoary wings
Into the [illegible] ages of the past;
  And now, another year he proudly brings.
Thy funeral dirge is chanted by the breeze,
Through the bare branches of the leafless trees.

The New Year comes with many frowning fears,
  Yet, with a thousand promises of joy;
The somber shades of maturer years
  Our [illegible] fancies and fair dreams destroy—
Yet, heavenly Hope looks down, with angel eyes,
From gleaming, golden gates of Paradise.

Ambition points us to the toilsome way
  That leads to worldly honor and renown;
Yet all life's fleeting phantoms must decay,
  And all our fading fancies totter down—
While coming bards may sing immortal songs
Of our great failings and stupendous wrongs.

There is one dream that never fades nor dies;
  The dream of Heaven. How marvelously grand!
Tho' all life's howling tempests that arise,
  Sweep o'er the rock of ages where we stand;
We glance adown the pathway we have trod,
And leave our imperfections all with God.

O, Time! roll down thy ceaseless course of change
  With all thy universal light and shade;
O, mystery! before thy boundless range
  All human understanding falls dismayed;
Thy veil, that puzzles every human brain,
By angels only can be rent in twain.

THE NEW-YEAR'S STOCKING.

"Never crosses his t's, nor dots his i's, and his n's and v's and r's are all alike!" said, almost despairingly, Mr. Simon Quillpen, the painstaking clerk of old Lawyer Latitat, as he sat late at night, on the last day of the year, digging away at the copy of a legal document his liberal patron and employer had placed in his hands in the early part of the evening. "Thank Heaven!" he added, laying down his pen, and consulting a huge silver bull's eye which he pulled from a threadbare fob, "I shall soon get through this job, and then, hey for roast potatoes and the charming society of Mrs. Q.!" And with this consolatory reflection, he resumed his work with redoubled energy.

Mr. Quillpen was a little man; not so very little as to pass for a phenomenon, but certainly too small to be noticed by a recruiting grenadier sergeant. His nose was quite sharp, and gave his wild, thin countenance, particularly as he carried his head a little on one side, a very bird-like air. He trod, too, gingerly and lightly, very like a sparrow or a tomtit; and, to complete the analogy, his head being almost always surmounted by a pen, he had a sort of crested, blue-jayish aspect, that was rather comical. Quillpen had a very little wife and three very little children, Bob, Chiffy and the baby; the last the ultimate specimen of the diminuendo. It was well for them that they were so small, for Quillpen obtained his starvelihood by driving the quill for Mr. Latitat at four hundred dollars a year, to which Mrs. Quillpen added, from time to time, certain little sums derived from making shirts and overalls at the rate of about ten cents the million stitches.

Whether Mr. Latitat was able to pay more was a question that never entered the minute brain of Simon Quillpen; for he had so humble an opinion of his own merits, and was always so contented and cheerful that he regarded his salary as enormous, and was wont playfully to sign little confidential notes Crœsus Quillpen and Girard Quillpen, and on rare convival occasions would sometimes style himself Baron Rothschild. But this last title was very rarely indulged in because it once sent his particular crony, a chuckle-headed clerk in the postoffice, into a cachinnatory fit which was "rather in the apoplectic line."

"To return to our muttons." Simon dug away at his copying with an occasional reverential glance at a certain low oaken door, opening into the penetralia of this abode of law and righteousness, behind which oaken door, at that very moment, sat Mr. Lucius Latitat, either deeply engaged in the solution of some vast legal problem, or calculating the interest on an outstanding note, or consulting with chuckling delight a list of mortgages to be foreclosed.

Well—Quillpen finished his document, wiped his pen on a thick velvet butterfly, laid it in the rack above the ink, pushed back his chair from the table, withdrew the cambric sleeve from the right arm, and smoothed down his wristbands, having first put on his India rubber overshoes. The fact is, he was very anxious to get home, and he could not go without first seeing Mr. Latitat. The idea of knocking at Mr. Latitat's door on business of his own, never once occurred to him. He would do that for a client, but not for himself. So he ventured on a series of low coughs, and finding no notice was taken of them, he dropped the poker into the coalhod, the noise thus produced crashed on his guilty ears like thunder, or rather with the roar of a universal earthquake. Slight, however, as it was, it brought out Mr. Latitat from his interior.

"What the deuce are you making such a racket for?" he exclaimed in tones that thrilled to the heart of his employe; then, without waiting for an answer, he slightly glanced at the table, and asked, "have you got through that job?"

"Yes'm—I mean, yes's," replied the quivering Simon.

"Well, then, you can go. I'm going myself. You blow out the lights and lock the room. And mind and be here early to-morrow morning. Nothing like beginning the New Year well. Good night."

"Mr. Latitat, sir!" cried Quillpen, with desperate resolution, as he saw the great man about to disappear—please, sir—could you let me have a little money to-night?"

"Why! what do you want of money?" retorted the lawyer. "Oh! I 'spose you have a host of unpaid bills."

"No sir; no sir, that's not it,"—Simon hastened to say. "I hain't got nary bill standing. I pay as I go. Cash takes the lot!"

"None of your coarse, vulgar slang to me!" said Latitat. "Reserve it for your loose companions. If not to pay bills, what for?"

"Please, sir,—we, that is Mrs. Q. and myself, want to put something in the children's stockings, sir."

"Then put the children's legs in 'em!" said the lawyer with a grin. "I make no payments to be used for any such ridiculous purposes. Good night. Yet, stay—take this letter—there's money in it—a large amount—put it in the postoffice with your own hands as you go home."

"And you can't let me have a trifle?" gasped Simon.

"Not a cent!" snarled the lawyer, and he slammed the door behind him, and went heavily down the stairs.

"I wonder how it feels to punch a man's head," said Simon, as he stood rooted to the spot where Mr. Latitat left him. "It's illegal—it's actionable; there are fines and penalties provided by the statute; but it seems as if there were cases that might justify the operation—morally. But then, again—what good would it do to punch his head? Punching his head wouldn't get me the money—and if I was to try it on, finding that the idea didn't bring out the cash, I might be tempted to help myself to the cash, and that would be highway robbery; and when the punchee ventured to suggest that, the puncher might be tempted to silence him. O Lord! that's the way these murders in the first degree happen; and I think that I was almost on the point of taking the first step. I really think I look a little like Babe, the pirate," added the poor man, glancing at his mild but disturbed features in the glass; or like Captain Kidd, or leastways like Country McClusky—a regular bruiser!"

Sitting down before the grate, and stirring it feebly with the poker, he tried to devise some feasible plan for supplying the vacuum in his treasury. He might borrow, but then all his friends were very poor and particularly hard up—at this particular season of the year. The bull's eye watch might have been "spouted," if he had foreseen this contingency; but every avuncular relative was now at this hour of the night snug in bed, to a dead certainty. Purchasing on credit was not to be thought of, and the only toy-shop which kept open late enough for his purpose was kept by a man to whom he was totally unknown. Time galloped on, meanwhile, and the half-hour struck.

"I'll slip that letter in the postoffice and then go home," said Simon sorrowfully, rising as he spoke and grasping his inseparable umbrella.

"Hallo, shipmate! where-away?" said a hoarse voice, and Mr. Quillpen became aware of the presence of an "ancient mariner," enveloped in a very rough dreadnaught, and finished off with a large amount of whiskers and tarpaulin.

"I was going home, sir," replied Simon, with the neferential air of a very little to a very big man.

"Ay—going to clap on hatches and deadlights. Well, tell me one thing—whereaway may one find one Mr. Latitat—a shore-going cove, a regular landshark, d'ye see?"

"This is Mr. Latitat's office, sir," said Simon.

"Ay—and he is within hail?"

"No, sir; he has gone home."

"Slipped his cable, hey? Just my luck! Well, one might snooze comfortably on this here table—mightn't he? You can clear out, and I'll take care of the shop till morning."

"That would be perfectly inadmissable," said Simon; "the idea of a stranger sleeping here!"

"A stranger!" cried the sailor. "Why, shipmate, do you happen to know I am? Look at me! Don't you find somewhat of a family likeness to Lucius in my old weather-beaten mug? Why, man alive, I'm his brother—his own blood brother! You must a heard him speak of me. Been cruising around the world in chase of Fortune, but could never overhaul her. Been sick, shipwrecked, and now come back as poor as I went. But Lucius has got enough for both of us. How glad he'll be to see me to-morrow, hey, old Ink and Tape?"

Simon had his doubts about that matter, but told the sailor to come in the morning and see.

"That I will," said the tar, "and start him up with a rousing Happy New Year! But I say, shipmate, I don't want to sleep in the watch-house. Have you never a shilling about your trowsers?"

Simon answered that he hadn't got a cent.

"Why? Don't that brother of mine give you good wages?"

"Enormous!" said Simon.

"What becomes of it all?"

"I spend it all—I'm very extravagant," said Simon, shaking his head. "And then, I'm sorry to say, your brother is not always punctual in his payments. To-night, for instance, I couldn't get a cent from him."

"Then I'll tell you what I'd do, shipmate," said the sailor, confidentially. "I'd overhaul some of his letters. Steam will open a wafer, and a hot knife-blade wax. I'd overhaul his money-letters and pay myself. Ha! ha! do you take? Now that letter you've got in your fin, my boy, looks woundy like a dokiment chock-full of shinplasters. What do you say to making prize of 'em? Wouldn't it be a jolly go?"

"Stand off!" said Simon, assuming a heavy round ruler, and a commanding attitude. "Don't you come anigh me, or there'll be a case of justifiable homicide here. How dare you counsel me to commit a robbery on your own brother? I wonder you ain't ashamed to look me in the face."

"A chap as has cruised as many years as I have in the low latitudes ain't afraid to look anybody in the face," answered the "ancient mariner" grimly. "I made you a fair offer, shipmate, and you rejected it like a long-shore jackass as you are. Good-night to ye."

Much to his relief, the sailor took himself off, and Simon, after locking and double locking his door, went to the postoffice and deposited the letter with which he had been intrusted. As he lived a great way up on the Neck, he did not reach home until after all the clocks of the city had struck twelve, so that he was able to surprise his little wife, who was sitting up for him, with a "Happy New Year!"

He cast a rueful eye at the line of stockings hung along the mantle-piece in the sitting-room, and then sorrowfully announced to his wife his failure to obtain money of Mr. Latitat.

"Here'll be nothing for the stockings, Meg," said he, "unless what the poor children put in ours."

"I am very sorry," said his wife, who bore the announcement much better than he anticipated; "but we'll have a happy New Year for all that."

Simon's roasted potatoes were completely charred, he had been detained so late; but there was a little meal in the center of each, and charcoal is not at all unhealthy. He went to bed, and in spite of his cares, slept the sleep of the just.

A confused babbling awoke him at daylight. Master Bobby was standing on his stomach, Miss Chiffy was seated nearly on his head, and baby was crowing in its cradle. Happy New Years and kisses were exchanged. "Oh, dear papa and mamma!" cried Bobby, "what a beautiful horse I found in my stocking!"

"And what a beautiful wax doll with eyes that move in mine," said Chiffy—and such a splendid rattle and coral in baby's. Go, do go down and see what there is in yours."

"This is some of your work, little woman," whispered Simon to his wife. But the little woman denied it emphatically. Much mystified he hurried down to the breakfast-room. The children had made the usual offering of very hard and highly-colored sugar plums; but in each of the two large stockings, stowed away at the bottom, was a roll of bank notes, five hundred dollars in each.

"Somebody wants to ruin us!" cried Simon, bursting into tears. "This is stolen money, and they want to lay it on to us."

"All I know about it," said Mrs. Quillpen, "is that last night, just before you came home, a sailor man came here with all these things, and said they were for us, and made me promise to put them in the stockings, as he directed, and say nothing about his visit to you."

"A sailor!" cried Simon—"I have it! I think I know you it is. Good-by—I'll be back to breakfast directly."

Simon ran to the office, and found, as he anticipated, Mr. Latitat there before him.

"A happy New Year to you, sir," said he. "Have you seen your brother?"

"I have not," replied Mr. Latitat.

Simon then told him all that happened on the preceding night; the apparition of the sailor—the temptation—the money found in the stockings, in proof of which he showed the thousand dollars, and stating his fears that they had been stolen, offered to deposit the sum in his employer's hands.

"Keep 'em, shipmate, they were meant for you!" exclaimed Mr. Latitat, suddenly and queerly, assuming the very voice and look of the nautical brother of the preceding evening.

While Simon stared his eyes out of hit head, Mr. Latitat informed him that he had no brother—that he had disguised himself for the purpose of putting his clerk's long-tried fidelity to a final test, and, that sustained triumphantly, had rewarded him in the manner we have seen. He told how, disgusted in early life by the treachery and ingratitude of friends and relations who had combined to ruin him, he had become a misanthrope and miser; how the spectacle of Simon's disinterested fidelity, rigid sense of honor, self-denial and cheerfulness, had won back his better nature, and he wound off, as he shook Quillpen warmly by the hand, by announcing that he had raised his salary to twelve hundred dollars per annum.

The good news almost killed Simon. "Please your honor," said he, endeavoring to frame an appropriate reply—"no—that ain't it—please your excellency—you've gone and done it—you've gone and done it! I was Baron Rothschild before, and now—no—I can't tell what I am—it isn't in no biographical dictionary, and I don't believe it's in the 'Wealth of Nations!'"

"Well, never mind," said Latitat, laughing, "go home and tell Mrs. Quillpen the office won't be open till to-morrow, and that I shall depend on dinner with you all to-day."

A Prophecy.

It is not impossible that the present troubles under which the Spanish Republic labors will eventuate in the wiping out of that nationality. The event is not at all a novelty. Poland once menaced and almost conquered Russia. Prussia was once only one of a coterie of German States; Portugal was once mistress of the seas; Holland once ruled the ocean; Venice was once the greatest power in the world. We need not go back to the times of Egyptian, Judean, Assyrian, Grecian or Roman power to learn of the growth and decadence of nations. The New Zealander on the ruins of London is not an impossibility. Spain is more the "sick man" in Europe than ever Turkey was. Before this generation shall pass away this Government will control the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, England will hold the Philipine islands, Italy and Germany will have the Spanish possessions in the Mediterranean, and the territory of Spain itself will be divided between France, Italy and Portugal. This is no prophecy, but simply a statement of fact that current events foreshadow.—Ex.

The Influence of Newspapers.

The Boston Traveller states that a school teacher who had enjoyed the benefit of a long practice of his profession, and had watched closely the influence of a newspaper upon the minds of a family of children, gives as a result of his observation that without exception those scholars of both sexes and all ages who have access to newspapers at home, when compared with those who have not, are: 1. Better readers, excelling in pronunciation, and consequently read more understandingly. 2. They are better spellers, and define words with ease and accuracy. 3. They obtain a partial knowledge of geography in almost half the time it requires others, as the newspaper has made them familiar with the location of important places and nations, their governments and doings. 4. They are better grammarians, for having become familiar with every variety of style in the newspaper, from commonplace advertisements to the finished and classical oration of the statesman, they more readily comprehend the meaning of the text, and consequently analyze its contents with accuracy.

Mr. Lincoln's Religious Views.

The Hon. William H. Herndon, the law-partner of President Lincoln, has grown weary of the attacks upon his veracity indulged in by Dr. Holland, Mr. Reed, and others, who have insisted that Mr. Lincoln became a Christian in the later years of his life, and has delivered a lecture in Springfield to establish the truth of his statement that the President died as had lived, outside of the Christian faith. He engages in the discussion with the boldness and energy characteristic of him, and certainly goes far to invalidate much of the testimony relied upon by the champions of Mr. Lincoln's orthodoxy. The truth probably is that Mr. Lincoln was one of the most reticent men who ever lived in regard to his own spiritual exercises. He had a deep respect for religion and for its outward symbols and forms. He had also a profoundly religious sense, sometimes approaching mysticism. But it will be as impossible to prove that he was a Christian as to prove that he was not, and historians and biographers will divide upon this question, as they are divided now, according to their own personal beliefs or disbeliefs.—New York Tribune.

Cleansing Casks.

The inquiry is often made of us by farmers, brewers, beef and pork packers, etc., regarding the best method of deodorizing and cleansing old cider and beer barrels, musty cans, bottles, etc. Chemistry furnishes an agent in the permanganate potassa which fully meets this want. A pint of the permanganate turned into the most musty, filthy cider or beer cask, and rinsed about a few moments, will entirely decompose all fungoid growths and fermenting matter, and render the cask as sweet as those that are new. The deodorizing, disinfecting power of the permanganate, holding as it does five equivalents of oxygen, is wonderful; it will even deodorize carbolic acid. The only way to remove immediately the odor of carbolic acid from the hands, is to immerse them in the liquid permanganate.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

Tweed's Daughter's Wedding—A Gorgeous Event, and its Sequel.

Now that the statesman Tweed has assumed his position in a public institution in a healthy locality in the vicinity of New York, while some of his disciples in statesmanship have gone into country quarters for the present, says a contemporary, it is rather interesting to read over the story of his daughter's marriage, two years ago last June. The ceremony took place in Trinity chapel, and crowds assembled to gaze upon the magnificence of the affair. At Tweed's residence, the halls, stairways, parlors and chambers were crowded with most ingenious arrangements of the most expensive exotics. The presents filled an entire room and were described as follows:

"There were forty silver sets, any one of which would have attracted a crowd if placed in a jeweler's window, and one single one contained two hundred and forty separate pieces. Mr. James Fisk, Jr., sent a frosted silver contrivance representing an iceberg, evidently intended to hold ice cream or some other equally frigid substance. The association was beautifully sustained by the presence of arctic bears reposing on the icicle handles of the bowl and climbing up the spoons. Singularly enough, Mr. Fisk displayed the same taste as Superintendent Kelso, and their offerings were exact duplicates. Among the names on the silver were Shandley, Norton, Witthaus, Carnochan, Maginnis, and many others. There were forty pieces of jewelry, of which fifteen were diamond sets. A single one of the latter is known to have cost $45,000. It contained diamonds as big as filberts. A cross of eleven diamonds, pea size, bore the name of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Genet as donors. A pin of sixty diamonds, representing a sickle and sheaves of wheat, was the gift of J. H. Ingersoll. Peter B. Sweeny's name appeared on diamond bracelets of fabulous magnificence. Cornelius Corson gave a ring with a tiny watch as the seal. Bronzes, thread lace, cashmere shawls, rare pictures, everything that could be conceived of which is rich and costly, filled the room with splendor.

The trousseau of the bride included fourteen dresses varying in price from $300 to $3,200 each, though her wedding dress of white gros grain cost $1,000, to which $4,000 worth of point lace was added. A black silk walking suit was decorated with three hundred and eighty-two bows, and others were elaborated correspondingly. It was a grand wedding even among the grand weddings of the great city; but now this Tweed is jailed, and there are none so poor as to do him reverence.

The Swedes and Norwegians.

A correspondent of the Scientific American writes that "never could more dissimilar nations be united under one government than Norway and Sweden. Norway clings with the most absurd tenacity to old things and old ways of doing them, while Sweden is ready to advance with the rest of the world. The difference appears strikingly on the line of railroad between Christiana and Stockholm. The road is about 400 miles long, of which, say, 100 are in Norway and 300 in Sweden. The time for express trains is about twenty hours. Of this something like 8 hours is taken for the Norwegian 100 miles, leaving 12 hours—really only 11 hours—for the Swedish 300 miles, or 12 miles against 25 miles per hour. But most of the travel in Norway is by the very old fashion of carioles and post-horses, the principal roads—under Government care—being in good order and the speed averaging, with push, six or seven miles per hour. The American Consul in Christiana—which is the only active part of Norway—is trying hard to get our mowers and reapers into use there, though thus far with indifferent success. In Sweden these things are being taken hold of with something like freedom.

A Reminiscence of Gov. Allen.

A friend informs us that when he was a boy at college he had a room-mate from the State of Ohio. He was fond of speaking of the celebrities of his native State, and Senator Allen was one of the chosen heroes. He related to our friend the following incident, which may prove interesting at this day. The Senator was addressing a large audience in the native town of our informant. When about half through his speech, after making some positive assertion, a stentorian voice cried out,—

"That's a lie, sir!"

The Senator paused a moment, and then asked,—

"What is your name, sir!"

The answer was given,—

"My name is Vass."

The Senator responded,—

"I move the V be stricken from that man's name. All you in favor of it, say ay."

And—a hundred voices cried out, "Ay."

"Now," said the Senator, "you are voted an ass."

A Doubting Daughter.

There is a young lady in this city who is having more than her share of trouble—perhaps, because she is having more than her share of beaux. A day or two ago one of her admirers called to spend the evening. Shortly after the young folks got nicely located, the girl's mother dropped into the parlor and soon fell to telling a long yarn. She sat directly in front of the young couple, and the daughter discovered that her mother's dress was open in front, and immediately inaugurated a series of winks and motions in hopes of attracting the old lady's attention to the fact. But the mother thought the daughter was doubting her story, and said: "You may wink as much as you please, but every word is true." The daughter "lit out," and the old lady finished her story.—Sioux City Journal.

ATHENS, Ga., has a paper named Cat, with the motto, "I can scratch."

A PSALM FOR NEW YEAR'S EVE.

A friend stands at the door;
  In either tight-closed hand
Hiding rich gifts, three hundred and three-score;
  Waiting to strew them daily o'er the land
Even as seed the sower.
  Each drop, he treads it in and passes by;
  It cannot be made fruitful till it die.

O, good New Year, we clasp
  This warm shut hand of thine!
Loosing forever, with half sigh, half grasp,
  That which from ours falls like dead fingers' twine:
Aye, whether fierce its grasp
  Has been, or gentle, having been, we know
  That it was blessed; let the Old Year go.

O, New Year, teach us faith!
  The road of life is hard;
When our feet bleed, and scourging winds us soothe,
  Point thou to Him whose visage was more marred
Than any man's; who saith,
  "Make straight paths for your feet"—and to the oppressed—
  "Come ye to me, and I will give you rest."

Yet hang some lamp-like hope
  Above this unknown way,
Kind Year, to give our spirits freer scope,
  And our hands strength to work while it is day.
But if that way must slope
  Tombward, O, bring before our fading eyes
  The lamp of life, the Hope that never dies!

Comfort our souls with love—
  Love of all human kind;
Love special, close—in which, like sheltered dove,
  Each weary heart its own safe nest may find;
And love that turns above
  Adoringly; contented to resign
  All loves, if need be, for the Love Divine.

Friend, come thou like a friend,
  And whether bright thy face,
Or dim with clouds we cannot comprehend—
  We'll hold our patient hands, each in his place,
And trust thee to the end:
  Knowing thou leadest onward to those spheres
  Where there are neither days, nor months, nor years.

Humorous.

THE best remedy for mercantile troubles—A liberal use of printer's ink.

WHY is a poker like an angry word? Because it stirs up a smouldering fire.

WHAT is that which no one wishes to have and no one wishes to lose? A bald head.

WHEN is an encampment most likely to burn well? When the tents are pitched.

THE most sentimental exercise yet known is said to be woman's eyes swimming in tears.

INCREDIBLE as it may seem, many of the richest planters in Jamaica live on coffee grounds.

WHY is a solar eclipse like a woman whipping her boy? Because it's a hiding of the sun.

WHEN does mortification ensue? When you pop the question and are answered "No!"

WHY is blind-man's-buff like sympathy? Because it is a fellow feeling for a fellow-creature.

"What is your name, little girl?" "Minnie." "Minnie what?" "Minnie Don't; that's what mamma calls me."

MRS. JENKINS complained in the evening that the turkey she had eaten didn't sit well. "Probably," said Jenkins, "it was not a hen turkey. "He got a glass of water in his face.

"Who cut your clothes, Tommy?" asked a visitor of a curiously ragged boy. "Well," said he ingenuously, "ma cuts my pants, and pa cuts my jackets."

A FATHER, in consoling his daughter, who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child; you will never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow, "but I'll do my best!" The father felt comforted.

A PREACHER took up a collection on Sunday, and found, when his hat was returned, that there wasn't a penny in it. "I thank my God," said he, turning the hat upside down and tapping the crown of it with his hand, "that I have got my hat back from this congregation."

"Do you go to school now, Charlie?" "Yes, sir; I had a fight to-day, too." "You had? Which whipped?" "Oh, I got whipped," he replied with great frankness. "Was the other boy bigger than you?" "No, he was littler." "Well, how came you to let a littler boy whip you?" "Oh, you see he was madder nor I was."

Tea.

The extent to which teas are adulterated may be inferred from the fact that out of twenty samples analyzed in London, only one was found free from frauds. The leaves of other plants are largely used, and plumbago, iron filings and sand were found in it to give weight to the tea. Altogether, the investigation revealed a condition of things by no means calculated to "whet the appetite" for tea. It is an old saying that if people would relish a meal, they must keep away from the kitchen. So with tea; if people would enjoy its flavor and stimulating effects, they must not too closely scrutinize the material which it is composed of.

THE steady increase in the number of patents issued at Washington, year after year, shows the inventive spirit which is inherent in the breast of every genuine Yankee. From 1836 to the present time, no less than 40,000 patents have been granted by the United States. It requires 100 examiners and 400 clerks to perform the duties of the bureau, and the fees collected for the past year amounted to $701,627, while the expenses were only $699,450. Of course, but few of the patents ever make the fortune of the inventor; but it is estimated that one-half are, to a certain extent, remunerative, and a small proportion have proved of more profit than mines of gold to their owners.

THE foreign dispatches have several times of late conveyed intimations of an impending famine in Bengal, but have contained no details. The proceedings of a recent meeting held in London to supply this want. The population of Bengal numbers 60,000,000, and, according to the lowest estimate, 24,000,000 are suffering, and these fully one-fourth will have to be relieved by Government aid. To keep life in this number of people for six months will require 6,500,000 tons of rice, requiring an outlay of $20,000,000 by the Government.

AN Indiana boarding-house keeper has a horse-pistol attachment to his hash, and any man who don't like it is a liar.

Rural Justice.

The place was Waupaca, Wis., and the time was last Friday. A shoemaker, in a fit of absent-mindedness, sold a pair of shoes which had been left with him for repairs. Thereupon the owner of the shoes sued the careless Crispin for their value. The shoe-owner's lawyer was Monagan, and the shoemaker's lawyer was Morgan. The trial came on. The shoemaker was on the stand, but his answers did not suit Monagan. Did he go to taking exceptions and appealing to the Court and making out a long list of grievances, so that he could frame a motion for appeal and keep the shoemaker and shoe-owner in hot water for months to come, as Mr. Scammon or any other city litigant, for instance, would have done? Not at all. He settled the matter in three words—carelessly remarking to the shoemaker that he was a liar. The shoemaker thereupon quietly referred the remark to his counsel, Morgan, for advice. Morgan, instead of cumbering up the case with suits for slander or libel, acted for his client immediately by knocking Monagan down and pounding him a little. Now, observe the impartial manner in which justice is administered in Waupaca. The Sheriff did not interfere, deciding that he had no jurisdiction. Some of the jury wanted to interfere, but the rest would not let them, declaring that they were not trying that case. After Morgan and Monagan were satisfied, the Court took official notice of the vi et armis turn affairs had taken, by informing Monagan that it served him right, and ordered the case to proceed. At the close of the case, the jury refused to deliver their verdict until their fees were paid, and, the money not being forthcoming, the foreman walked off with the verdict in his pocket. Why shouldn't he? Of course such a proceeding would not do in Chicago, for if juries refused to give verdicts here until they got their fees, we should never have any verdicts. But in Waupaca, where justice is administered on basic principles, such a proceeding was eminently correct. The Waupaca jury was employed to procure a verdict, for which they were to be paid in fees. They were not obliged to deliver the article they had for sale unless the cash was forthcoming, and that foreman only vindicated the inalienable right of Meum and Tuum when he walked off with the verdict. The next day after the trial, Monagan met the shoemaker on the street. Morgan, the shoemaker's counsel, as we have said, had already given Monagan a beating. Monagan, therefore, of course, owed somebody else a beating. It could not be Morgan, because Morgan was not acting for himself, but for the shoemaker. The shoemaker was the legitimate creditor, and, therefore, Morgan settled the debt by pounding the shoemaker.

Up to this point the reader will observe that exact justice has been meted out without any unnecessary legal routine or red tape, and without the tedious delays which characterize the practice of law in the cities. The basis was simple, abstract justice without reference to Coke, Blackstone, or Lyttelton, or the practice of lawyers in other States. In Waupaca, it is immaterial what has been done to defaulting shoemakers elsewhere. And yet justice is not wholly satisfied. The shoe-owner hasn't got his shoes back, but we have no doubt that Waupaca will find some way of getting them, and the shoemaker owes somebody a beating, although it is not clear to whom he owes it. Most probably Waupaca will decide it is the owner of the shoes who has made the shoemaker all this trouble. To complete this cheerful picture of rural justice in its virgin purity, it only remains for the Court to whale the foreman who walked off with the verdict, and for the foreman to clean out the County Treasurer for not paying for the verdict. On the whole, the Waupaca way of doing things has its virtues. It is simple, elementary, and quick, and has no nonsense about it. Such a suit in Chicago would have lasted for years, and before it came to a termination would have been so full of declarations, affidavits, rejoinders, surrebutters, and supersedeases, that no one could tell what it was about originally, or whether there was ever a pair of shoes or shoe or a shoemaker in it at all.—Chicago Tribune.

Stupid Servant Girls.

Krickbaum read somewhere that Dio Lewis advised men with a tendency to become bald to have holes punched in the top of their hats. And so when Krickbaum purchased his new winter hat he had a small sheet-iron plate perforated with large holes and set in the crown. That was on Tuesday. On Wednesday Mrs. Krickbaum got a new hired girl, who saw the hat on the chair in the dining-room, and imagining it to be a patent colander of some new kind, she removed it to the kitchen. When Mrs. Krickbaum came down stairs at noon to see how dinner was getting on, she found the girl straining boiled cabbage through the sheet-iron ventilator in Krickbaum's high hat, and swearing in the Ballybuhdeen dialect because the holes were so big and the colander so limber. That night when Krickbaum wanted to start for the lodge he began to hunt for his hat, while Mrs. Krickbaum sat still and trembling. But when he became exasperated and commenced to pick up the chairs and jam them down hard so as to relieve his feelings, she began to cry, and relieved the horrible truth to him. It may have been done in quicker time, but we doubt it. We say that there may have been in former ages some hired girl who packed her trunk and pelted down-stairs, and was hustled into the street quicker than Mrs. Krickbaum's hired girl when Krickbaum began to expostulate with her, but the fact has not been proved. He wears an unperforated hat now, and will probably be entirely bald by New Year's.

Heat and Disease.

During the reheating of the furnaces of an iron establishment in England, says the British Journal of Science, the men worked when the thermometer, placed so as not to be influenced by the radiation of heat from the open doors, marked 120 degrees. In the Bessemer pits, the men continue a kind of labor, requiring great muscular effort, at 140 degrees. In some of the operations of glass-making, the ordinary summer working temperature is considerably over 100, and the radiant heat to which the workmen are subjected far exceeds 212 degrees. In a Turkish bath, the shampooers continue four or five hours at a time in a moist atmosphere at temperatures ranging from 105 to 110 degrees. In enamel works, men labor daily in a heat of over 300 degrees. On the Red sea steamers, the temperature of the stoke-hole is 145 degrees. And yet in none of these cases does any special form or type of disease develop itself.

CAST-IRON STOVES.—Scientists assert that cast-iron stoves are very injurious to health, and cite several instances in support of the charge. During an epidemic which prevailed in Savoy, Dr. Carret, one of the physicians in the Hotel Dieu, in Chambery, observed that all the inhabitants who were affected by it used cast-iron stoves, which had recently been imported into the country. On the other hand he observed that all those who used other kinds of stoves or adopted other modes of firing escaped the disease. Another circumstance bearing on the same interesting question occurred in the Lyceum of Chambery, where an epidemic of typhoid fever broke out. This outbreak is regarded by Dr. Carret as having been influenced or superinduced by a large cast-iron stove in the dormitory of that establishment.

TEA is now extensively raised in Hindostan, the exports to England in 1872 exceeding 16,000,000 of pounds. The Indian teas are of rare flavor, and are used by English shopkeepers to mix with the Chinese. The culture in India is now carried on by joint stock companies, which are now paying from 10 to 20 per cent. dividends.

DR. WALKER'S VEGETABLE VINEGAR BITTERS.—Business men, worn by care and sedentary habits, often suffer from constipation of the bowels, until the evil consequences of such a condition are realized in extreme debility, nervousness and prostration of the vital energies of the system. And it may be safely asserted that a majority of the female sex are little better than invalids, from the same cause; but by using DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, this natural aperient and tonic brings back the vigor and buoyancy of health, happiness and beauty. Pure blood is essential to sound health and long life. No chronic disease, sores, ulcers, skin eruptions, glandulous swellings, discharges from the ear, sore eyes, sores or cankers in the mouth, will ever appear if the blood is pure. To secure this take DR. WALKER'S VEGETABLE VINEGAR BITTERS. It is the great Blood Purifier and Life-Giving Principle, increasing the power of digestion, and exciting the absorbents into healthy action, whereby all impurities of the system are carried off. 23

DRYING EGGS FOR USE.—We don't know where the following originated, but give it for what it may be worth to the reader: The eggs are beaten to uniform consistency, and spread out in thin cakes on batter plates. This dries them into a paste, which is to be packed in close cans and sealed. When required for use, the paste can be dissolved in water, and beaten to a foam like fresh eggs. It is said that eggs can be preserved for years in this way, and retain their flavor.

Wood's Household Magazine.

Wood's Household Magazine for January contains a lavish supply of first-rate articles. It is now in its fourteenth volume, and every year has increased its popularity and added new friends to its large list of admirers. Though retaining its old name, it has not the slightest connection with its former proprietor, but has for many months been the exclusive property of Mr. S. E. Shutes, its present publisher. H. V. Osborne (Tenoroon) still continues as its editor, and is the only person employed in that capacity—giving to the magazine not a careless supervision, but direct personal attention in every department. The magazine is improving constantly, and is splendidly adapted to the members of the household. The present number contains three engravings and other good things in proportion.

WANTED TO BE HEARD FROM.—If anybody has ever used the thorough and scientific course of treatment recommended by the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy for the cure of Catarrh, and has not been perfectly cured, the proprietor, Dr. R. V. Pierce, would like to hear from that person, and by addressing him at the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., such person, if there be one, will hear of something to his or her advantage, as the Doctor is in earnest when he offers $500 reward for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure, and is perfectly able to pay it if he fails in a single case, as any one may ascertain upon inquiry. The thorough course of treatment referred to and recommended by Dr. Pierce consists in the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, which is the only means by which the fluid can be carried high up and applied to all parts of the nasal passages and the chambers connected therewith in which ulcers exist, and from which the discharge proceeds. In addition to this thorough application of the Remedy, which should always be used warm, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be taken earnestly as constitutional treatment, without which few cases can be cured, as the disease is always constitutional and must be treated accordingly. This treatment has no unpleasant features about it, and has the advantage of never driving the disease to the lungs, as there is danger of doing by the use of strong, irritating snuffs of poisonous solutions.

PLAIN FACTS.

FRANKFORT, Mich., Sept. 13, 1873.

A year ago I had a bad cough from the Catarrh which had got in my throat. I tried a good many things, but got nothing to do me any good until I used your Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They cured me in three months, for which I am very thankful. AMOS FISHER.

THE SECRET.—Those who prize a beautiful head of hair (and we know our lady friends all do), will thank us for a few words on the invaluable qualities of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR as a dressing. In our own case it heals a humor, keeps the head free from dandruff and scurf, stops the tendency of our hair to fall, and heightens its beauty. A slight touching with it removes the coarse and dry appearance which neglected hair puts on, imparts a rich gloss, and makes us presentable in the most fashionable company. Such rare qualifications, presented in a single preparation, create for it an enduring value; but add to these the faculty of restoring to gray locks their youthful color, and maintaining our good looks with so small an expenditure of time and attention, and you stamp it prime favorite with the public, and insure its permanent and enduring popularity.—*Huntsville (Ala.) The Chicago Illustrated Magazine.

Hitherto the Aldine Magazine, of New York, has enjoyed the distinction of being the handsomest periodical in the country, if not in the world; but it has encountered a rival in the Chicago Illustrated Magazine. The latter publication is, beyond all question, the most elegantly printed illustrated magazine that has ever been issued in the West, or anywhere else, with the exception, perhaps, of the publication above referred to, and we pronounce it equal in every respect to that splendid work of art. Higher praise than this it is impossible to bestow; for every one who has ever seen the Aldine has seen the perfection of typographic art. The same is true of the Chicago Illustrated Magazine. If there is any superiority it belongs to the latter; and, being a Western enterprise, it commends itself directly to Western readers. It is published by the American Publishing Company, of Chicago, at the extremely low price of $2.50 a year. A volume of this splendid magazine will make a book of greater literary and artistic excellence than can be bought for many times the subscription price. Address THOMAS J. NEWMAN, Room 27, Tribune Building, Chicago.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR

To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens and faded or gray hair resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the VIGOR is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

Kidney and Bladder Complaints,

Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the small of the Back and along the Loins.

THE ADJUSTABLE THRESHOLD.

DESCRIPTION.—The above engraving represents our Adjustable Threshold (broken at one end), which is acknowledged by all to be the only invention yet produced that will positively exclude rain, cold, dust, snow, etc., from coming under the door. The parts marked A are made of hard wood, and are united by a strip of heavy pure rubber, marked B in the engraving. The rubber is let into the wood pieces, as will be observed in the sectional view above, and is securely fastened there, thus forming a rubber arch in the center. When the threshold is in its place, the rubber arch presses gently on the bottom of the door when closed, across its entire width, completely excluding rain, cold, dust, etc. Its durability has been tested for years, and we will guarantee it to outwear any ordinary wooden threshold. It is impossible for it to get out of order, is easily swept over, and is, in short, the most durable, simple, and effectual weather protector that has yet been invented. Not only so, but it is the only PATENT ADJUSTABLE THRESHOLD ever invented, and has no competitor in the known world.

PRICES.

For Single Door (width two feet six inches to three feet), $1.50 each. For Double Door (width four feet six inches to five feet), $2.50 each.

☞ They will save their cost in one season, in the consumption of fuel.

Ask for them at the Hardware stores; or we will send free of expense, anywhere, on receipt of the price.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Jan. 8, 1874.

The Virginius was undoubtedly scuttled by the Spanish authorities in Cuba before she was surrendered to the United States Government.

Williams has hopes now. The "vindication" dodge is being worked by the President, and the opposition is oozing out. Oliver is willing?

The English members of the Virginius survivors will be sent to Liverpool from New York. As yet Johannes Taurus has not pawed up the ground to any great extent about the massacre.

A Columbus, Ohio, dispatch says that the strike of the engineers is over, and that all who can obtain work have secured it. The end came about very quietly and peacefully, and no one can tell just how it passed away.

In view of the bad state of the nation's finances, and the consequent necessity of a retrenchment of all appropriations, it is understood that a movement will be made during the present session to organise a new North Polar expedition.

The National debt was increased only about nine million dollars in December. They are getting economical in Washington. But if we run behind-hand nine millions a month, how long will it take us to pay our National debt? We have been carrying on business at that rate for sixty days.

It is established by vouchers in the Department of Justice that on January 27, 1872, Attorney-General Williams took $1,600 from the contingent fund of the department to pay for a landaulet for his wife; and that on July 29, 1872, he took $750 to pay for a pair of carriage horses to draw this landaulet. In July, also, he purchased a pair of stitched pole straps, a gold slip buckle, and a new silk lining for the landaulet, and had it varnished and put other expenses upon it amounting in all to $211.13. In November and in December the same carriage was repaired again at the cost of the Department of Justice, out of whose contingent fund $800 was taken for these repairs. It is also alleged that the same Attorney-General has bought with $500 from the money of the contingent fund, but for his private house, one sidewall glass and one base table with white marble top. Moreover, George Wilkenson is borne on the rolls of the Department as a temporary clerk at $70 a month, and Charles W. Lee as a messenger at $60 a month, both of them being domestic servants of the Attorney-General, and performing no service whatever for the Department of Justice by which they are paid.

This man Williams has been nominated by President Grant for Chief Justice of the United States. Since his nomination these facts have been developed in the course of investigations by Senator Edmunds' Judiciary Committee. Now what will President Grant do about it? Will he withdraw the nomination? If he does this, he will express in an emphatic manner his official disapprobation of such petty larceny committed by high officials. If he does not, he will declare that in his opinion stealing of this sort does not disqualify the thief for the highest honors of the Republic.

The Reassembling of Congress.

Congress met again last Monday, and entered upon the sixth week of the session. During this time the two Houses have actually been at work only thirteen or fourteen days. What have they done?

In the first place, the Senators and Representatives have drawn from the Treasury and put in their pockets, in the shape of salaries for these thirteen or fourteen days' work, the sum of $300,000.

The Senate has confirmed the appointment of Shepherd for Governor of the District of Columbia. Shepherd is the head of a Ring in Washington, as corrupt and infamous as was the Tammany Ring in the high noon of Tweedism. The only other thing of any moment done by the Senate was a long debate over the proposition whether the Kellogg and Casey usurpation in Louisiana should continue to be maintained at the point of the bayonet for the benefit of a thieving gang of carpet-baggers, the sediment of the war and the scum of reconstruction.

The House has done even less than the Senate, but what little it has done, has sunk it into deeper disrepute. We refer, of course, to the vulgar, unseemly wrangle over the repeal of the salary swindle, which resulted in sending to the Senate a bill, fraudulent in its chief features, driven through the House by the bullying of its supporters, and insulting to a people who demanded that the salary law of last winter be blotted out, radically and wholly, both the President's pay and the pay of Congress being brought back to the old figures.

And this is the sum total of all that Congress has done. The Republican party has overwhelming majorities in both Houses. Its malignant enemies can wish it nothing worse than that Congress should go on with business through the session in the style it has commenced.

TEAS

Our best Tea we still keep at the reduction of 15 cents per pound. We have all other grades, from 30 cents per pound up. Our 1 10 is the best in the market, and equal to any Tea sold at 50 cents more. Our only secret in selling Teas so much lower than other houses is that our immense sales of two and three chests a day enable us to purchase direct from Importers, and we, selling direct to the cusumer, our customers save the profit of the speculator, and wholesale merchant, which is at least 10 to 20 cents per pound.

Township Institutes.

FAIRFIELD TOWNSHIP.

According to notice given by Geo. W. Downs, trustee of Fairfield township, the teachers met at the school house in Fairfield Center on Saturday, December 20th, at ten o'clock. Mr. Downs called the meeting to order, and, after a few remarks, requested Mr. A. Reynolds to act as chairman of the institute for that day. Sarah Hornsby was also elected as Secretary pro tem. The work, then began, first by a short lecture on reading, by Mr. Chilcoat, followed by a general discussion as to the best manner of teaching that branch. The discussion was spirited and continued about forty minutes. After this, several remarks were made on physiology. Recess of one hour. At one o'clock, P. M., the meeting was again called to order, and the subject of arithmetic introduced. Several points were discussed and the difference between mental and practical arithmetic explained. After this, a short recitation in grammar, conducted by Mr. Huffman, in which he explained how case may be easily determined, and also the difference between a proper and a common noun. Writing was then introduced by Mr. Glasgo, in an interesting and profitable manner. This was followed by a general discussion on history and geography, which lasted for some time. After this, a short recitation in orthography, conducted by Mr. Reinoehl. The teachers were nearly all present, and also quite a number of visitors. All seemed to be much interested in the work. The success of the meeting tells us that we have a quorum of teachers who are zealous in the advancement of education. The institute adjourned to meet at the same place on the third Saturday in January, 1874. An evening session is also to be held.

SARAH HORNSBY, Secretary.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

Pursuant to notice given by Mr. Waterman, trustee of Franklin township, the teachers met at school house No. 5 on Saturday, January 3rd, 1874.

Meeting was called to order by Mr. Waterman. J. S. Jackman was appointed President, Richard Baxter Vice President and Miss Josie Gillett Secretary. J. W. McCurdy, R. Sawyer and Wm. Dirrim were appointed to act as executive committee, their duties being to prepare a programme and assign exercises to the different teachers. Richard Baxter was appointed critic.

A recitation in reading was then conducted by Mr. Thurston, after which the meeting adjourned for noon recess.

Afternoon session—Recitation in arithmetic and best method of teaching it in primary classes, conducted by J. M. Noragon. Subject of arithmetic in advanced classes was then taken up by J. A. Barns, and discussed at some length. Each recitation was followed by discussion of the subject and different methods of teaching it. Business followed, after which a short address by Mr. Barns on the subject of text books. Meeting adjourned to meet in two weeks at the same place. Such was the interest taken that many wished to hold an evening session, but bad roads made it necessary to adjourn before night. Total attendance 30, about 25 being teachers.

J. S. JACKMAN, President.

JOSIE GILLETT, secretary.

The efforts of the County Board to secure uniformity in our text-books is meeting with very gratifying success. In most of the schools the change is already complete, and in others preparations are going forward to make the change in a few days. Still we find now and then a school that hesitates, either from a mistaken view of their own interests, or from a want of proper action on the part of the teacher. It is to be hoped that none will forget that these changes were made to avoid the expense and trouble of too frequent changes in text-books, and to save the time of teachers who have often been obliged to hear extra recitations each day on account of having in the school several different books on the same subject. The money required to purchase these extra books, and to pay for the time wasted in extra recitations, will more than pay for all the changes made by the County Board, and a great deal will thus be saved. The new books can now be had at two thirds of the retail price, or if the old books are exchanged, one-half of the retail price only. All should take advantage of this arrangement, as the time for exchange at the reduced rates will expire in a few weeks.

The Northern Indiana Teacher, published at South Bend, by Henry A. Ford, has just made its appearance. Many of our teachers will, this week, receive sample copies, and we hope those who can do so will subscribe for it. Judging by the first number, it will be a live journal, and such as Northern Indiana has long needed.

A wise man has said, "it is better to meet danger than to wait for it." Let hen pecked husbands take heed.

The Hub and Spoke factory is rushing business lively, notwithstanding the hard times.

A Massachusetts man has applied for a patent for a churn "that will make fresh butter from sour cream."

Only one person was dissatisfied with the entertainment last week, and thought it needed him to make it a success.

Mr. Bowers is busy as a bee in his new field of labor in the Eagle Mills, and we have no fear of his entire success.

A stranger overheard a conversation, wherein several old fogies were talking about this person and that person when he was heard to remark, "No wonder this town prospers slow."

A little girl asked her mother what that Jackass was doing in the audience, at the theater last week, and wanted to know when they was going to lead him on the stage, and if he was as homely as the noise he made?

A team of horses got quite a start the other day, on Main, and would have broke some "wagon legs or horses wheels' if aid had'nt been rendered.

We hear the bricklayers say that several new dwellings will be erected in the spring in Ensley's new addition, near the Eel River road.

Billy Edgerton has added to his already commodious barber shop, several fine and beautiful pictures. He has good taste and lots of enterprise.

I. M. Thomas will sell the old building known as school house No. 5 in this township, on next Saturday at 10 o'clock.—Sale to take place at the building.

We have had quite a number of calls from our friends in our new office, all of whom share with us in the pride of a neat clean and tasty office.

Prepare for the next entertainment by the Amateur Dramatic Company. They will present, the next time, the splendid piece entitled "Old Honesty."

Though a large demand was made upon the shoe store of Vordermark & Sons during the holidays, yet they manage to keep in a good stock by receiving almost daily new goods of the latest patterns.

The supper for the Old Folks' Hop was given at the Swineford House, and a splendid one it was. Our visitors regarded it as the best they ever engaged. Mr. S. and his excellent lady are receiving many flattering compliments.

The Band furnished us splendid music on Christmas and New Years. Under the management of our popular friend J. W. McKay, the boys are learning rapidly, and we look for an extra good band in a very short time.

The lower flouring mill is rushing business, and is kept busy with their large trade. Mr. S. Grosh is an experienced mechanic and since his connection with Mr. Tarney in the mill, they seem to prosper.

The Town and School Boards have purchased the Eldridge lot just west of the school house, containing 5 acres, for $2,000. This will make an admirable sight for a new school building, if we ever get ready to build one.

The Dramatic entertainment drew out a large audience, and everybody seemed to be pleased. The lady talent of the company did excellent and so did the boys.—Another programme will be presented in a few days.

The town of Auburn has been sued.—Robt Bales had a contract for digging a ditch in the west end of town, and he claims a balance of $175. The case will come before Justice Wolf at Waterloo.—The trial will come off to-morrow.

W. W. Humes lost a little girl last Monday from croup. She was taken with it in the forenoon and died in the afternoon. These sudden deaths are terrible and tear the heart with an anguish not to be conceived.

An exchange speaks of an old rooster as "a large, masculine chicken with an elongated tail." He would probably call an old sitting hen "a venerable specimen of feminine poultry with an intuitive fondness for brooding over the products of her labor.

A correspondent says. "Postal cards are good. They learn us to condense. I wish sermons had to go through the same process. I like things boiled down."—Correct, Mr. correspondent. Several husbands, in this place, want their wives to keep the milliner's bill on a postal.

Our little neighbor down on the Saginaw road, known as St. Johns is getting out of the woods, and we should not be surprised to see a prosperous little town there in a short time. Improvements are being made that will soon make it the town of the south.

Miss Minnie S. Sandoe is now canvassing for a very fine bible, containing many new features not found in other publications of this class. The prices range from $6 to $20 and those in need of a family bible cannot do better than to give Miss S. their order.

We are in receipt of a very handsome carriers address from the Fort Wayne Sentinel. The author's name is not appended but to judge from the fine style in which it is written and the capital local hits we think our aimable friend E. L. Chittenden Esq., of that city was around when it was written.

Says an old bachelor: "The nicest thing in boots is a pretty foot." That depends upon what kind of a boot the pretty foot is in. Half the shoes sold now-a days don't improve a pretty foot much. The kind that Vordermark & Sons sell at their store, in Odd Fellows' building always fit neatly, are of the latest style, and made of such material, that they do not get out of shape.

Uncle Davy Davis is organizing a society of his own on the following comprehensive preamble:

"We the undersigned do hereby pledge ourselves to each other that we will abstain from everything that we know will corrupt us, and will adopt the spirit of the new commandment which is, Love."

There are about 100 names signed already. Reference made to John 5th-39, Mathews 25th-44, Cor. 16th-22.

Mollie is a good enough girl, perhaps, but she is a flirt of the first water. She seems to be trifling with every fellow in Auburn, as they are forever singing the same in a very affectionate manner. You can hear "Mollie-as-a D-a-r-ling" wherever you go, from early morning till late at night, and it is getting a little stale.—Let it be made a penitentiary offense for anyone hereafter to sing that song.

The "little brown jug" is no doubt a very useful thing to have in a family.—During harvest it is very convenient to hold water, apple-jack or black-strap. It is also a very convenient thing in temperance families, it can be easily hid in the barn or a hollow stump. For these purposes it is a success, yet when it is hammered out of a piano for eight or ten hours each day it becomes rather a nuisance instead of being useful.

Yesterday morning about 2 o'clock, a serious, and probably fatal, shooting affray occurred at a bawdy house kept by Rebecca Woodward, on Eel river, in the eastern part of the city, in which Edward Keelin, an engineer on the Eel River road shot Samuel Biddler, a brakeman in the same employ. As near as we can ascertain the facts, both men were under the influence of liquor at the time, and getting into a wordy dispute, Keelin suddenly drew a revolver and fired at Biddler, the shot entering the left breast, near the nipple. Keelin is now in jail.—Logansport Pharos.

The Old Folks' Hop brought a fair sum of our best citizens from this and adjoining towns, and the occasion was replete with an enjoyment seldom realized at such gatherings. The greatest propriety was observed and the greatest decorum maintained throughout. Those who do not look upon dancing with much favor could not raise an objection as to the manner in which it was conducted. Without those noisy or unbecoming features, it passed of pleasantly and to the enjoyment of all. We are glad to know that we can have an occasion of this kind pass off in a respectable manner.

NEW COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—A new Commercial College has been organized at Ft. Wayne, under favorable auspices, for a thorough training in book-keeping business, penmanship, commercial arithmetic, &c. This ought to be regarded as a great advantage to neighboring towns as it is the only one this side of Indianapolis. It gives us the benefit of a good business education right at home. Our young folks can acquire something at these institutions that is of use every day. Send your children and let them learn something of business.

That eminent agriculturist, Thomas Corwin Mays, addressed the meeting, urging the formation of the grange—Press.

That eminent blatherskite, Charles Washington Baxter, is mistaken as we did not address the meeting or urge the formation of a grange. We answered an inquiry made of us, and was not there for the purpose of making an address. If Charles would address himself to telling to the truth he might be happy yet.

The Press says that we were never ordered by the Board to publish local notices and charge for them. Well, we presented a bill and it was promptly allowed by the Board, for local notices. We had special orders to give notices from time to time. The reason we suppose they paid us was evidently from the fact that we furnished the brains for both papers at that time. The Press would copy what we wrote about the fair and that is about all it did publish. The fact is our neighbor lacked enterprise, and we furnished it, and now our neighbor is jealous. We expect this of those only whose experience extends not beyond the limits of a one-horse country paper.

Crushing of monoplies; improving one another in the art of husbandry; pleasant social family relations—these are what we understand to be the object of the farmers' organization. Who opposes such organization? Surely, no person laying claim to a particle of common sense.—When the farming community prospers, we all reap some reward; when the farmers, on account of excessive frieght tariffs are obligud to give two bushels of grain in order to get one into market we do not wonder that they combine together for the purpose of putting down such mercenary corporations—we believe it to be their duty thus to combine. Above every thing else, the farmer should have reasonably cheap transportation. How to secure it, we presume is a hard question for the granges to solve. The vast extent of our country, the growing demand of foreign nations for the products of our soil the rapid development of our public domain, force the question upon us, and it is of vital importance to all sections of this country. The granges throughout the South and West, the combinations of labor throughout the land, and the movements of the people everywhere against the chartered monoplies that are now overshadowing the industrial interests of the nation—there are the indications of popular dissatisfaction, which must, soon er or later unless the cause is removed, tend to disturb the friendly relations which exist between capital and labor, and array the one in hostility against the other.

Totten's is the place to buy your hats and caps.

Pay Your Taxes.

The time for paying in the corporation tax will soon expire. If you do not want to pay a penalty, walk up and liquidate—Why would it not be a good idea to ascertain about how many town orders there are, not paid for want of funds. It seems to us our credit, as a town, is getting pretty low to allow our town orders to be on sale at the commercial value of 10 cents on the dollar. If we had just completed some great enterprise, such a condition would not be startling, but we have done no more than we out to have done in the way of improvements. We believe our citizens would be a little more prompt in paying their taxes, if they knew how things stood. Several years back no settlement was ever made with the Marshal and the Clerk and who have failed to make any report. We suggest to the Town Board that they investigate the matter, find out how much we are in debt make a showing and then commence on a new basis. This would not be difficult, and we don't think we ask too much to have it complied with.

Wanted—A new School House.

With the rapid strides yearly being made in adding, building up and beautifying our place, we must not loose sight of our public institutions. Our present school building lacks considerable of being up with the times and what will it be a few years hence

There is no disguising the fact that we must have a new school house, one that will meet all the demands of the place for years to come. Other places around us have erected buildings of this class that give them educational facilities which we do not possess. As an index to the enterprise, liberality and intelligence of any community nothing speaks more emphatically than a good, substantial school building. Here, in the great west, our thriving towns can only expect prominence after a suitable building, in harmony with its surroundings has been erected for educational purposes. Ought not our town authorities adopt some plan with a view to an early erection of a good building. The one we have may do us a year or two, but in the mean time let us get ready to build a new one.

Sir Edwin Landseer.

Of the great painter, Sir Edwin Landseer, the Imperial Biography of Art says: No English painter has been more popular and none—except Sir Thomas Lawrence—has received such immense sums for his works. For the copyright of some of his pictures he obtained £3,000 ($15,000) in addition to the original price of the picture. It was a master stroke when the publishers of the Christain at Work presented the triple combination of a magnificent chromo (about two by two and a half feet in size) of Landseer's great painting of dogs and sheep—"The Twins"—with Talmage as editor their paper, and Spurgeon as special contributor. They deserve success, and will get it. Write to them, at 102 Chambers street N. Y., for sample copies and terms. Agents wanted See their advertisement.

MR. EDITOR.—It is a good thing that something new has turned up to occupy the attention of the editors of the Waterloo Press, as they have worn the "bond case" thread bear in their endeavor to create a public opinion against the prosecution of the case, but I think the bondsmen may well exclaim, "deliver us from our friends!"

But now they have a new theme: The order of the Patrons of Husbandry, has come us to trouble their imaginations, and the said editors have undertaken the task of writing that order down; but I think it will take something more than their herculean power. It will hardly "down at their bidding."

But I set out to ask a question or two, and after they are answered I may have something more to say on the subject:

The editors of the Press say substantially (I can't quote their language exactly as I have not the paper before me) "that an open organization of farmers is much better than the secret grange. Now I will ask:

1st. How do they know, have they been there?

2nd. If they object on account of its being a secret order, will not the same objection apply to the Masons, Odd Fellows, etc?

3rd. Are the editors opposed to all secret orders?

I will now pause for a reply, and hope the said editors will reply promptly and fully so that we can tell precisely where they stand.

P. S.—This paper should hurry on its best licks, as there are organized, in this State, over 700 granges nearly all of which have been organized within one year.

Do Not! Do Not!! Do Not!!!

Do not employ such physicians as give you opium, laudanum, morphine or hydrate of chloral to stop your pain or cough, as those narcotics will not cure the disease, but only lull you to certain death with a false hope. But call or send to Dr. S. Clay Todd, No. 4 East Columbia street, Fort Wayne, who will give you immediate relief by removing the cause of the disease, and there will be no more pain, and you will rapidly recover your ullhealth and strength.

IT is said Senators Sumner and Schurz will unite with the Democrats in criticising unsparingly the conduct of the Administration in the Virginius affair....Judge Durell, of Louisiana, who is threatened with impeachment, has made a direct proposition to the Washington Administration to resign on condition that he be guaranteed a foreign mission. His proposal was rejected.

THE State Central Committee of the Anti-Monopolists of Iowa has called a convention, to meet at Des Moines on Feb. 25.

The Grange.

THERE are 12,000 Grangers in Nebraska, and the order is growing rapidly....State Master Brainerd, of Wisconsin, has just made a tour of the State, and reports the order in a flourishing condition, and the membership rapidly increasing.

General.

THE railroads operated by the Pennsylvania Company are seriously embarrassed by a strike of the engineers against a reduction of wages. There has also been a temporary interruption of the running of trains on the Illinois Central and Chicago and Northwestern roads from the same cause....The announcement has been made that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company will fund all the interest on its bonds up to and including January, 1875, into five-year 7 per cent. coupon-bonds, convertible into the company's first mortgage bonds at par, and into the land of the company at 25 per cent. off from regular prices.

As is customary at the close of navigation, the managers of the great east and west trunk lines, like the New York Central, Erie, and Pennsylvania roads, have met in New York and raised their freight rates....The strike of the locomotive engineers on the lines operated by the Pennsylvania Central has met with a sudden check in the shape of an official manifesto from the chief of the Brotherhood of Engineers, who announce that the strike has been inaugurated in direct and open violation to the rules, advises those who have quit work to resume again and prevent others from stopping, and warns them not to interfere with the operations of the railroads. The roads are gradually getting into running order again, and the presence of the militia at various points where the excitement is the greatest has had a good effect. Beyond the throwing of a train from the track near Cincinnati, one or two similar attempts in Indiana, and the shooting of a non-union engineer at Indianapolis, no serious violence has been used by the strikers.

JOHN J. PATTERSON, of New York, has sent a letter to Secretary Fish, declaring that he is the registered owner of the steamer Virginius. He protests against the opinion of the Attorney-General by which he and his vessel were condemned on ex parte testimony, furnished by Spain. He states that the Solicitor of the Treasury gave him a bill of sale of the steamer; thereupon he (Patterson) truly swore that he was the owner, and the Government gave her an American register, which has ever since protected her.

THE Virginius has been removed from the jurisdiction both of the United States and Spain by going to the bottom of the Atlantic, off the North Carolina coast, while in tow of the United States steamer Ossipee. As far as can be gathered from the reticent officers, the two vessels left the Dry Tortugas on the 19th ult. On the 20th a strong gale commenced, and the Virginius began leaking badly. On Christmas Day her condition was so critical that the Ossipee put into Frying Pan Shoals, off Cape Fear, with her charge and came to anchor. The next morning the Virginius signaled the Ossipee she was sinking. The crew were at once transferred to the latter, the hauser was cut, and the Virginius went to the bottom, leaving only a portion of her mainmast above water, which is all of the Virginius that is left to wrangle over.

Federal Statistics on Religious Affairs.

An Eastern journal compiles some statistics from the last three censuses made by the Federal Government, with reference to the various religious denominations. They are of great interest, as showing the increase in numbers, churches, and property of the various sects. They are valuable as serving to correct the exaggerated estimates published by the denominations themselves; and they are also of value to the student of social science, by enabling him to calculate the growth of the important influences involved in denominational progress. They are likewise of interest to religious people, because they enable them to measure accurately their own increase, and relieve them from the statistical errors of their denominational publications. It is a fact perfectly easy of demonstration that, were one to accept denominational statistics as the basis of a calculation, it would result in establishing that the total membership of the various sects very largely exceeds that of our total population. So far from it being the fact that the religious element approaches anywhere nearly to our total population, it forms, in truth, less than one-half of it.

A case in point is that of religious people known as Spiritualists. It has repeatedly been asserted by apparently intelligent Spiritualists that their membership in the United States exceeds 3,000,000; while the census of the Government shows that, in 1870, they numbered less than ten thousand. Again, Baptist statisticians claim a total membership of eight millions in this country, while the census demonstrates that these figures are very nearly double what they should be.

The summary of the census labors for the last three decades is as follows:

Denominations.	1850.	1860.	1870.
Methodist	4,345,519	6,258,799	6,528,209
Baptist	3,307,211	4,044,218	4,360,135

United Brethren	4,650	....	265,025
Total	13,836,943	18,731,227	21,195,546
All others	397,882	397,524	469,516
Grand total	14,234,825	19,128,751	21,665,062

Under the phrase "all others" are included Mormons, Shakers, Spiritualists, and unknown. Moreover, in the above summary there is no division among Baptists, Presbyterians, and so on, although the fact is that there are some seven or eight kinds of Baptists, of whom several scarcely deserve the name. The same is true of the ten or fifteen divisions of Presbyterians, and likewise of the denominational ramifications of Methodism. The above showing, therefore, is one which is in the highest degree complimentary to the sects named, in that it gives them credit for the strength of the regular denominations, and also credits to each one of these regular heads all the irregular and lateral organizations between which and the regular head there is but the least sympathy or similarity.

In order to exhibit the relative status of the various denominations, there is appended the per cent. of increase of the principal denominations within the last thirty years:

Methodist	4.29
Baptist	7.82
Presbyterian	5.16
Congregational	16.82
Roman Catholic	41.44
Episcopal	10.45
Lutheran	28.90
Christian	37.10
Friends	16.50
Universalist	50.63
Reformed Dutch	7.17
German Reformed	54.01
Unitarian	12.48
Jews	112.91
Swedenborgian	21.82
Total	11.81
All others	18.11
Grand total	13.26

An important feature of this branch of the census is the one that relates to church property. The leading denominations in respect to wealth are as follows:

Methodists	$69,854,000
Roman Catholics	60,985,000
Presbyterians	53,265,000
Baptists	41,608,000
Episcopal	36,514,000
Congregational	25,069,000

From this showing we learn that the amount of property owned per capita by each of the above is, in round numbers, as follows:

Methodists	$12
Roman Catholics	30
Presbyterians	26
Baptists	10
Congregational	20

A BOY two years old, son of Mrs. Desplaines of Randolph street, swallowed a thimble, and as soon as his mother ascertained the fact she called in the neighbors and fainted away. Some of the wise old women suggested standing the boy on his head; others talked of looping a string and fishing after the thimble as people go for a cork in a bottle, while others ran out after small boys, and sent them for doctors. Three doctors arrived simultaneously, and after engaging in an angry discussion over the respective merits of allopathy and homeopathy, they went off without doing anything, and another was sent for to attend the mother. Up to dark last night the boy had not complained, but in these hard times there's no knowing how anything will end.—Danbury News.

ACCORDING to the figures of the Agricultural Bureau at Washington, the average cash value of horses in the United States, in February of each year for the past six years, was as follows: 1868, $75.16; 1870, $81.38; 1871, $73.51; 1872, $73.37; 1873, $74.36. The average value of mules during the same period was: 1868, $77.61; 1869, $106.74; 1870, $109.01; 1871, $101.52; 1872, $64.82; 1873, $95.24. Horses, it will be seen, ruled highest in February, 1870, owing to there being a demand at the time for the hybrids to be used in ploughing the great cotton crop.

THE GRANGER'S SONG.

Come fellow Grangers, one and all—
Ye tillers of the soil—
Throw out your plow, and for awhile
Rest from your daily toil.

Come, let us in our granges meet,
And counsel with each other;
Establish unions of our craft
For helping one another.

Most other trades have organized
In unions for protection,
And if the farmers organize
There should be no objection.

Our produce is the staff of life;
On it all must rely;
Without the fruits of our toil
Both man and beast must die.

Without our produce but one year,
Our cause would be complete;
And every one would come to us,
And beg for bread and meat.

We have been badly used of late,
And may be so again—
Sorely oppressed by corporations,
And by soulless middle-men.

But every dog will have its day,
And every moon its changes;
And soon a mighty change will be Effected by the granges.

Not long can corporations rule,
To their own hearts' content;
Or middle-men forever take
Their thirty-three per cent.

And priests and preachers no more need
(Tho' they may think it odd)
To interfere on our behalf
Between us and our God.

We wish to deal direct and square
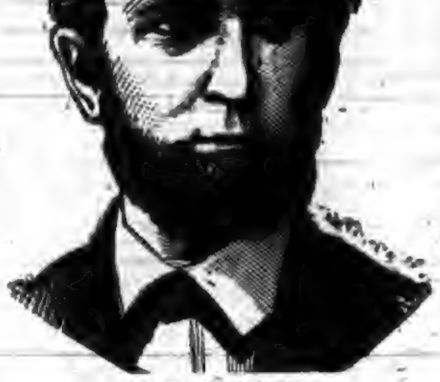
As near as we can;
And not allow ourselves to be
Fleeced by a middle-man.

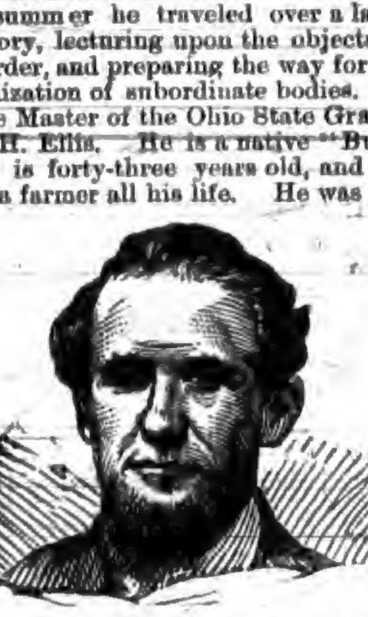
Patrons of Husbandry.

We give our readers, this week, portraits of three prominent "Grangers." The first is that of C. D. Beeman, of Waukon, Iowa, who is the General Deputy of the National Grange. He is one of the most industrious and indefatigable laborers in the cause. During last summer he traveled over a large territory, lecturing upon the objects of the order, and preparing the way for the organization of subordinate bodies.



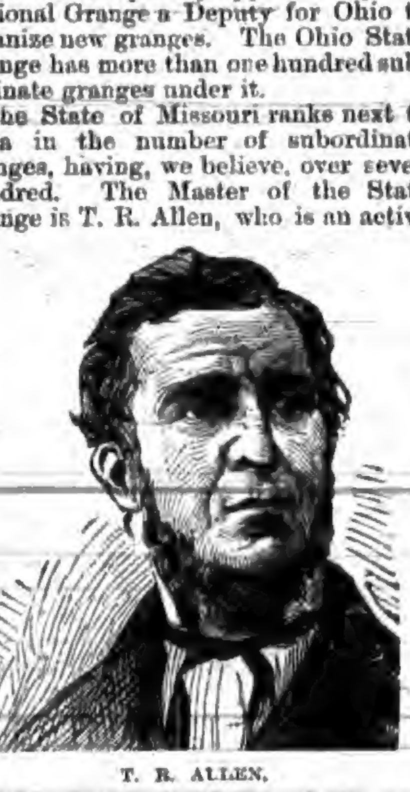
C. D. BEEMAN.

The Master of the Ohio State Grange is S. H. Ellis. He is a native "Buckeye," is forty-three years old, and has been a farmer all his life. He was one of fifty who organized the first grange in Ohio, when he was elected Master, and was subsequently appointed by the National Grange a Deputy for Ohio to organize new granges. The Ohio State Grange has more than one hundred subordinate granges under it.



S. H. ELLIS.

The State of Missouri ranks next to Iowa in the number of subordinate granges, having, we believe, over seven hundred. The Master of the State Grange is T. R. Allen, who is an active working Granger, and one of the most efficient members of the order. The rapid growth of the organization in the State is largely due to his influence, combined with that of his co-laborers.



T. R. ALLEN.

What the Patrons Propose to Do.

1. To secure for themselves, through the granges, social and educational advantages not otherwise attainable, and thereby, while improving their condition as a class, ennoble farm life, and render it attractive and desirable.

2. To give a full practical effect to the fraternal tie which unites them, in helping and protecting each other in case of sickness, bereavement, pecuniary misfortune, and want and danger of every kind.

3. To make themselves better and more successful farmers and planters, by means of the knowledge gained, the habits of industry and method established and the quickening of thought induced by intercourse and discussion.

4. To secure economies in the buying of implements, fertilizers, and family supplies, and in transportation, as well as increased profits in the sale of the products of their labor, without enhancing their cost to the consumer.

5. To entirely abolish the credit system, in their ordinary transactions, always buying and selling on a cash basis, both among themselves and in their dealings with the outside world.

6. To encourage co-operation in trade, in farming, and in other branches of industry, especially those most intimately connected with agriculture.

7. To promote the true unity of the republic, by drawing the best men and women of all parts of the country together in an organization which knows no sectional bounds or prejudices, or owes no party allegiance.—Rural Sun.

The Triumph of Independents.

The election of Newton Booth to the United States Senate by the California Legislature is the most important victory for independent politics and principles that has yet been achieved. It is a victory gained after one of the most bitter and unrelenting contests between the people and corrupt money power that American politics ever exhibited. Though on this side of the mountains people are coming to a realizing sense of the corrupting and overshadowing power of money-politics, the disease they are here called to combat is health itself by comparison to the virulent state it has attained on the Pacific slope. In California both the old party organizations and their "leading men" have for years been owned, literally and absolutely, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Bank of California. These overgrown money-powers have systematically "run" the State government, whichever "party" might be in the ascendant, just as they have run the business behind their own office-counters. They have composed Legislatures and made laws, have corrupted judges, and bought and sold offices; have bought seats for their creatures in the United States Senate, and have owned the California delegation at Washington. The State of California, its Government, its commerce, its mercantile and business industry, have belonged to these corrupt money combinations as effectually as if the railroad and bank men had been feudal robber-barons of the middle ages, commanding the country and all that dwelt therein from some crag-perched castle on the Rhine. The "Republican" party and the "Democratic" party have been their obedient instruments and the convenient cloaks to their self-aggrandizing purposes. Whoever has refused to be their henchman has been marked for destruction.

Newton Booth, a man who seems to have been peculiarly fitted by nature and culture for so hazardous an undertaking, dared to raise the banner of independence and march at the head of a popular rebellion. The desperate and fierce character of the contest waged at the last State election is imperfectly understood by people in this valley. How the "Republican" leaders and the "Democratic" leaders played into each other's hands; how the railroad and bank rings stood with their money-bags behind both, directing the campaign and supplying the "sinews of war;" and how, finally, at the polls, the Independents triumphed over the allied hosts of corruption; these are facts of history. From the moment of the victory won by the Independents at the polls, the watchword of both the old political putridities became, "Anything to beat Booth!" Newton Booth, the political rebel, the leader of the Independent movement, the rising Hampden of the Pacific slope, had developed force and character as a popular leader that rendered him dangerous to the old corruptionists. He must be crushed at all hazards. And the "Democratic" fuglemen and "Republican" fuglemen—every vile creature of the money-rings—went to work with a will to crush him. A contest more desperate, or on the part of the allied corruptionists, more thoroughly unscrupulous and devilish, than the Senatorial contest against Booth in the California Legislature, the history of American politics does not record.

The corruptionists are again beaten. The Independents are again victorious, and the last is their grandest victory. Newton Booth, the ablest and most conspicuous leader of the Independent political movement in the United States, is chosen to the United States Senate for six years from the 4th of March, 1875. The political Siamese twins of corruption in California are overthrown. "Democratic" putridity and "Republican" putridity are buried in the same foul grave.—Chicago Times.

Co-operation.

The system of co-operative purchases has been adopted by the grange in this State, though it has not been perfected as it has in Iowa. When there were five granges in this county—there are now eighteen—arrangements were made with leading merchants in Oshkosh to sell the Grangers at ten per cent. advance on the cost of the goods at the place where they were bought. This gives the merchant about five per cent. profit, and the advantage of a large cash trade. The arrangement has been most satisfactory. On groceries and heavy articles, on which there has always been but little profit, of course the saving has been small; but on hats, caps, boots and shoes, cloth, clothing, dry goods of every kind, ribbons and and other millinery articles, books and stationery, and all kinds of fancy articles, the saving has been from ten to sixty per cent. As new granges have been formed, the trade of those who made the arrangement with the Patrons has increased, and the majority of the Grangers, who had always been in the habit of having accounts at the stores in this city, now pay cash for everything they buy. In the purchase of farm implements, machinery, sewing machines and musical instruments, a considerable saving has been made. I think it is contemplated to have the grange of this State unite in purchasing with that of Iowa—that is, that it shall be so arranged that the granges of both States, and perhaps of Minnesota, shall contract with the same manufacturers, and thus, by increasing the size of their aggregate orders, get lower prices than either could alone. A good many farmers as yet hesitate about sending their money to the State agent when they wish to make a purchase, but they are gradually gaining confidence, and I think that next year the orders of the grange of this State directly from the manufacturers will be quite large.—Wisconsin Letter to N. Y. Tribune.

Forward.

The Grange movement is making itself felt from ocean to ocean. Its objects are being presented to every political and industrial assembly that convenes on the continent. The great, foremost question at present, seems to be cheap transportation for Northwestern products to the seaboard. The National Board of Trade at Chicago resolved to urge upon Congress some measure calculated to advance this grand essential to prosperity. A reduction in through rates, of five cents a bushel on grain alone, would be worth tens of millions a year to the West—would almost pay our taxes. A committee of Yankee Senators is now perambulating the country collecting facts and suggestions looking to an immediate and decided improvement, both in facilities and cost of transportation between us and the Eastern coast. Its members are Sherman, of Ohio; Conkling, of New York; Ames, of Mississippi; Casserly, of California; Norwood, of Georgia; Lewis, of Virginia, and Windom, of Minnesota. —Caucasian, Lexington, Mo.

Developing the Country.

As Congress has now assembled, it may not be uninteresting for tax-payers to take a brief survey of the lobby and see what that delectable body has in hand. For eight or ten years past the lobby has been the power behind the throne, and in order that we may form some idea of what Congress will do, it is necessary to see what the lobby will require of it.

Combinations of unscrupulous men, both in and out of Congress, have been so successful in their raids upon the National Treasury, for the past few years, that, notwithstanding the indignation which the people have lately expressed through the ballot-box, we find that we have a large and powerful combination on hand whose avaricious spirit and ravenous appetite is not to be stayed by any disapproval which the people may show so long as Congressmen are willing and anxious to aid and assist them.

The following is a portion of the amount which Congress will be asked to place in the pockets of private corporations, and consequently take out, by taxation, of the pockets of the dear people:

Bond subsidy to the Northern Pacific railroad	$60,000,000
Bond subsidy to the Southern Pacific railroad	60,000,000
Assumption of debts of Southern States	275,000,000
Subsidy to Virginia and James River canal	75,000,000
Same to Georgia and Alabama canal	40,000,000
Purchase of Erie canal and its enlargement	60,000,000
Purchase of telegraphs	10,000,000
Refunding cotton tax	70,000,000
Claims of Southern loyalists	20,000,000
Central Pacific	8,000,000

Here, then, we have the neat little sum of $678,000,000 which patriotic and public-spirited citizens require from Congress that they may be enabled to develop the country; and unless the fall elections shall exercise a restraining influence upon that body, these cormorants will get all they ask, and several millions thrown in. Tax-payers, how do you like this system of development?—Exchange.

Co-operative Stores and Chicago Merchants

The grangers have lately started a co-operative store in one of the interior counties in Iowa, which promises well to all the parties interested. One of the gentlemen writes us their agent came to Chicago one day last week and left with one wholesale firm over $3,000. The entire stock was purchased in this city for cash, and amounted to about $7,500. Another similar store has also been started at Ames, Iowa, and some of the leading officers of the Agricultural College there are watching its operations with great care. These stores are increasing in great numbers, under the patronage of the granges; and the farmers, where there are not stores, are purchasing their supplies from first hands. One concern in this city is selling from $3,000 to $5,000 a day on cash orders from granges and farmers' clubs. It is a comparatively new wholesale grocery house. Other stores that have turned their attention to this kind of trade are doing equally well; yet there is a class of dry goods houses—with dry goods superficial policy—whose drummers parade around the hotels, and proclaim they do not want any of the farmers' patronage. We shall publish a list of these gentry before long, who are stupid enough to pretend that the color of one man's money is better than that of another. We want the farmers and working men to know who the stolid blockheads are—a class of men who are strutting around and taking on the airs of business men, when they don't understand the first principles of business. They are a species of fire-flies, who shine and buzz about for a brief space, and then subside into bankruptcy and oblivion.—Industrial Age (Chicago).

AUBURN COURIER

T. C. MAYS, PUBLISHER.

Oh Rum, What Hast Thou Done?

Mr. and Mrs. Phrye are a young couple, with good prospects and a snug home. The only [illegible] of a shadow on their hearth has been a growing habit of drink on the part of Mr. Phrye. This has been the cause of many heart aches to Mrs. Phrye, and much uneasiness to the friends of the couple. At first Mr. Phrye could not be brought to realize the power liquor was obtaining over him, but upon the earnest and continued persuasion of his wife he finally promised to abstain from the use of all intoxicating liquors. It was at this happy time that the West street church gave an entertainment. It was a social gathering and was largely attended. Mr. and Mrs. Phrye with several neighbors went. Mr. Phrye sent his wife ahead with her friends, while he went to the barber shop, and was to rejoin them after his shave. With this undestanding Mrs. Phrye started, first reminding him in a whisper of his promise, and imploring him not to go off with that Joe Goodson. Mr. Phrye pressed her hand in deep affection and faith, and went to the barber shop. From the barber's hands he went directly to the church, and took a seat with his party. Upon seating himself he leaned over to the lady on his left to make some remark when he was startled by the expression of her face, the stare gave him, and the observation she emitted which was, "Oh!" He instinctively turned to his wife for an explanation, and was struck dumb by the look of horror on that lady's face, "Oh, George!" the exclaimed, and her lips trembled. "What on earth is the matter?" he whispered. "I never expected it of you," she replied by way of explanation, at the same hiding her face in her handkerchief to smother a sob. "And at church, too," said the other lady, reaching for her handkerchief. "It seems as if my heart will break," sobbed Mrs. Phrye, in further explanation of the trouble. "I was afraid it would come to this," said the other lady with some degree of confidence. "O, dear," sobbed Mrs. Phrye. Poor Mr. Phrye! At every outburst he would turn to the one making it and stare in blank amazement. "Maria," he finally gasped, but still in a whisper, for fear of the ears of the audience, "what in the name of heaven has got into you and Mrs. Ferguson? What have I done?" Mrs. Phrye sobbed, and Mrs. Ferguson groaned. "Good heaven! am I out of my reason?" demanded the afflicted man, staring at the ceiling, and confining his voice to the apparent detriment of his chest. Another sob and groan, with a feeble intimation from Mrs. Phrye that death would be a welcome guest to her. Mr. Phrye looked about for something with which to destroy his life, but not succeeding in finding it, relapsed into a fever heat and increased perspiration. "I would have rather met your cold corpse," explained Mrs. Phrye, in a broken voice, "than to see you in such a state." "What state?" howled the miserable man. "Yes, indeed," sobbed Mrs. Ferguson, and having discharged a sacred duty with this remark she disappeared behind her handkerchief. "What state?" again howled Mr. Phrye. "In such a state of liquor. O, heaven! O, dear!" sighed Mrs. Phrye. At this charge Mr. Phrye raised himself nearly five inches from his chair. "Maria, what do mean?" he demanded, "What do you mean, you had better ask?" replied the wretched woman. "I haven't drank a drop, so help me—" "Oh, hear the perjurer!" cried Mrs. Ferguson, in a whisper of horror. "I am no perjurer," protested Mr. Phrye; "I hain't drank a drop of liquor this day." Both ladies appeared from behind their handkerchiefs and appeared to be very much impressed by his earnestness. "But you smell dreadfully of rum," faltered his wife. "Well, there ain't been no rum near me," he asserted, "unless,"—and his face suddenly lighted—"unless it is bay rum at the barber's." "Oh, that's it, that's it," shouted both of the delighted ladies in chorus. "How could I have been so unjust?" said the happy Mrs. Phrye, squeezing his arm. "I thought all along it couldn't be possible that Phrye would do such a thing," confessed the pleased Mrs. Ferguson. And so the threatening clouds broke away and the cheerful sunshine came in like a flood upon the little party, and when Mr. Phrye was undergoing his next shave and the barber reached for the bay rum, he just waved his hand, and said, "Not by a dam's height, Mr. French." And no more bay rum does Mr. Phrye use, and the five cents thus saved is religiously devoted to the heathen.—Danbury News.

A Boy's Composition on Turtles.

A turtle is a reptile. It has a head like a snake and a little sharp tail and four claws like an alligator. The rest of him lives inside the bones so I don't know what it looks like. The bones are outside and are called the shell. They live a great many years. I have read of a big turtle that belonged to a bishop in England that lived a hundred and twenty years after they got acquainted with him. They are very ugly and stupid and I don't think you could tame them if you tried all summer. I suppose they are good for something but I don't know what it is. It is fun to catch them. In some countries but not in this they keep them round in the house to kill bugs. A turtle has no teeth but it doesn't make any difference for there are bones in their mouths and they bite like everything and can hold on to a stick all day if you stay and pull. I don't believe they every die hardly. You can't starve them and if you cut off their heads and feet and tails it doesn't kill them and the beak will keep on snapping at you for a day or two. This sounds like a big story but it is true. I don't know how I should go to work to kill a turtle unless I mashed him with a big hammer. Or else boiled him. The shells are real pretty when you have boiled the turtle part out. They live all winter like bears without anything to eat. I am always hungrier in winter than any other time. I don't see how they do it. I think they are awful homely, their eyes look as if they were set in upside down. They mostly stay in the same place. It takes them a good while to get anywhere. I have heard of a new way to catch them, you go under water and clap two pieces of wood together and they will be scared and go right ashore, and all the muskrats too. They get the substance called tortoise shell from a kind of big turtle. It is used for women's combs, and sells for a good deal. I should like to raise that kind. There are a good many kinds of turtles, and some are good to eat. This is all I can think of about turtles except that the Jimjoes and Dick Townsend caught a lot over in Grover's marsh, Saturday. They said it was a great year for young toads over in Grover's marsh and so perhaps they live on those. I have two Turtles to sell—shiny, high-storied backs, first rate pocket-size and warranted lively snappers. This is this longest composition I ever wrote.—New York Independent.

Individual Marks.

It would be advisable for all persons liable to accidents, as women, children, and editors, to carry with them some indellible mark by which they may be known, in case of casuality, and thus save trouble. An anchor in India ink with "John Smith, my name; Podunk, my station; the world my dwelling place, and I don't know my destination," is appropriate and useful. We have carried this device on our left arm for sixty years, with the addition of a strawberry mark, and never have felt lost yet, except when a dun came with a bill. For the neglect of this simple precaution a woman of Providence left that city some time ago to go and take care of her sister, who was sick at Fall River, fixing no time for her return except that it would be when her sister was better. She did not write home. After a while the sister recovering, she started homeward. In the Providence horse cars she fell dead. The only marked clothing that she had was a borrowed pocket-handkerchief; and when a description of her was published no one came forward to identify her. Her sister supposed she was at home; her husband supposed that she was still at her sister's. The body was taken to the morgue, and has been lying there since the first of November. Within a day or two one of the Fall River friends went to Providence to see her, and then the fact was developed that she had not arrived. Inquiry was made and the truth was then learned. A singular feature of the case is that every day since the body had been in the morgue the husband had been at work within two hundred feet of the building, entirely unconcious of the fact that his wife lay in there dead.—Danbury News.

A Jolly Old Party.

Mr. Allen Ferguson, of Amsterdam, Va., who is 72 years of age, lately visited his mother in Appomattox county, who will be 100 years of age on the 6th of January next. The good old lady was delighted to see her boy; and to promote his pleasure, and to gratify that inordinate social feature of Tuckahoe character yet glowing in her own heart, determined to give him a party, which she did by inviting seven of Allen's schoolmates to dine. Of the eight schoolboys thus brought together, Allen was the youngest, the other seven ranging from 75 to 85 years. Among other topics discussed at the dinner-table, that of longevity was introduced, and it was the united testimony of the party that most of our modern health-destroying diseases are due to the fashionable bills of fare now commonly found through the country, and that "Hog and Hominy" are the best promoters of health and long life.—Fincastle (Va.) Herald.

A CORRESPONDENT, who signs himself "K," sends the New York Tribune a couple of puns, which he guarantees as genuine: "When Gov. Marcy was Secretary of State at Washington, a person whose duty it was to discharge the men, in the discharge of his duties one day, could not find the secretary in his office. After looking in vain for him, he rushed frantically up to a party who he supposed would be able to inform him, and, striking an attitude, exclaimed: 'That Marcy I to others show, that Marcy show to me!' The counterpart suggests to me a very happy application of the quotation made by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Some years ago, while passing up the Mersey on a voyage to Liverpool, looking overboard, she observed the muddy character of the river, and remarked to a friend standing at her side: 'The quality of Mersey is not strained.'"

WILD HORSES OF THE WEST.—Large numbers of wild horses abound on the prairies between the Arkansas and Smoky hill rivers. They are of all sizes and colors, and are the wildest of all wild animals. They usually roam in bands of from six to twenty, and will run at sight of a man two miles away. A great many domestic horses as well as mules, which have strayed away from their owners, have taken up with the wild ones. After running with them for a while they become as wild as their untamed companions. Various methods have been adopted to capture these aboriginal horses, but they have generally proved fruitless. A scrubby colt or a broken-down mule is as a general thing the only reward for all the time, labor, and expense in such visionary schemes.—Topeka Commonwealth.

SINCE the year 1848, when there were about 6,000 miles of completed railroad in the country, the railroad system of the United States had increased, on January 1, 1873, to 71,000 miles in actual operation, with 8,000 more in process of construction. The railroad statistics show that in 1858 there were 27,000 miles of road built, in 1869 43,000 miles, and that since the war the half of the whole has been constructed and put in operation. The average railroad growth for the last five years has been nearly 6,000 miles annually. At a rate of $40,000 per mile, the cost of the completed roads would be perhaps $3,000,000,000, while those in progress and not yet completed will cost $320,000,000.

THE extent of railroad open in British India at midsummer, 1873, was 5,511 miles. The gross revenue of the year 1872 was $31,755,000, the passenger traffic producing over $10,000,000, and the goods traffic nearly $20,000,000.

Some Modern Sayings.

BY M. QUAD.

"HONESTY is the best policy," unless you can get about $50,000 and effect a settlement at 50 per cent.

LET your motto be, "Liberty or Death," and if it comes to the pinch take the most of it in liberty.

HONOR thy father and thy mother, particularly about circus time, when you don't know where to raise fifty cents.

NEVER run in debt when you can avoid it. It is much better to go stubbing around in a broadcloth coat than to be in debt for a suit of Scotch mixed.

LOVE thy neighbor as thyself. Borrow his plow, hoe or horses whenever you can, but if he wants to borrow yours tell him that you're very sorry but you were just going to use them yourself.

BE guarded in your conversation. There are times when you may freely express your opinion of a political candidate, but you had better wait until his friends are over in the next county visiting.

RESPECT old age. If you have a maiden aunt forty years old, and she is passing herself off for a girl of twenty-three, there is no call for you to expose her. The more you respect her age and keep still about it the more she will respect you.

NEVER marry for wealth, but remember that it is just as easy to love a girl who has a brick house with a mansard roof and a silver-plated door-bell as one who hasn't anything but an auburn head and an amiable disposition.

REMEMBER that appearances are often deceiving. Many a pale, thin young lady will eat more corned beef than a carpenter. Because you find her playing the piano in the parlor, it is no sign that her mother is not at the corner grocery running in debt for a peck of potatoes.

RISE with the lark. That is during cold weather as soon as the lark rises, waken your wife and tell her that it is time to build the fire. If she makes any objections you can refer her to a dozen works on the benefit of early rising. Any man who cares a cent for his wife's health will take pride in hearing her around the house at daylight of a winter's morning getting [illegible] hot stove and warming his socks and boots.

A Photographer that Wouldn't be Embraced.

Salvini, the actor, when having a photograph taken, was so delighted with the proof that he flung his arms about the operator and embraced him. This was gratifying to the operator, and did not cost Salvini anything. A gentleman in this place, whose name we will not mention, was very much pleased with the great actor's artifice—as he persisted in terming it—and believing that appreciation is dearer to a true artist than money, he concluded to have some photographs of himself. When the proof was shown him he knew that was the time to fling his arms about the operator, but he could not pluck up sufficient courage. He thought he would wait a more favorable opportunity, and became very nervous in consequence. Pretty soon the operator had occasion to reach under a case of specimens for a cloth, and, as he turned to come out, the agitated patron, full of desperation shut his eyes and swooped down upon him. The frightened artist, believing that this was a new process for garroting, straightway screamed murder, and sought to defend himself until the arrival of aid, by beating the assassin over the face and head with a brush full of varnish. Every lick of the brush developed additional ferocity in the face of the customer, and consequently increased the terror of the operator, whose shouts aroused the inmates of the building and brought to his help in quick succession a tailor, two dressmakers, four clerks, and a one-legged basketmaker. The benumed and varnished victim was quickly overpowered, and being sat upon by as many of the masculines as could be accommodated, was firmly held until the arrival of an officer. Fortunately he was known by the officer, who recognized him from his apparel—not being able to see his features for the varnish, and upon explaining that the cause of his coming down upon the operator was a sudden dizziness he experienced, he was released. A hack was obtained and he was taken home, and his head put to soak in lime water for the removal of the varnish from his face. But it was found necessary to shave his scalp, as it was imposible to save his hair. He is glad now he got the pictures when he did.—Danbury News.

A COLORED man, recently deceased, in New Orleans, owed the city nearly $100,000 in back taxes. He lived in a miserable old garret, worked like a slave, and allowed himself none of the comforts of life. He owned real estate worth $700,000 at least, and a large amount of bonds and cash. There were writs against him for taxes running back a dozen years, which he avoided paying by giving the city 10 per cent. on the gross amount, which the law permitted, and then he lent the money on mortgages for from 18 to 24 per cent.

OYSTER OMELET.—Chop fine twelve large oysters. Beat well six eggs, and add a spoonful of flour, rubbed smooth in milk, salt, pepper, and a bit of butter melted. Fry in one omelet, and serve hot.

WE might, as a nation, if we felt so disposed, indulge in a little enthusiastic brag about our railroads, as we possess more miles of iron than all the nations of Europe combined. In Europe there are scarcely 65,000 miles of railroads, while the connected lines of the United States measure 70,117 miles, exclusive of 43,000 now in course of construction.—Boston Globe.

ONE morning Biddy seeing her mistress in a loose wrapper, was told it was styled "half undressed." The next morning her master brought in some tomatoes fresh from the vines which he told her to serve up "in an undressed state." When breakfast was ready Biddy came with the tomatoes, having very few clothes on, in fact but a single garment decked her sturdy limbs. The master and mistress viewed her with amazement, but she made sure her position as she placed the dish on the table, by saying: "Arrah, sure, I'm in an undressed state, as ye ordered me, and begorra I'll not strip another rag if I get my discharge."

A Complication of Accidents.

Quite an excitement was created on Nelson street, Sunday noon, by the chimney in Mr. Frazer's house taking fire. Mr. Frazer, and a young man, a boarder, were the only occupants of the house at the time the accident was discovered. Mrs. Frazer and her father, who is in Danbury on a visit, were at church. Mr. Frazer was very much excited, but the boarder retained his presence of mind. The first move suggested to the latter was to get a pail of water, climb out on the roof and dash the water down the chimney. Mr. Frazer's idea was to shout fire in one of the closets, execute a hornpipe across the room, and shout fire again in the opposite closet. This he proceeded to do with commendable despatch, while the boarder struck out for the roof. It was in this stage of the affair when Mrs. Frazer and her father turned into the street and saw the trouble. They both started for the house on a run, and just as they reached it a young man in the opposite house fortunately rushed out with a basket of salt. Mrs. Frazer's father seized this, and not having any well defined locality of the fire, started down the alleyway adjoining the house, which communicates with the backyard by half a dozen steps. Thinking he would not have time to descend these he impetuously jumped down from the bank, and was promptly caught across the neck by an unobserved clothes line. The awful recoil jerked the basket from his grasp, distributing its contents in every direction, and threw him violently on his back, where he lay with a red mark on his neck, his tongue protruding, and giving other infallible indications of choking to death. Upon witnessing this accident to her father Mrs. Frazer went into a hysterical fit, and kicked the heels from an eight-dollar pair of French gaiters. In the meantime Mr. Frazer had ripped away the fire board, and crawled into the fireplace with a view to seeing the extent of the trouble in the chimney, and it was while he was straining his eyes up the tube of flame that the industrious and self-possessed boarder appeared at the other extremity with the pail, and straightway dashed its contents down the chimney. To say that Mr. Frazer was astonished at this unexpected turn in the affair is to speak very feebly indeed. That he was mad there can be no doubt, and when he crawled out into the room, with the liquid soot in a myriad of rivulets dancing down his face and shirt front, and confronting his resuscitated father-in-law, who appeared at the same time without a hat, with one hand grasping an empty basket which he had mechanically recovered, and with the other rubbing the top of his head, and staring about in hopeless amazement—the spectacle was about as complicated and unsatisfactory as anything could be. The entry of the revived Mrs. Frazer, accompanied by the calm and confident boarder, diverted the minds of the two sufferers, and order was soon restored. But it taught Mr. Frazer a lesson. He will never again stay home from church.—Danbury News.

THE oil springs of Canada appear to have proved no better investment than those of Pennsylvania. From the first discovery of petroleum to the present time—says the Toronto Globe—the history of its production and manufacture has been marked with disaster to those who embarked their fortunes in them. That paper estimates the capital actually destroyed—nothing whatever left to show for it—at no less than $5,000,000 alone. The present condition of Bothwell, Petrolia, and other places is hardly less deplorable than that of Pithole City, whose 25,000 inhabitants have been reduced to twelve families.

THE Rev. Joseph P. Taylor, of Brunswick, Me., having some trouble from an echo in his church, effectually destroyed it in the following manner: The church consists of a nave, transept and chancel. Wires were stretched across the arches of the open roof at two inches distance from each other at the intersection of the transept and nave, coming down to the corbels, and also across a portion of each of several arches in the nave, beginning at the top. Mr. Taylor suggests that the wires need not be nearer together than one foot. The wire is so small as not to be seen from the floor of the church, and consequently does not detract from its appearance.

TURKISH PORTERS.—The strength and dexterity of the "hamals" of Constantinople in carrying enormous burdens are proverbial; and it is surprising to see one of these poor Eastern porters quietly plodding his way up or down some hilly street with a perfect mountain of material piled upon his back. The loads they carry are most miscellaneous; but even old residents were lately astonished to see a "hamal" staggering along the Grande Rue de Pera with a large four-wheeled carriage—all complete except the horses—lashed on to his porter's knot.

A MILK-PRODUCING PLANT.—M. Gillet-Damitte has addressed a paper to the French Academy of Sciences, to announce the nutritive and lactigeneous properties of the plant called Galega officinals. As fodder, its value is thirty-three per cent. higher than the best meadow hay. Cattle easily take to it, and chemical analysis shows that it is a milk-producer. From experiments made on cows exclusively fed on galega, it appears that in twenty-four hours they yielded thirty-three per cent. more milk than others fed on other kinds of fodder; some gave as much as fifty per cent.

A PRACTICAL farmer, who selects his seed corn in the fields, tells the New England Homestead that he has always made it a point to take it from stalks which have more than one ear, and he adds that by this method "he has noticed a decided increase of stalks, that have two or more ears on, and this year neighbors have asked the privilege of selecting seed from his crop, having noticed the superiority of his corn in this respect over their own."

Reminiscences of Denver Life.

(Denver Letter to the Chicago Tribune.)

It seems incredible that this city is only twelve years old, having been incorporated in 1861; but such is the fact. Denver, however, has had its history, as well as other towns in the West; and for a long time it was the resort of a gang of desperadoes, gamblers, and thieves, who seized upon the offices of the city, and really attempted to commit their crimes in the name of the law. These cut-throats at one time controlled everything,—elected the municipal officers, possessed themselves of the wealth of the city, intimidated the editors and Justices, and held high carnival of crime.

A desperado named James Gordon killed an inoffensive German, and the German people roused to action. Gordon fled to a ranche, and a strong party surrounded it, when the desperado came forth on a swift horse and dashed through his pursuers. A shower of bullets followed him, but he escaped unharmed. A mass-meeting was then called in Denver, money raised, and officers sent after the fugitive. They trailed him 1,700 miles, and at last captured him near the Indian Territory, and took him to Leavenworth. Here Gordon's friends got a writ of habeas corpus, and took him from the Denver officers. Again Gordon was about to escape; but the Germans of Leavenworth gathered in a mob, attacked the officers of the law, and recaptured the desperado. Three times the mob had a rope around Gordon's neck, but were prevented from hanging him by the civil officers. In the scuffle the prisoner's clothes were torn from his back, and he was so badly beaten that he begged some one to shoot him on the spot. At last it was agreed that Gordon should be taken back to Denver for trial, and upon this promise the mob dispersed. He was delivered over to Mr. Middaugh, the leading officer from Denver. His trial was short, and he was convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged. After a week given him to prepare for death, he was executed.

The editor of the Rocky Mountain News made some comments on a murder, which offended the desperadoes, and they attacked his office. While Mr. Byers, one of the editors, was sitting in an office talking with three Northern gentlemen, four gamblers rushed in, seized him, dragged him to a drinking-saloon, and would have murdered him but for the interference of friends. The gamblers then went to the printing-office, but were prevented from destroying it by the types, who had armed themselves with guns and revolvers. Several shots were fired; but the ruffians, seeing the citizens were arming, fled and hid themselves. The aroused citizens made a general search, and Steele, the ringleader of the band, was taken and shot.

Another of the gamblers was captured, and about to be hanged, when he begged the people to spare his life and permit him to leave the country. The question was put to vote, and carried by a small majority, to spare him, on condition that he would quit Denver at once and forever; which he did.

A man named Ford committed a murder under peculiarly-aggravating circumstances, and was justified; but, being a bad man, and emboldened by his first success, he soon afterward did a murder in cold blood, when the people rose and demanded his execution. Ford fled, but a committee of Vigilants followed him, took him from a stage-coach, and shot him by the road-side.

Another murderer fled to the Indians; but the Vigilants followed day and night, over mountain and plain, until he was taken and hung.

Steele had a brother, who had sworn to take the life of Mr. Pollock, who had shot his brother. One day they met on the highway in Denver; but Pollock, seeing Steele first, covered him with his rifle, and called him to pass on. Steele did so, the deadly tube bearing on him until he was out of range. Two years afterward these men met in New Mexico, and simultaneously recognized each other. Both fired; but Pollock escaped, while Steele fell with a ball through his brain. It was over this rough road of blood Denver found peace, and became the quiet and orderly city she is to-day. Her citizens banded together for her defense, and became a law unto themselves.

Dixon has told us that "From three to five persons were usually killed during the night, and sometimes in open day, in Denver;" and, although this statement has been vigorously denied, it is probable that, at one time in the early history of the city, it came near being the truth. Richardson tells us the printing-offices were arsenals, and that both editors and types went armed about their work,—presenting between themselves and the desperados a sort of "armed neutraltiy." He also assures us that he saw a murderer condemned to death in the following manner:

Judge ——: "The jury have found you guilty; have you anything to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon you?"

Prisoner—"I have nothing to say."

Judge—"Then I will submit the question to this assemblage [about 400 people]. All you who believe in this verdict say 'Aye.' [A roar of affirmatives.] All who opposed, 'No.' [A feeble 'No,' the prisoner alone voting in the negative].

Judge—"Prisoner, you will be hanged to-morrow morning."

Prisoner—"Thank you." [Roars of laughter].

THE STARS OF HEAVEN.—The number of stars visible to the naked eye in the entire circuit of the heavens has been usually estimated at about 6,000. An ordinary opera-glass will exhibit something like ten times that number. A comparatively small telescope easily shows 200,000; while there are telescopes in existence with which, there is reason to believe, not fewer than 25,000,000 stars are visible. And yet, when all these are seen and numbered, the eye will have visited but a mere speck in the illimitable bounds of space.

THE land at the mouth of the Mississippi for whose reclamation Congress is asked to assist, measures 24,771,240 acres, of which there can be made available 22,457,000 acres. Its present valuation is $2 an acre, but it is thought that by improvement it will be worth $10. Those who support the scheme say that there can be grown on the tract yearly, besides indigo, rice and sugar, $450,000,000 worth of cotton. These are pretty big figures, and we think Congress will be inclined to let the scheme alone till the revenue of the Government again exceeds expenditures.

Washington's Messages.

"Gath" writes: "Washington had to set the lesson of a President's message. His inaugural could be committed to memory by a moderately bad scholar in one day, and is a feeling expression of self-concession and disturbed retirement when summoned by 'the voice of my country.' Piety, Addisonian composition, and a declination of salary are the main points in it. The President's first regular message, dated January 8,1790, is equally concise, and shows the growing confidence and credit of the country; declares that 'to be prepared for war is the means of preserving the peace;' and urges that 'nothing is more worthy the patronage of Congress than the promotion of science and literature.' The early messages are addressed alternately to the House and Senate, after the manner of the Queen's address to Parliament. The second message of President Washington is also short, but more practical; for the national business was thickening around him in foreign war, admission of new States, Barbary trespasses, and the organization of public institutions. The third message grows in space with the contents it must treat of; speaks mainly of Indian wars and treaties, the development of the interior, the new Capitol, the currency, and weights and measures. The fourth message treats of disorders, intestine and foreign, and is followed by a proclamation of neutrality. The fifth and sixth continue the same. The seventh is cheerful and congratulatory, and short. The eighth is the message of the conscious and thoughtful ruler of a nation demanding more nationality, increased institutions, and better pay for officers. Then comes the wondrous Farewell Address, dated September 17, 1796, equal in length and gravity of suggestions to many of those preceding it."

THE Rev. Newman Hall is building on grounds contiguous to his church, in London, a tower more than two hundred feet high, at a cost of about $35,000, in memory of Abraham Lincoln and emancipation. One-half of the sum has already been raised in England, and one-half has been nearly all contributed in this country. It is believed that not more than $400 or $500 of the whole amount is wanting, and this will be forthcoming in a few days. The whole amount necessary for the completion of the Memorial Tower could have been easily raised in London, but he conceived the idea of making it an international work, and thus half of the expense will be defrayed here.

SERPENTS OF THE YEAST.—One of the most remarkable illustrations of the mysterious line that separates the deadly and the wholesome in nature is given in the English Medical Press, which states that the poison of the cobra, the most deadly of the East India serpents, has been chemically analyzed, with the following results: Carbon, 46; nitrogen, 13; oxygen, 6; sulphur, 24; and hydrogen, 10. This is exactly the composition of beer yeast. The latter is used in manufacturing the staff of life—bread; the former is so deadly in its nature that, even when taken from the snake and preserved, and afterward injected under the skin of animals, it is immediately fatal.

PROTRACTED LAWSUIT.—A lawsuit was brought to a close this year under the decision of Judge Van Brunt, which was commenced when the Judge was a child. It drew out of the will of John Mason, a name now almost forgotten. John Mason died in 1840. For twenty years previously he had been the heaviest dry goods dealer in the United States. As soon as he was dead his great property gave rise to litigation, and one suit ran into another, so that although the first parties died others kept it up. Thirty-three years of legal warfare were required to bring the case to a successful issue. The first plaintiff was dead, and so was the defendant.

THE fifteen insurance companies which have been sued for penalties under the Iowa insurance law for not filing statements in January of each year, threaten to withdraw their agencies and loans from the State if the suits go against them. As they pay $107,000 a year into the State treasury, their withdrawal would be a serious loss to the revenue. The whole amount sued for is $216,000, of which $150,000 would go to the school fund, and the rest to the informer and his lawyers. The Auditor of the State certifies that the companies have complied with the spirit of the law.

A THRILLING scene occurred at Mrs. Livermore's lecture at Springfield, Vt., a few nights since. The lady had been dilating eloquently upon the bad effects of tight lacing, when a young woman in the gallery, with great difficulty and much perseverance, burst her corset strings, and drawing them forth, knotted them together and tossed them to some gentlemen near by, with the observation: "Here, boys, you can have this to play cat's-cradle with."

ENGLISH FORTIFICATIONS.—From a return just issued it appears that during the last twelve years England has expended a sum equal to $32,646,989 upon coast fortifications, distributed for the most part at Portsmouth, Plymouth, Portland, Pembroke, Sheerness, Dover, Gravesend, Chatham, and Cork.

A MAN in Iowa by the name of Silas Chew was married the other day to a girl named Anna Good. The most obtuse person would instantly call to mind the scriptural injunction: "S. Chew that which is evil, cleaving only to that which is Good."

CUBA is a little larger than Mississippi, New York or Tennessee, and has about the population of the last named State, perhaps 1,333,000, of whom 33,000 are slaves. Cuba is 660 miles long, and 135 wide at the widest point.

The President's Pay and the Taxes Increased Together.

Since the 4th of March last President Grant has drawn his salary at the rate of $50,000 a year, although the lay is contradictory, and a man of delicate feeling and not greedy for money would in his situation have taken only the old rate of $25,000, which is proviced in the latter and more authorative part of the act. In addition to this double salary, the President has also drawn various other allowances at the rate of $77,600; so that his pay and allowances together are now running to the tune of $127,600 yearly.

In this state of things, and with Secor Roberson and Boss Shepherd tugging at the Treasury, and all the other expenditures of the Government graduated upon a similar scale of extravagance, it is not surprising that Secretary Richardson has to come to Congress to ask that new taxes may be imposed upon coffee, tea, etc., and the gross receipts of railroads, and even having enough for our gorgeous officeholders to squander freely, the old stamp taxes might likewise be restored

Eleven poor Swedes were dragged some two hundred miles from their homes in Minnesota, leaving destitute families, to answer to a charge of cutting a little firewood on the public lands. Upon examination, they were discharged and left penniless in the streets of St. Paul to make their way home as best they could. Robeson "took" ninety-three thousand dollars from the United States without law and without justice and handed it over to the Secors; and yet he is Secretary of the Navy, and married and happy still. The Radical Congressmen "appropriated five thousand dollars each back pay," the President helped himself and them to the swag, securing as his share fifty thousand, but then, they are not poor Swedes, living on the frontier some two hundred miles from civilization. Their families are not starving and freezing [illegible] settlements, and besides they stole millions of dollars, while the Swedes, poor devils! stole a little brush to make a fire with, and hence, they must be taught that this world is not all a fleeting show, and that robbery must be punished.

Rats in the Common Granary.

There have been the enormous number of 900 and more bills introduced into the Forty-third Congress. Almost every man has introduced something, and forthwith forgot all about it, proceeded to quarrel with his colleagues on the salary grab, and then concluded to take three weeks' holiday with his $6,000 forward pay.

To begin with; Here is Mr. Hurlbut, who wants widows of the veterans of 1812, who married again, to get all the benefits of those who did not.

Mr. Morey, who wants a Levee Company incorporated, with $100,000 capital, to be paid outright by the Treasury, and to guarantee the Company's bonds in case of deficiency. This bill has the merit of frankness.

Mr. Wolfe starts in for a $200,000 Post-Office for New Albany, Indiana, business being dull there, and corner lots in want of a purchaser.

Mr. Giddings wants Red Fish Bar, wherever that may be—said to be somewhere around Galveston—improved to the sum of $75,000. Who would not be a Bar and have Giddings for a friend?

Mr. Jasper Ward wants all mining claimants to file an application with the Land Register, and, three months thereafter, pay ten dollars an acre and get the property. How can Congress intelligently act on these distant and technical propositions?

Mr. Purnam wants the modest sum of $800,000 appropriated to repair the dry dock at Pensacola, and construct six marine railways. Of course Purnam is from Florida. He is useful to point the moral that thus far in the bill-file nobody has broached a proposition to save the Treasury anything.

And here is Packard, of Indiana, Colfax's successor, who has somehow got to be chief of the Committee on Secretary Fish's expenditures. Packard wants a telegraph cable stretched from the American to the Asiatic coasts, one or more steam vessels and many soundings. If there are to be any soundings in brass, or tinklings in cymbals, a propriate Packard.

Mr. Buckner proposes that, whereas Eugenie Leitensdorfer, in 1846, did, single-handed and alone, make the formidable Pueblo Indians keep the peace, go into their mole-hills and pull up the ladders, thereby preventing a ruinous war, fearful sacrifice and much combustion, be it resolved accordingly, said Buckner, that we appropriate the sum of $100,000 to Eugenie Leitensdorfer. How much, then, shall we give the Pueblos for keeping the peace?

And we have Comingo, of Missouri, with a railroad bill very simple and mysterious in phraseology, forbidding any law of State or Territory to impede or delay the great Kansas City & Memphis Company, because, says Comingo, in effect, it is paramount, vital and lovely. He proposes, before the road is built, to have it declared a military and post road, so that no State, we presume, can correct it.

Mr. Orth, now the stalwart head of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, wants Nicholas Whitehall's patent for a cultivator extended fourteen years more—in all, thirty-four years. No interest is so inordinately protected as inventions. It might be well for the clause providing for the extension of patents to be wholly repealed.

John B. Clark wants $500,000 appropriated to the improvement of the Missouri River. He is rich enough to pay it himself.

Mr. Standard wants a private soldier paid $8 a month for nine years, the soldier having neglected to apply for a pension until 1861, when he discovered that he had been wronged by that amount.

Mr. Kendall, a breezy new member starts in wholesomely with a bill to pay $22,064 to some constituent whose ground was made into a military reservation two years ago. Can any ground in Nevada be worth that amount? Did the establishment of the reservation save the scalp or provide a market for the claimant?

Mr. Elkins, of New Mexico, wants a new land district created in New Mexico, which will involve a new set of officers Who would be Uncle Sam? He is like the elder Chuzzlewit with all the selfish brood begging around him.

Armstrong, of Decota, the Territory which permits its Secretary to be murdered, and then lets the murderer out on bail, wants to regulate justice out there, so that the judges can accommodate themselves to the situation, and not go into districts where they they may be shot unnecessarily.

Mr. Dunnel wants a man named Savage to be voted a three-quarter section of land, under the act to encourage the growth of timber on Western prairies. Is Savage to be planted and grow wild? Is he a vegetable or a military kernel?

Mr. Halley, a sprightly Delegate, next appears with a request for $80,000 to lay out a wagon road in Idaho. The smaller the population the more roads.

McFadden, of Washington, wants $40,000 to improve a corner lot at Port Townsend with a Custom house

Delegate McCormic wants the right and title of the United States in the City of Tucson to be granted to the corporation, and by them to be given to the citizens as they like. The whole population of Arizona is less than 10,000. The size of Tucson is not known.

Mr. Page, of California, brings in a suspicious bill allowing individuals to take up timber lands in California and Oregon to the amount of 640 acres per individual, at $2.50 a head.

Mr. McFadden, Delegate, wants $12,000 to survey the interesting rivers spelled as follows: Skaget, Snohomish and Cebal as.

Mr. Hereford wants $3,500 for a Lodge of Odd Fellows at Charlestown, West Virginia, who lost their regalia.

McFadden, aforesaid, wants $40,000 more for another wagon road in Washington.

Elkins, of New Mexico, whom we have seen wanting another land district, now wants the Fort Sumner Reservation vacated for the benefit of certain six months' squatters.

Ben Butler wants Massachusetts reimbursed for the sea coast defences thrown up in the Essex district during the civil war.

Mr. Joe Chaffee files a bill for $20,000 to pay the Legislature of Colorado compensation and mileage.

Armstrong, of Dakota, aforesaid, wants $6,000 to repair a bridge over the Big Sioux River.

Ben Butler brings in a bill prohibiting the United States Courts from plucking cases out of the hands of the State Courts.

Boardman Smith, of New York, wants to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction over war damages—a most dangerous measure.

Then comes Gen. Garfield with his $4,000,000 appropriation for the Navy—the only real business of the session.

Small, of New Hampshire, comes in on the large to give authority to frank mail matter to all Secretaries, heads of Bureaus, Congressmen, Postmasters, and so forth. Everybody there is itching to have the right to dead head personal property and self glorification through the mails.

Mr. Walls, of Florida, wants to give the United States Court House at St. Augustine to the State Legislature for a Normal School.

Mr. Burchard wants to divide Illinois into three judicial districts, with four terms of Court, held respectively at Chicago, Springfield, Cairo Freeport and Peoria.

Mr. Waddel wants the Wilmington, N. C., Court House to cost no more than $100,000.

Mr. Sawyer wants the canal between Lake Michigan and the Green and Sturgeon Bays to be finished no sooner than 1876, with the proper guarantee for procrastination.

Mr. Page, of California, wants pre emptors to be allowed to swear before any officer with the same force and effect as before a Land Register and Land Receiver.

Such are a number of bills, taken at random from the file. It is tolerably plain that the whole business of a modern Congress is to make expenses in the interest of a constituency, and assess them upon the General Treasury. No wonder that our annual expenses outrun our receipts, when every piece of geography has designs upon the whole.—Chicago Tribune.

A free school for children is being opened in Liverpool, the first thing which the teacher did was to subject the pupils to a thorough washing. In one respect this generally desirable process proved to be unfortunate, for the boys and girls were so metamorphosed by the scrubbing that their parents didn't know them, and great domestic confusion ensued.

The will of an eccentric citizen of Cornish, N. H., who made a bequest of $1,000 to the town, the interest to be expended for flags, to be unfurled in various parts of the town during pleasant weather, has been contested by the heirs, lately, on the ground that provides for a useless expenditure Judge Foster, of Concord, says differently, however, considering it a very proper bequest, one calculated to keep alive the spirit of union and patriotism, and the memories of the historic periods of the nation, and the flags will continue to wave.

Wendell Phillips recently gave expression to the following views on the currency question: "God forbid that we should ever return to that delusion of specie payments; I do not think that the American people will ever wander back to those Egyptian flesh pots, it is a delusion long since dispelled by the practical experience of the world. We have the best currency in the world now, and I don't believe the utmost effort of any minority will ever bring us back to the old channel. I hope it never will. Hugh Miller, whose fame is world wide, was first brought to the notice of scientific men by Prof. Agassiz. At a meeting of the British Scientific Society, Miller, who was then a common day laborer, approached Agassiz with a specimen of rock in his hand, and began to make certain inquiries concerning it During the conversation that ensued, Agassiz discovered that this common day laborer was possessed of a large fund of geological information, which he had acquired by personal investigations, induced solely by his innate love for the science. Agassiz was delighted at meeting him, and introduced Miller to the members of the Society, explaining the manner in which he had become acquainted with him. The friendships thus formed continued through their lives, and Agassiz wrote the introduction to Hugh Miller's first published work.

THE OLD MAN GOES TO THE FAIR.

I'm very dusty and tired, wife! I've just come home from the fair;
So give me my pipe and tobacco, and I'll smoke in my easy chair;
It's tiresome work a 'plain' for feeble old men like me;
It's tiresome work a seein' where every one wishes to see.

Our fairs are a runnin' down; they are not like the fairs of old,
Where you took the prizes for bread, and butter as yellow as gold;
There were hundreds of useful things that were well worth seein' then;
Now dozens of racin' horses and hundreds of bettin' men.

What all this sportin' will lead to is more than I now can tell;
But somehow it seems to me like the downward road to h—, well
I may be a little harsh, but I'm speakin' the simple truth,
For bettin', racin' and drinkin' are the foes of our noble youth.

We shall come to a nation of gamblers, if matters keep on this way;
Why, what do you think? a youngster [illegible] me of bettin' to-day;
When I laid my hand on the head—that hadn't seen [illegible]
And called him a fine little fellow—he answered me back, "you bet!"

"Tut, tut! little man," said I, "that thing I have never done;
Come, stand by grandpa's knee; let me reason with you, my son."
He straightened up his clothes and said, with a look so queer,
"I didn't come here for preachin'; old man walk off on your ear."

We never heard talk like that when you and I were young;
My father and mother—bless 'em—put a bridle upon my tongue.
I'm old, and I'm gettin' blind, but a difference I can see,
'Twixt the boys of eighteen hundred and eighteen seventy-three.

How is it about the girls! They, too, from the path have strayed;
I didn't see one a showin' the butter her own hands had made;
They stood in their pony phaetons, with woman's ease and grace,
And shouted as loud as any when a favorite won a race.

All eyes were watchin' the track; the race was every man's theme;
And I said to myself, "Is this a fair, or is it only a dream?"
I saw 'bout a dozen boys lookin' round at the sheep and swine,
And the frosts of seventy winters had silvered their heads like mine.

Why on airth don't they change the name, when the wrong name it has got?
No longer call it a fair, but an agricultural trot;
The men won't be takin' things for sensible folks to see,
With nobody to see 'em but crippled old men like me.

There, take my pipe and tobacco! I'll sleep in my easy chair;
It's tiresome work a talkin' about a degenerate fair;
You needn't disturb me, wife, till the bells of the evening chime,
For I may go back in my dreams to the fairs of the olden time.

MISSISSIPPI STEAMBOAT RACING.

A Vivid Picture.

"By George, yonder comes the Amaranth!"

A spark appeared, close to the water, several miles down the river. The pilot took his glass and looked at it steadily for a moment, and said, chiefly to himself:

"It can't be the Blue Wing. She couldn't pick us up this way. It's the Amaranth, sure."

He bent over a speaking-tube and said:

"Who's on watch down there?"

A hollow, unhuman voice rumbled up through the tube in answer:

"I am. Second engineer."

"Good! You want to stir your stumps, now, Harry—the Amaranth's just turned the point—and she's just a-humping herself, too!"

The pilot took hold of a rope that stretched out forward, jerked it twice, and two mellow strokes of the big bell responded. A voice out on the deck shouted:

"Stand by, down there, with that labboard lead!"

"No, I don't want the lead," said the pilot, "I want you. Roust out the old man—tell him the Amaranth's coming. And go and call Jim—tell him."

"Aye-aye, sir!"

The "old man" was the captain—he is always called so on steamboats and ships; "Jim" was the other pilot. Within two minutes both of these men were flying up the pilot-house stairway, three steps at a jump. Jim was in his shirt-sleeves, with his coat and vest on his arm. He said:

"I was just turning in. Where's the glass?"

He took it and looked:

"Don't appear to be any night-hawk on the jack-staff—it's the Amaranth, dead sure!"

The captain took a good long look, and only said:

"Damnation!"

George Davis, the pilot on watch, shouted to the night-watchman on deck:

"How's she loaded?"

"Two inches by the head, sir."

"'Taint enough!"

The captain shouted, now:

"Call the mate. Tell him to call all hands and get a lot of that sugar forrard—put her ten inches by the head. Lively, now!"

"Aye-aye, sir!"

A riot of shouting and trampling floated up from below presently, and the uneasy steering of the boat soon showed that she was getting "down by the head."

The three men in the pilot-house began to talk in short, sharp sentences, low and earnestly. As their excitement rose their voices went down. As fast as one of them put down the spy-glass another took it up—but always with a studied air of calmness. Each time the verdict was:

"She's a-gaining."

The captain spoke through the tube:

"What steam are you carrying?"

"A hundred and forty-two, sir! But she's getting hotter and hotter all the time."

The boat was straining and groaning and quivering like a monster in pain. Both pilots were at work now, one on each side of the wheel, with their coats and vests off, their bosoms and collars wide open, and the perspiration flowing down their faces. They were holding the boat so close to the shore that the willows swept the guards almost from stem to stern.

"Stand by!" whispered George.

"All ready!" said Jim, under his breath.

"Let her come!"

The boat sprang away from the bank like a deer, and darted in a long diagonal toward the other shore. She closed in again and thrashed her fierce way along the willows as before. The captain put down the glass:

"Lord, how she walks up on us! I do hate to be beat!"

"Jim," said George, looking straight ahead, watching the slightest yawing of the boat and promptly meeting it with the wheel, "how'll it do to try Murderer's Chute?"

"Well, it's—it's taking chances. How was the cottonwood stump on the false point below Boardman's island this morning?"

"Water just touching the roots."

"Well, it's pretty close work. That gives six feet scant in the head of Murderer's chute. We can just barely rub through if we hit it exactly right. But it's worth trying. She don't dare tackle it!"—meaning the Amaranth.

In another instant the Boreas plunged into what seemed a crooked creek, and the Amaranth's approaching lights were shut out in a moment. Not a whisper was uttered now, but the three men stared ahead into the shadows and two of them spun the wheel back and forth with anxious watchfulness while the steamer tore along. The chute seemed to come to an end every fifty yards, but always opened out in time. Now the head of it was at hand. George tapped the big bell three times, two leadsmen sprang to their posts, and in a moment their weird cries rose on the night air and were caught up and repeated by two men on the upper deck:

"No-o bottom!"

"De-e-p four!"

"Half three!"

"Quarter three!"

"Mark under wa-a-ter three!"

"Half twain!"

"Quarter twain!——"

Davis pulled a couple of ropes—there was a jingling of small bells far below, the boat's speed slackened, and the pent steam began to whistle and the gauge-cocks to scream:

"By the mark twain!"

"Quar-ter-her-er-less twain!

"Eight and a half!"

"Eight feet!"

"Seven-ana-half!——"

Another jingle of little bells and the wheels ceased turning altogether. The whistling of the steam was something frightful now—it almost drowned all other noises.

"Stand by to meet her!"

George had the wheel hard down and was standing on a spoke.

"All ready!"

The boat hesitated—seemed to hold her breath, as did the captain and pilots—and then she began to fall away to starboard, and every eye lighted:

"Now then!—meet her! meet her! Snatch her!"

The wheel flew to port so fast that the spokes blended into a spider-web—the swing of the boat subsided—she steadied herself——

"Seven feet!"

"Sev—six and a half!"

"Six feet! Six f——"

Bang! She hit the bottom! George shouted through the tube:

"Spread her wide open! Whale it at her!"

Pow-wow-chow! The escape-pipes belched snowy pillars of steam aloft, the boat ground and surged and trembled—and slid over into——

"M-a-r-k twain!"

"Quarter-her——"

"Tap! tap! tap! (to signify "Lay in the leads.")

And away she went, flying up the willow shore, with the whole silver sea of the Mississippi stretching abroad on every hand.

No Amaranth in sight!

"Ha-ha, boys, we took a couple of tricks that time!" said the captain.

And just at that moment a red glare appeared in the head of the chute and the Amaranth came springing after them!

"Well, I swear!"

"Jim, what is the meaning of that?"

"I'll tell you what's the meaning of it. That hail we had at Napoleon was Wash Hastings, wanting to come to Cairo—and we didn't stop. He's in that pilot-house how, showing those mud turtles how to hunt for easy water."

"That's it! I thought it wasn't any slouch that was running that middle bar in Hog-eye Bend. If it's Wash Hastings—well, what he don't know about the river ain't worth knowing—a regular gold-leaf, kid-glove, diamond-breastpin pilot Wash Hastings is. We won't take any tricks off of him, old man!"

"I wish I'd a stopped for him, that's all."

The Amaranth was within three hundred yards of the Boreas, and still gaining. The "old man" spoke through the tube:

"What is she carrying now?"

"A hundred and sixty-five, sir!"

"How's your wood?"

"Pine all out—cypress half gone—eating up cotton-wood like pie!"

"Break into that resin on the main deck—pile it in, the boat can pay for it!"

Soon the boat was plunging and quivering and screaming more madly than ever. But the Amaranth's head was almost abreast the Boreas' stern.

"How's your steam now, Harry?"

"Hundred and eighty-two, sir!"

"Break up the casks of bacon in the forrard hold! Pile it in! Levy on that turpentine in the fantail—drench every stick of wood with it!"

The boat was a moving earthquake by this time:

"How is she now?"

"A hundred and ninety-six and still a-swelling!—water below the middle gauge-cocks!—carrying every pound she can stand!—nigger roosting on the safety-valve!"

"Good! How's your draft?"

"Bully! Every time a nigger heaves a stick of wood into the furnace he goes out the chimney with it!"

The Amaranth drew steadily up till her jack-staff breasted the Boreas' wheel-house—climbed along inch by inch till her chimney breasted it—crept along, further and further till the boats were wheel to wheel—and then they closed up with a heavy jolt and locked together tight and fast in the middle of the big river under the flooding moonlight! A roar and a hurrah went up from the crowded decks of both steamers—all hands rushed to the guards to look and shout and gesticulate—the weight careened the vessels over toward each other—officers flew hither and thither cursing and storming, trying to drive the people amidships—both captains were leaning over their railings shaking their fists, swearing and threatening—black volumes of smoke rolled up and canopied the scene, delivering a rain of sparks upon the vessels—two pistol-shots rang out, and both captains dodged unhurt, and the packed masses of passengers surged back and fell apart, while the shrieks of women and children soared above the intolerable din——

And then there was a booming roar, a thundering crash, and the riddled Amaranth dropped loose from her hold and drifted helplessly away!

Instantly the fire-doors of the Boreas were thrown open and the men began dashing buckets of water into the furnaces—for it would have been death and destruction to stop the engines with such a head of steam on.

As soon as possible the Boreas dropped down to the floating wreck and took off the dead, the wounded, and the unhurt—at least all that could be got at, for the whole forward half of the boat was a shapeless ruin, with the great chimneys lying crossed on top of it, and underneath were a dozen victims imprisoned alive and wailing for help. While men with axes worked with might and main to free these poor fellows, the Boreas' boats went about, picking up stragglers from the river.

And now a new horror presented itself. The wreck took fire from the dismantled furnaces! Never did men work with a heartier will than did those stalwart braves with the axes. But it was of no use. The fire ate its way steadily, despising the bucket brigade that fought it. It scorched the clothes, it singed the hair of the axmen—it drove them back, foot by foot—inch by inch—they wavered, struck a final blow in the teeth of the enemy, and surrendered. And as they fell back they heard prisoned voices saying:

"Don't leave us! Don't desert us! Don't do it!"

And one poor fellow said:

"I am Henry Worley, stoker of the Amaranth! My poor mother lives in St. Louis. Tell her a lie for a poor devil's sake, please Say I was killed in an instant and never knew what hurt me—though God knows I've neither scratch nor bruise this moment! It's hard to burn up in a coop like this with the whole wide world so near. Good-by, boys—we've all got to come to it at last, anyway!"

The Boreas stood away out of danger, and the ruined steamer went drifting down the stream an island of wreathing and climbing flame that vomited clouds of smoke from time to time, and glared more fiercely and sent its luminous tongues higher and higher after each emission. A shriek at intervals told of a captive that had met his doom. The wreck lodged upon a sand-bar, and when the Boreas turned the next point on her upward journey it was still burning with scarcely abated fury.

When the boys came down into the main saloon of the Boreas, they saw a pitiful sight and heard a world of pitiful sounds. Eleven poor creatures lay dead and forty more lay moaning, or pleading, or screaming, while a score of Good Samaritans moved among them, doing what they could to relieve their sufferings—bathing their skinless faces and bodies with linseed oil and lime-water, and covering the places with bulging masses of raw cotton, that gave to every face and form a dreadful and inhuman aspect.

A little wee French midshipman of fourteen lay fearfully injured, but never uttered a sound till a physician of Memphis was about to dress his hurts. Then he said:

"Can I get well? You need not be afraid to tell me."

"No—I—I am afraid you cannot."

"Then do not waste your time with me—help those that can get well."

"But——"

"Help those that can get well! It is not for me to be a girl. I carry the blood of eleven generations of soldiers in my veins?"

The physician—himself a man who had seen service in his time—touched his hat to this little hero, and passed on.

The head engineer of the Amaranth, a grand specimen of physical manhood, struggled to his feet, a ghastly spectacle, and strode toward his brother, the second engineer, who was unhurt. He said:

"You were on watch. You were boss. You would not listen to me when I begged you to reduce your steam. Take that!—take it to my wife, and tell her it comes from me by the hand of my murderer! Take it—and take my curse with it to blister your heart a hundred years—and may you live so long!"

And he tore a ring from his finger, stripping flesh and skin with it, threw it down and fell dead!

But these things must not be dwelt upon. The Boreas landed her dreadful cargo at the next large town and delivered it over to a multitude of eager hands and warm Southern hearts—a cargo amounting by this time to 39 wounded persons and 22 dead bodies.

And with these she delivered a list of 96 missing persons that had drowned or otherwise perished at the scene of the disaster.

A jury of inquest was impaneled, and after due deliberation and inquiry they returned the inevitable American verdict which has been so familiar to our ears all the days of our lives—"Nobody to blame."—Mark Twain.

Checkers.

A Boston paper of the 18th says: "The checker contest for the championship of the world and $200 a side, between James Wyllie, of Scotland, and William Barker, the "boy player," of this city, which was begun on Wednesday, was concluded yesterday. But three games were played, one being won by Wyllie, and the other two drawn. At the conclusion of the third game Baker gave up play. Of the series, fifty games, forty-two were played, nine being won by Wyllie to Baker's one, the remaining thirty-two games being draws. Wyllie, who intends to remain in this city for two months, will begin another match of fifty games with Mr. C. A. Littlefield, of this city, at the rooms of the Boston Draughts Association, No. 18 Howard street, on Saturday. The report going the rounds during the past few days, to the effect that Mr. Wyllie was willing to play Barker a series of fifty games for $1,000, and not allow his opponent to win a single game, is pronounced by that gentleman to be false.

A LOCOMOTIVE WONDER.—A singular specimen of a locomotive has just been turned out of a machine-shop at Gloucester, N. J., which bids fair to create quite a sensation among railroad men. It is four tons in weight, and designed to run on one rail. It rests upon two wheels, one following the other. The rail or track upon which it is to run, a sample of which is laid in the yard of the builders, is styled a "prismoid, or one-track railway," and is composed of several thicknesses of plank, built upon the style of an inverted keel of a vessel, with a flat rail on the apex. Upon a test trial a speed of about twelve miles an hour was attained, and the inventor and patentee claims that the speed can be almost doubled on a lengthened track. The capacity for running curves is very much greater than the two-rail system. The revolving flanges attached to the engine, and and which run on the outside of each wheel, absolutely lock the rolling stock to the prism, and obviate the necessity of so much heavy rolling stock in light traffic at a high rate of speed. It is also claimed that a prismoidal railway, built with a base of 14 inches, angles 45 degrees, can be built at a cost of $3,000 per mile.

THE will of an eccentric citizen of Cornish, N. H., who made a bequest of $1,000 to the town, the interest to be expended for flags, to be unfurled in various parts of the town during pleasant weather, has been contested by his heirs, lately, on the ground that it provides for a useless expenditure. Judge Foster, of Concord, says differently, however, considering it a very proper bequest, one calculated to keep alive the spirit of union and patriotism, and the memories of the historic periods of the nation, and the flags will continue to wave.

The Virginius Affair—Message of President Grant.

The President, on the 5th inst., transmitted the following message to Congress:

In my annual message of December last, I gave reason to expect that when the full and accurate text of the correspondence relating to the steamer Virginius, which had been telegraphed in cipher, should be received, the papers concerning the capture of the vessel, execution of part of its passengers and crew, and restoration of ship and survivors would be transmitted to Congress. In compliance with the expectations then held out, I now transmit the papers and correspondence on that subject.

On the 26th of September, 1870, the Virginius was registered in the Custom-House at New York, as the property of a citizen of the United States, he having first made the oath required by law that he was the true and only owner of said property, and that there was no subject or citizen of any foreign Prince or State directly or indirectly, by way of trust, confidence or otherwise, interested therein. Having complied with the requisites in the statute in that behalf, she cleared, in the usual way, for the port of Curacoa, and on or about the 4th of October, 1870, sailed for that port. It is now disputed that she made the voyage according to her clearance, and that from that day to this she has not returned within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. It is also understood that she preserved her American papers, and that when within foreign ports she made the practice of putting forth a claim to American nationality, which was recognized by the authorities at such ports. When, therefore, she left the port of Kingston in October last, under the flag of the United States, she would appear to have had, as against all powers except the United States, the right to fly that flag, and to claim its protection, as enjoined by all regularly documented vessels registered as part of our commercial marine. No state of war existed conferring upon the maritime powers the right to molest and detain upon the high seas a documented vessel, and it cannot be pretended that the Virginius had placed herself without the pale of law by acts of piracy against the human race. If her papers were irregular or fraudulent the offense was one against the laws of the United States, justifiable only in their tribunals. When, therefore, it became known that the Virginius had been captured on the high seas by a Spanish man-of-war; that the American flag had been hauled down by the captors; that the vessel had been carried to a Spanish port, and that the Spanish tribunals were taking jurisdiction over the persons of those found on her, and exercising that jurisdiction on American citizens, not only in violation of international law, but in contravention of the provisions of the treaty of 1795, I directed a demand to be made upon Spain for the restoration of the vessel and for the return of the survivors to the protection of the United States; for a salute to the flag and for the punishment of the offending parties. The principles upon which these demands rested could not be seriously questioned, but it was suggested by the Spanish Government that there were grave doubts whether the Virginius was entitled to the character given her by her papers, and that, therefore, it might be proper for the United States, after the surrender of the vessel and survivors, to dispense with the salute of the flag should such facts established to their satisfaction. This seemed to be reasonable and just. I therefore assented to it on the assurance that Spain would then declare that no insult to the flag of the United States had been intended. I also authorized an agreement to be made that, should it be shown to the satisfaction of this Government that the Virginius was improperly bearing the flag, proceedings should be instituted in our courts for the punishment of the offense committed against the United States. On her part, Spain undertook to proceed against those who had offended the sovereignty of the United States, or who had violated their treaty rights.

Their surrender of the vessel and survivors to the jurisdiction of the tribunals of the United States was an admission of the principles on which our demand had been founded. I therefore had no hesitation in agreeing to the arrangement finally made between the two Governments, an arrangement which was moderate and just, and calculated to cement the good relations which have so long existed between Spain and the United States. Under this agreement, the Virginius, with the American flag flying, was delivered to the navy of the United States at Bahia Honda, in the Island of Cuba, on the 16th ult. She was in an unseaworthy condition. In the passage to New York she encountered one of the most tempestuous of our winter storms. At the risk of their lives, the officers and crew placed in charge of her attempted to keep her afloat. Their efforts were unavailing, and she sank off Cape Fear. The prisoners who survived the massacre were surrendered at Santiago de Cuba on the 18th ult., and reached the port of New York in safety.

The evidence submitted on the part of Spain to establish the fact that the Virginius, at the time of her capture, was improperly bearing the flag of the United States, is transmitted herewith, together with the opinion of the Attorney-General thereon, and a copy of the note of the Spanish Minister, expressing, on behalf of his Government, a disclaimer of any intent of dignity to the flag of the United States.

FROM an examination of the census statistics of Austria, Russia, Turkey, Germany, England, France and the United States, a writer in the Medical Record has ascertained that the mean average duration of life among Jews exceeds that of Christians by about five years. The statement is made, also, by Prussia, that there is 1-61 per cent. of deaths among Jews to 2-62 per cent. among the general population; and in France, Christians live, on an average, 36 years and 11 months, but the Jews, 48 years and 9 months.

THE DUKE'S STRATAGEM.

A Milanese Tale.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

The Duke of Milan—Galeazzo named—
Supremely loved Correggia, widely famed
For every charm a maiden might possess;
And, in her heart, she loved the Duke no less;
Though each, awhile (so churlish Fate designed
To mar their bliss) knew not the other's mind,
But hoped and feared in silence; till, at last,
When many a moon of trembling doubt was passed,
And Gossip vainly had essayed to seek
The cause of Galeazzo's pallid cheek
And moody air—some ladies of the Court
Addressed him boldly thus (as half in sport,
And half in earnest):—"Sire! we all can see
Your Highness is in love!—and now, that we May pay our loyal service where the same
Is justly due, we fain would know the name
Of Her—the happy lady of your choice!"
Surprised, abashed, the Duke, with faltering voice
In civil sort such merry answers made
As best might serve the question to evade,
In vain! as one by one their weapons fail,
With fresh artillery they the Duke assail,
Until, at length, 'tis clear the man must yield,
By clamor overpowered—or fly the field!
"A truce—a truce!" he cried, "for mercy's sake!
Now—please you all!—a banquet I will make,
Such as may suit so fair a company;
Come, one and all, and see what you shall see,
To aid—perchance to end—your merry quest."
And all said "Aye!"—Correggia with the rest.
The banquet over, Galeazzo set
Upon the board a curious cabinet
In which, upon a panel, was portrayed,
In happiest art, the picture of a maid;
(Some clever painter's fancy). "There!" said he
"All ye who choose, my lady-love may see!"
Now, when the fair Correggia—lingering last,
For fearfulness,—observed that all who passed
The pictured girl, in silence turned away
As from a face unknown,—in deep dismay
She took her turn to gaze; when, God of Grace!
She saw no painted image; but the face
Which her own features, radiantly fair,
Reflected, blushing, in a mirror there!
And so it was the two true loves were known;
And so it came to pass that not alone
The happy Galeazzo filled the ducal throne!

SEVERAL Irishmen were disputing one day upon their own best points, when one said in an aggressive manner, "Faith, and I'm a brick." "And, indade," said another, "I'm a bricklayer," and felled the first speaker to the ground.

"HOW NOW?" a friend said to Jones, finding him looking unusually cheerful and sprightly, notwithstanding the fact that he had been up pretty nearly all night. "You don't seem to be affected by the crisis." And Jones merely remarked, "No such thing; it's a boy.'

AN Illinois man got up before dawn, lately, to see the sun rise, and was shot by the exasperated owner of a melon-patch next door. In May last he made a similar effort, and was bitten on the heel by a strange dog. He thinks of hiring a boy to do the early rising for his family.

SMITH says he doesn't know much about music, but if it's a great thing for a man who has spent thousands of dollars on his voice, and has studied for years to sing high-chest C, he thinks his kettle at home can beat it, for every evening, with cheery voice, it sings away up to high-chest tea. And it's only a dollar kettle, too.

A QUEER mistake was made by a young lady in Indiana who sought to demolish an unfaithful lover by publishing some verses addressed to him, in which, after prophesying her immediate dissolution, she said: "Come, gaze upon my dust, false one;" but the compositor spelled dust with a "b," and the young man went to see her the next evening.

MASTER COVILLE received a prize Friday afternoon for a composition on Reverence, and further distinguished himself in the evening, on the occasion of the pastor's visit, by shutting the tails of the dominie's coat in the parlor door and impelling him to leave them there by introducing a pin in his chair. The pastor returned home with a cloud on his brow, and one of Coville's coats on his back, leaving Master Coville executing a hornpipe in the woodshed, under the auspices of his father.—Danbury News.

THE GRAIN TRADE OF AMERICA.—The chief features of the grain trade of the country are the increased concentration of the exports from the four chief Atlantic ports. From 1866 to 1872 the percentage of increase in the receipts of grain at six of the leading Atlantic ports stood as follows: Philadelphia, 232; Baltimore, 150; Montreal, 70; New York, 58; Boston, 50; Portland, 44. Taking only the ports named above, they aggregated, in 1872, total receipts amounting to 83,010,803 bushels, against 90,217,375 at New York. Philadelphia ranks next to New York, her receipts having reached 24,117,150 bushels. During the same period the receipts at Boston were 16,701,934 bushels. With the opening of the Hoosac tunnel, the grain trade of Boston will be largely increased.

QUININE CULTURE.—Some years ago Sir George Clerk suggested that, in consequence of the limited quantity of quinine to be obtained, an attempt should be made to lay out plantations for the cultivation of the valuable bark. Acting on this, Mr. Markham made several expeditions to Peru and India to select a site for the proposed enterprise. A stretch of ground, known as the Nilgheri plantation, was chosen, and planting commenced. The entire cost of introducing the bark-culture was £70,000. We learn by the last issue of the Athenæum that now the annual sales realize a net profit of from £4,000 to £5,000. The last consignment (23,646 pounds) was sold in Mincing lane for 5s. 9d. per pound, a "prodigious price."

THE Dubuque Herald says that a gentleman of that city lately ordered a cutter from Portland, Maine, which arrived in due time. The freight on the cutter from Portland to Chicago was $2.10; from Chicago to Dubuque it was $5.35. The distance from Portland to Chicago is 1,100 miles; the distance from Chicago to Dubuque is 200 miles.

Brigham Young's Favorite Wife.

[St. Louis Globe's Interview with Ann Eliza Young.]

How large is his little family circle?

He had nineteen wives until I left, and forty-five children.

How does he support them all?

Well, the most of them support themselves. Brigham compels them to do it. For instance, he only allows enough to each one to purchase the bare necessaries of life—calico dresses! Women in Utah have the same pride and ambition about their personal appearance that they have anywhere else. If they want anything better, they are compelled to take in boarders or do sewing, or something of that sort. That is the way he treats all of them but the favorite, Amelia Fulsom. She dresses in silk and satin, eats at the same table with him, and does nothing all day. The rest eat in the same dining-room, and they are compelled to look on. Fulsom can do anything she likes with him.

It would be interesting to know which of the nineteen wives was able to capture Brigham, and maintain an ascendency over him. How is she able to manage him?

By her temper; she has an awful temper, and she can scold him into anything.

Is she good-looking? No, she is ugly and over 40 years old. They say I am jealous, but that is not the case.

Well, then, do her charms lie in her intellect? No, I ain't jealous of her a bit. She is the reverse of refined—indeed, she is the coarsest and most vulgar of all the wives of Mr. Young. Her reputation is bad—that is, it was bad until she married Brigham. I don't like to repeat what is said of her all over Salt Lake. She rules him by her strong will and bad temper.

How does he manage the rest of his wives?

He keeps them at a distance, and no familiarity is allowed from them. They don't dare to speak to him except now and then when he is extra good-natured. Brigham has been a good deal of a flirt in his day. There is no excuse for his meanness toward his wives, because he is enormously wealthy.

The Habit of Saving.

The only absolutely certain way of inculcating habits of economy is to begin with the children, and accustom them to self-control and self-denial by saving a portion of their pocket-money or the earnings of odd minutes. There will be even a greater necessity for economy in the next generation than this, since now, the bounteous gifts of nature are being very lavishly drawn upon, and our successors are likely to live under narrower conditions than we do. The city of Ghent, Belgium, has set us a good example in this matter. Without Government influence, and mainly through the instrumentality of the school-masters and school-mistresses of that city, five-sevenths of the children who attend the schools have become savings-bank depositors. They bring their centimes to their teachers, who deposit for them; and 13,032 of the attendants upon the schools are thus practicing frugality. Out of 7,989 boys and girls in the primary schools, 7,583 have savings-bank accounts, the aggregate sum deposited by them, according to a paper read before the British Association by J. G. Fitch, being 274,602 francs. In the infant schools (the habit of saving begins thus early) there are 3,039 children, of whom 1,020 are depositors of 66,523 francs. In the primary schools for the classes who pay for instruction, there are 1,079 scholars, 640 of whom deposit 22,687 francs; and in the schools for adults, held evenings and Sundays, out of 3,285 men and women, 2,889 are depositors to the amount of 99,252 francs. Thus over $100,000 are deposited in the savings bank through this agency in that little city.

A Petition for a New National Holiday.

A petition has been presented to the House of Representatives which the signers will, at all events, succeed in keeping out of the musty pigeon-holes of the committee. It is from fifty citizens of the city of Buffalo, N. Y., praying Congress that the 12th day of February, the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, be declared a national holiday. The petition is signed on parchment and framed in black ebony, with rows of silver stars on the inner border, and is about two feet and a half square. The frame is encased in a rosewood lid, highly polished, having for a bas-relief a shield of bird's-eye maple, bearing the following inscription in indented letters: "Memorial to Congress of fifty citizens of Buffalo New York." The obverse side of the frame, bearing the signatures, is of Russia leather, and has the inscription, "Congress the Forty-third." It was presented to the House by the Hon. Lyman K. Bass. It will make an ornament for the committee-room, at all events, and always prove a reminder that such a petition is before them. When the petition was presented Mr. Bass placed it in front of the Speaker's table. When that officer's eye fell upon it, he said: "Whoever put that tablet there take it away, as it is in gross violation of the rules of the House."—Washington Star.

Marriages of Blood Relations.

Statistics presented to the French Academy show that the marriages of blood relations form about two per cent. of all the marriages in France, and that the deaf and dumb offspring, at birth, of consanguineous marriages, are, in proportion to the deaf and dumb born in ordinary wedlock—at Lyons, full 25 per cent.; at least 25 per cent. in Paris, and 30 per cent. in Bordeaux—the proportions of the deaf and dumb, by birth, increasing with the degree of blood relationship. The data obtained show that, if the danger of having a deaf and dumb child in ordinary marriage, represented by figures, is one, there will be 18 in marriages between first cousins, 37 in marriages between uncles and nieces, and 70 in marriages between nephews and aunts. It appears, too, that the most healthy parents, if related in blood, may have deaf and dumb children; while deaf and dumb parents, if not related, very rarely have deaf and dumb children.

To the Suffering.—An old retired physician, who is candid enough to tell the truth about progress, has declared that the recent discovery by Dr. Walker, of California, of his herb remedy, Vinegar Bitters, is one of the most important in medicine. He has tested them thoroughly, in his own family, among his friends, and upon himself; and he is driven to the conclusion that they possess rare and unexcelled curative properties. He says of them: "They contain no dangerous drug. They never reduce the patient—never render one liable to take cold—never interfere with the every-day business of life—never make their continuous use a condition of cure, and are adapted to even the most delicate organization. They act as kindly on the tender infant, the delicate female, or infirm old age, as on the vigorous and athletic system; exercising healthful effects upon every blood vessel—on the brain, nerves and lymphatics—on the Blood, Bile, Gastric Juice, etc., enriching impoverished fluids, and imparting vigor to mind and body." 24

The author of an English publication states that, after the expulsion of the Jews, the Lombards (or merchants of Genoa, Lucca, Florence and Venice) succeeded them as the money-lenders and bankers of England. About the middle of the thirteenth century these Italians established themselves in Lombard street, remitting money to Italy by bills of exchange, and transmitting to the Pope and Italian prelates their fees and the incomes of their English benefices. Mr. Burgon has shown that to these industrious strangers we owe many of our commercial terms, such, for instance, as debtor, creditor, cash, usance, bank, bankrupt, journal, diary, ditto, and even our £ s d, which originally stood for libri, soldi and danari. In the early part of the fifteenth century we find these swarthy merchants advancing loans to the State, and having the customs mortgaged to them by way of security. Pardons and holy wafers were also sold in this street before the Reformation.

Let the People Speak.

R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir: Your Favorite Prescription has done my wife a world of good. She has taken nearly two bottles and has felt better the past two weeks than at any time in the past two years. No more periodical pains; none of that aching back or dragging sensation in her stomach she has been accustomed to for several years. I have so much confidence in it that I would be perfectly willing to warrant to certain customers of ours who would be glad to get hold of relief at any expense. I have tried many Patent Medicines, but never had any occasion to extol one before.

Very truly yours,
Geo. B. Whiting.

Matrimony.

All young men and most young women have an interest in this subject, as it is a condition in life to which all look forward and hope to attain at some future period, and if the young man has any prudence he will not assume the responsibilities of married life until he can make some provision for the support of those dependent upon him should he be called away by an early death. In the great majority of cases this provision can be secured by means of a Life Insurance policy that will cost but a small sum annually, and yet provide all the security that can be desired. One of the most reliable of these companies is the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, through which life Policies may be obtained or agencies secured by application to the home office, or to Jas. CINCINNATI GAZETTE.

The general character of The Cincinnati Gazette is so well known that it needs no explanation. While it is a Republican paper, it asks no favors of those in power, and it is independent to that it fearlessly exposes abuses, whether inside or outside of the party with which it acts.

Its value as an agricultural paper is recognized by practical farmers, thousands of whom exchange their views through its columns. As a commercial paper, it is standard authority.

The farmers' movement is an honest one, and it has our sympathy and will have our support. We do not recognize it as a political party. It does not claim to be such, but it has principles which we desire to see engrafted into Republican platforms, and it includes measures which we shall labor to have carried out by the Republican party.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, January 15, 1874.

A bill to do away with the Salary Grab passed the Senate and House last Tuesday.

Pomeroy failed to put in an appearance when his bribery case was called the other day, and his twenty thousand dollars bail is therefore forfeited to the State. But that is nothing, he is a Republican and an ex-United States Senator.

* * *

The bill introduced by Senator Pratt, of this State, to reduce the pay of Congressmen to five thousand dollars a year, and providing for covering the excess of that amount hitherto stolen by members, into the Treasury, was defeated by a vote of 45 to 14.

* * *

It is somewhat astonishing to see the number of Republicans who now talk about thieving officials just as the Liberals and Democrats did during the late Presidential campaign. Many of these gentlemen appear to have had their eyes opened by the developments of the last year.

* * *

Kentucky has voluntarily taken steps to give her colored children all the advantages of her free school system. It has needed no civil rights bill to accomplish this enlightened step, and it is supposed that Kentucky is the most ultra in her prejudice against the negroes of any state in the South.

* * *

Morton to the breach. The ugly fact stares the Radical leaders at Washington in the face, that to provide against further increase in the public debt, a loan must be made or taxation increased, to meet ordinary expenses. Oh! what a conclusion to those roseate sentences of Morton in the last campaign.

* * *

The Supreme Court of this State, last week, two judges dissenting, rendered an opinion declaring the 9th section of the Baxter temperance law unconstitutional. The section is that under which a person may be fined for intoxication and also be compelled to testify where he obtained his liquor.

The Inter Ocean says that there is a prospect that Russia will have to come to America for breadstuffs. The harvests having failed in the southern part of that Empire, nine-tenths of the population of some of the districts are represented to be nearly destitute. There is a famine in Bengal, and England had hoped to supply her starving millions there with grain received from the fertile districts of Southern Russia. This being impossible, there is a prospect of a large demand upon this country, which, we are, happily, able to meet.

Uniformity of Text Books.

Among other encouraging signs, one in particular is worth mention. I refer to the efforts being made to secure uniformity in our text books. Our county, like most others in this State, has been weighed down by an unnecessary variety of text books. This state of things was due to a variety of causes. Teachers, in changing from one district to another, had too often urged upon the people to procure new books, for no other reason than a preference the teacher had for a certain work. The next year another teacher would procure another change, for a similar reason. Again, book agents have, by various means, scattered new text books over the country, and in their zeal to serve their employers, the publishing houses, have done a great deal to keep our text books in this state of confusion. Publishers themselves have changed their text books every few years, giving rise to a variety of text books on the same subject and by the same author. Hence, when people went to a book store to ask for a work by a certain author, they stood an even chance of getting one of three or four different editions, and when all these were taught together in the school, they added greatly to the confusion already existing. Other text books, as was especially the case with the Grammar in use, were found to be totally inadequate to meet the growing wants of our schools. Other books, again, as with the old series of the McGuffey Readers, had gone out of print, and as the present supply became worn out, books of the new series would have to be purchased at full retail rates. But by adopting the new series in time, an exchange price could be had, that would lessen the expense of procuring new books to about one half retail rates. In view of this state of things, the County Board, at its first meeting, September 1st, adopted text books in Reading, Geography and Grammar. These were McGuffey's new series of Readers, already in use in nine-tenths of our schools, Geographies No. 3 and No. 4, of the Monteith and McNally series, and Harvey's Grammar. These are all good works, and it is gratifying to state that the work of making them uniform is being carried forward in a quiet and satisfactory manner. I have heard of but few of the schools in the country districts that object to the change, and they are rapidly but quietly pulling into line with the rest.

Of the incorporated towns, Auburn has made the change throughout. Waterloo and Butler have each been, for some time, using a part of the books adopted, but I believe, have taken no steps to secure uniformity with the rest of the County. It is hoped they will yet see this matter in the proper light.

That this effort to secure uniformity has thus far been a success, we owe in great measure to the liberal spirit of the people, and the sensible manner in which teachers and school officers have labored to effect it. By thus pursuing a reasonable and proper course, we have accomplished more, and at the same time, had no such trouble and quarreling as has been witnessed in some of our neighboring counties.

Our best Tea we still keep at the reduction of 15 cents per pound. We have all other grades, from 20 cents per pound up. Our 1 10 is the best in the market, and equal to any Tea sold at 50 cents more. Our only secret in selling Teas so much lower than other houses is that our immense sales of two and three chests a day enable us to purchase direct from Importers, and we, selling direct to the consumer, our customers save the profit of the speculator, and wholesale merchant, which is at least 10 to 20 cents per pound.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

J. A. BARNS, CONDUCTOR.

Township Institutes.

RICHLAND TOWNSHIP.

According to previous adjournment the Richland Township Teachers' Institute met at the school house in district No. 13 of said township. The meeting was called to order by A. Conrad, Trustee. On motion J. S. Brown was elected Secretary, pro tem, and J. T. Johnston Critic.

The exercises were opened by J. T. Johnston, on the subject of penmanship.

The exercise in reading was conducted by W. H. Rakestraw. This exercise was participated in by all the teachers, and consisted principally in the recitation of selections requiring strong emphasis.

Physiology was next in order by J. A. Crum. The recitation was conducted by asking general questions on the subject.

Afternoon session—After partaking of a sumptuous dinner, prepared by several of the householders, the institute was called to order by the President, A. Conrad, who announced to the institute that time would be given for the consideration of any questions pertaining to the authority of teachers in their schools.

The question, "How far does a teacher's authority extend over his pupils both in and outside of the school room?" was first presented. Mr. Conrad read the law on this subject, which sets forth plainly that the teacher has the right to punish a scholar for any misdemeanor occurring either in the school room, on the play ground or on the roads leading to and from the school.

The question, "How should teachers deal with scholars whose parents indulge them in the use of profane language, and whether a teacher has the right to expel a scholar who persists in using such language?" was asked. Mr Conrad replied emphatically, "punish them for every such offense and thereby try and inculcate better moral principles into the children of such parents; but if they persisted in a constant use of such language notwithstanding, expel them.

Mr. Conrad, by request, read and explained the law and the resolution adopted by the County Board of Education on the use of school houses for other than school purposes.

The question, "Are township institutes beneficial, if so, should teachers be excused from attending them?" was taken up and discussed. Each teacher was called upon to speak upon the question, and all, although some reluctantly, took a part in the general discussion.

The subject of astronomical geography was next taken up by J. T. Johnston. He refered first to the opinion of the ancients with regard to the shape of the Earth, and Galileo's opinion regarding its revolution on its axis. His remarks upon the whole subject were quite direct in their application, and upon the whole, instructive.

The critic's report, by J. T. Johnston, was very kindly directed, and received in a friendly manner by all who participated.

On motion, J. G. Ackley was elected critic, R. H. Gilbert, secretary and A. Conrad President for our next meeting.

The following teachers were assigned topics on which to give instruction at our next meeting: J. W. Squires, arithmetic; J. G. Ackley, history; J. S. Barns, reading; A. Conrad, grammar; J. T. Johnston, orthography. Question for general discussion—"Resolved that night schools are beneficial."

On motion, a vote of thanks was tendered the householders of district No. 13, for their kindness and hospitality shown toward the teachers and visitors.

The institute adjourned to meet at Fegler's school house on the second Saturday of February.

A. CONRAD, President.

J. S. BARNES, Secretary.

TROY TOWNSHIP.

An institute was held in Troy township, at school house No. 4, January 3rd, 1874. D. W. Weitz was chosen President, and Jennie Porter Secretary. Exercises in reading, writing, arithmetic and penmanship were conducted by D. W. Weitz, Miss Katie Smith, D. A. Black and others. Each was followed by discussion.

An evening session was held. Several who were not teachers, were present at both sessions. All were satisfied that much good will be accomplished at these meetings.

D. W. WEITZ, President.

MISS JENNIE PORTER, Secretary.

STAFFORD TOWNSHIP.

The teachers of Stafford township met at the Center school house January 10th, 1874. The chairman called the meeting to order. Most of the teachers were present, and also a number of spectators. The first exercise was reading, conducted by Mr. J. Oberlin, in which all the teachers participated. This was followed by exercises in long division, writing and proportion; each of which was thoroughly discussed by the respective teachers present. Lastly, an exercise in spelling, in which all manifested a great interest. Work was then assigned to each teacher. Adjourned to meet February 14th, 1874.

SARAH E. SHOUB, Secretary.

There is a young lady in town who sings, "Mother said I mus'nt," but she does every opportunity she gets.

Our farmers south of town are complaining about their pigs tails coming up missing.

Messrs. Porter and Markle are now in Detroit, undergoing treatment for their sight. They are reported doing well.

Rooster fighting is still going on with the juvenile population. Several game chickens were purchased at Waterloo, but did'nt amount to much.

Only $8 from Cincinnati to Baltimore and Washington, $10 to Philadelphia and $13.50 to New York by way of the Baltimore & Ohio.

Have you seen those new goods just received at E. Vordermark & Sons. The ladies will be pleased with them. Go at once before they are all gone.

Our fellow townsman, M. L. Duck, Esq. leaves us on the first of next month for North Manchester, where he will engage in the furniture trade.

Notice is hereby given that I will not be responsible for any debt that may be contracted by my wife, and I therefore ask that no one trust her on my account.

GABRIEL ERNST.

For job printing,
As well as advertising,
Always give the COURIER a call.

The Methodist denomination, at Corunna, have commenced a protracted effort this week.

The livery men will, from all appearance, have a good chance to do business. The roads have been quite a draw back in this line, during the winter.

There's a young man around here who will commit matrimony via of the Air Line, off you don't make dot girl shut up in the house.

The Baptists are still keeping up their protracted meetings. Another baptism was performed at the Creek on last Sunday morning.

J. J. VanAuken has been appointed County Surveyor, and is now ready to attend to any call that may be made on him in this line.

Root & Company's advertisement is changed this week. Great bargains are offered by this popular establishment.—Read it.

Some of those fellows who "swear off" on New Year's were planing out rail-fences on their "homeward bound" last Monday night.

Our friends at St. John's will please watch out for their package on Thursday evenings. Last week it was seen on the platform the next morning.

We have a beautiful picture which a certain young man in town may have its a female, by coming after it. Nobody will see him, because he need'nt take it walking.

Last week was the one set for prayer—Was well used by our several churches, and many of our citizens, who seldom visit these places, were out each evening during the week.

Our schools, after a holiday vacation, have resumed operation again. This term, it is generally talked, has begun in good earnest with every teacher firm at their post.

Joseph Titus, Esq., of Howell, Mich., gave us a call last week. Mr. T. is an old newspaper man, having been connected with some of the most prominent journals of that State.

The finest picture we have yet seen is that of Miss Jones in the postoffice. It was done at Gordon's gallery, in Case's Hall and shows that degree of art in the picture line not excelled by any.

The Dramatic Troupe expect to be ready to give Old Honesty and the Persecuted Dutchman, by Friday evening, Jan. 23, 1874. This is a splendid bill and a good entertainment may be expected.

Sedan has gone back on the dance business. Heretofor she had one and two a week, but the smashing up of that little shop 'round the corner keeps most of our boys at home.

Sawlogs are beginning to come in slowly. When the roads get in a good condition there will be a enormous amount brought in, as a great many have been cut in this vicinity.

John L. Davis, Esq., has a new method of collecting, and will send a statement of account to each person indebted to him Those owing him can save him much time and writing by a prompt settlement.

There has not been much marrying done in the past several weeks. That panic played hob with some people, said a candidate for this honor, on being informed that the license had been raised one dollar.

The demand for wood is not so great as it usually is this time of the year.—Many of our citizens laid in a good supply of this article during the summer, and saved much trouble by so doing.

We are compelled to leave out a great deal of reading matter for our educational column this week, and have enough now for our next. This will account for the non-appearance of several articles.

STATIONERY.—The nicest styles of all sizes of stationery, from foolscap down to the tiniest bills-doux paper, has just been received at Abright & Shepherds. If you want something good give them a call.

In another column will be found the advertisement of the old reliable jewelry store of Abright & Shepherd. They have just received a new lot of watches, men's jewelry and so forth. Call and see them in the new brick.

The time is up for the payment of subscriptions to the Eel River road. The subscribers should remember that a few of our citizens have already advanced the money now due, and they should make every effort to pay up promptly.

The following officers have been installed in DeKalb Lodge No. 214, F. & A. M. for the present term:

J E Rose, W M
A L Hollipeter S W
M C Markle J W
F E Davenport, Secretary,
S Lauferty, Treasurer,
J H Ford,
Guy Plum,
Geo Wagoner, } Trustees.

Those who have claims against the Baltimore & Ohio railroad under the contract of Higgins Bros. & Squires will see in another column that they are to be paid.—Read it. We have had a good opinion of this firm and they are bound to do the fair thing.

The Butler News is prospering. We were in the office just a moment the other day, and found Weamer in a good humor, a sure sign that business is good. The News has some two columns of legals and that's what we call a fat take, a good deal better than the tax list.

Frank Barclay, Esq., one of our best citizens living a few miles west of town, went to Detroit last week to be treated for an old spinal affection, from which he had suffered severely. He was brought home a corpse last Tuesday having died the day before from a sudden and painful attack of the disease.

Notwithstanding the dull winter months are upon us, yet the crowds of customers keep pouncing in at the new shoe store, in the Odd Fellows' building. The prices are still low and the stock as large as ever. When you come to town, farmer, call at this popular place and examine their prices and goods

We learn that one of our lady school teachers kept a scholar after dismissing the school, for the purpose of giving him a little "strap oil." She told her reason and ordered "off that jacket," when the lad gave her a good, square buss, and then walked out of the room, leaving her alone to enjoy the effect of so strange a catastrophe.

BRO. MAYS.—Permit me to return my thanks to the citizens of Auburn, and members of the St. Johns Reform church, for the presents made me on the evening of the 12th, inst. May God bless them for their kindness and give them those blessings and gifts which are imperishable at his right hand.

W. B. SANDOE, Pastor.

A little episode comes from Waterloo One of its citizens signed a petition to sell whiskey. The better half of the husband didn't approve, and the consequence was that instead of tea at supper, whisky was substituted and the husband had the good sense to see and appreciate the situation. A great many would have regarded that change as a tide in their affairs, which at the flow leads on to fortune, or somewhere else.

We were misinformed as to the death of B. F. Blair last week at Newville, We learn that he is improving rapidly, but was very close to death's door, and we make the correction with pleasure. A friend of ours was telling us the other day that he had heard of such a one being so sick that the doctors had no hopes About five minutes after he learned this, he was turning a corner and ran against the very man reported dying. "Such is life."

The Northern Indianian comes out this year with a new head and dress. If we would dare say so we might remark that the head is overdone and lacks harmony with the body of the paper, but as we are a little afraid of Reub, we would not say so publicly for the world. It is a good paper and deserves the large patronage it is receiving. As to the quantity of reading matter we think the COURIER, holds it level.

A circular from the Howard Association of Memphis in response to a contribution from the citizens of this place last fall says: "The response of kind-hearted friends to the appeal put forth by the association was so prompt and generous, that by the time we had received anything like a general reply to our circular, they found themselves with as much money in Bank as they were likely to need; and, in fact, upon the subsidence of the epidemic, it was ascertained that they had a surplus with which they have not yet decided what to do.

Installations.

At a regular meeting of the Auburn Lodge No. 116, I. O. O. F. last Wednesday evening, the following members were duly installed as officers for the present term:

Wm. McIntyre. N G.
T. C. Mays, V. G.
E. E. Williams, Secretary.
J. L. Roth, P. Secretary.
S. L. Yandes, Treasurer.
Wm. McIntyre,
A. Robbins,
W. Griswold, } Trustees

City papers are paid for publishing notices of religious meetings, marriages, obituaries, society meetings, political tickets, commencement of schools, Sabbath-school meetings, subscription in advance The Government carries city papers by the car load across the continent for the same postage it demands of the country paper for carrying it two or three miles, or for simply handing it out of the office. Country papers are expected to publish all these for nothing, and carry, as they generally do, an average of a year's delinquency, of its subscribers, instead of payment in advance. The country publisher, thrown into competition with the well paid city publishers, must pay high cash prices for his paper, and other articles used in his business. Yet he is expected to make a paper equal in size and in mechanical appearances to the pampered city journals.

The Toledo Commercial says: "A recent change in the firm of C. Gerber & Co. occurring by the retirement of the junior partner—Mr. Maher—Mr. Gerber has associated with him our enterprising fellow citizen, Mr. M. O. Waggoner, who is hardly if any less well known than Mr. Gerber himself." We became acquainted with Mr. Waggoner while connected with the Guardian Mutual Life Insurance Co., and know him to be a gentleman of superior business qualifications. In possession of an energy that has marked him as one of the foremost men of the "Corn City," kind and affable in manners, liberal and enterprising in everything, he may well be regarded as one of the prominent men of that city. His connection with the house of Gerber, will not only inspire confidence but place it far in advance of anything that can be mustered against them. Our friend C. Gerber the head of the house has a national reputation. He has flourished like a green bay horse, both in physique and pocket, and is the jolliest and at the same time wide-awake fellow we ever met. Success to the new firm.

ON THE RECORD.—The COURIER cannot rejoice any more than we do that our acts are on the record, it being the place we prefer to have them, however much we may object to the conclusions drawn from them by some. And, notwithstanding Mays' strong desire to be a temperance man and a whisky man at the same time, he, too, is making a record; and he made a very large entry in it a few evenings ago, when it required the aid of several friends to wake him up and assist him from the Fort Wayne train, on its arrival in Auburn. Oh, Tommy, at this rate your record will soon be full.—Press.

That first sentence is as much as to say that you temperance folks may go to the devil, we glory in the fact that we signed the whisky bill.

The second sentence might have been made a good joke at our expense, had the writer been possessed of the ability to handle it properly, but that unconscionable desire to prevaricate and misrepresent will always have a firm admirer in the person of C. Washington Baxter. We were sound asleep and had to be waked at Auburn, but we were not assisted from the train. Besides there were others from Auburn in Fort Wayne that day so that we can "vindicate." But we don't care how soon the Press makes our record full upon such charges or insinuations as these, we have never as yet, lent our name to the side of whisky and drunkedness.

The Butler News gives our neighbor a rap over the knuckles for the same propensity. It says:—

The Butler News pretends to having been told that farmers haul their wheat to Butler from two miles west of Waterloo. We fear its editor lacks 'experience' in lieing.—Press.

How the child talks. And he says we lack 'experience' in lieing. Of course we do, and we don't intend to be coaxed into the habit by Bro. Baxter, either. If people living near Waterloo prefer to bring their wheat to Butler where they can realize more for it, we can't help it. Farmers are in the habit of going where they can realize the market price for their wheat, and consequently they come to Butler.

Annual Meeting of the N. E. I. Agricultural Association.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the N. E. I. Agricultural Association took place in Lockhart's new hall, at two o'clock last Monday. Pres Chamberlain occupied the chair, and notwithstanding the bad condition of the roads, a large majority of the stock were represented. The reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were read, showing that, under all the circumstances, the financial affairs of the Association were in a very flattering condition. The election for directors for the ensuing year resulted in the unanimous choice of the following stockholders:

Orrin C. Clark	Christain Sheets,
Aaron D Moore	John Buchanan,
Capt M B Willis.	James D Kelley
Miles Waterman,	Thomas C Mays.
B F Greenwood,	Philip Parnell
R M Lockhart,	John Leas, Jr.
Dr J N Chamberlain	Benj B Long,
R N Crooks,	John Butt,
C A O McClellan	John Parnell,
Charles K Baxter	Cyrus Bowman.

After congratulatory remarks by several stockholders, Mr. Lockhart stated he had concluded to christen his new audience room "Agricultural Hall" and he tendered the free use of it to the Association, in which to hold their meetings.—The liberal offer was accepted with thanks after which the stockholders adjourned.

The new directors then assembled for organization. Miles Waterman was made temporary chairman, and C K Baxter, secretary. The following executive officers were then chosen for the following year:

Dr J N Chamberlain, President,
Thomas C Mays, Vice President,
John Butt, Secretary,
Benajah B Long, Treasurer,

Dr. J N Chamberlain, C A O McClellan, A S Leas, R Wes McBride, John Jeas, Jr., Executive Committee.

R M Lockhart was chosen delegate to the State Board of Agriculture, which is in session this week, at Indianapolis.—Much regret was expressed by all when it became known that Mr McBride peremptorily declined to serve another term as secretary, but the Association has been fortunate in securing his successor. The Board, upon the recommendation of the stockholders, passed a resolution fixing the annual salary of the secretary $100, and the treasurer $35, and requiring those officers to give bonds, in $5,000 each for the faithful performance of their duties.

There is a change in the running time of trains on the Eel River road. An express train has been put on going west at 9.10 a. m. and east at 1:45 p. m. Correction next week.

We notice a neat sign waiving in front of the Post Office. Its the handiwork of our friend, J. G. Reynolds.

A DASTARDLY attempt was made, the other day, to kill Judge S. T. Morris, of Brooklyn, N. Y., with an infernal machine which was sent to his house. The Judge opened the box, but fortunately the matches did not strike in such a manner as to explode the torpedo contained in it. Judge Morris is an active prosecutor of the corrupt Brooklyn ring.

RICHLAND county, Ohio, is the latest victim of the emotional dishonesty so fashionable among custodians of public moneys. Its Treasurer has fled, leaving his accounts more than a hundred thousand dollars short....A shocking domestic tragedy has enacted at West Jefferson, Ohio, a few days ago. While Clinton Knauff, aged 17, son of a widow, was playing the violin, he was interrupted by his sister, an esteemed young lady, who jerked the bow from his hand and entreated him to cease playing on the Sabbath. The young man became enraged and seized the fire-poker, striking her on the head and inflicting a wound from which she died almost instantly.

Pavia at Madrid is variously regarded at Washington. The impression seems to prevail, however, that the overthrow of Castelar will throw impediments in the way of Minister Cushing's mission to Madrid—the abolition of slavery in the Antilles—and will not have a tendency to render our commercial fleet in Cuban waters exempt from the depredations of Spanish war vessels.

COMMISSIONER DOUGLASS gives it as his opinion that the worst effects of the late panic on the revenues of the country have been felt, and that henceforth there will be a steady recovery....Bills have been introduced into both Houses of Congress providing for a division of Dakota Territory....The public debt increased nearly eight and a half millions of dollars during December. Foreign.

GEN. CORTINAS has been installed as Mayor of Matamoras, Mexico, and the rioting is at an end....The investigation ordered by the English authorities into the Ville du Havre disaster exonerates Capt. Surmont from the charges of neglect of duty....A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph, from St. Petersburg, says the article in the treaty between Russia and Bokhara abolishing slavery is directly due to the exertions of Secretary Schuyler and all the members of the American Legation at St. Petersburg.

SPAIN has passed through another bloodless revolution. The Cortes, on the 2d of January, gave a majority of 20 against Castelar, on two separate votes. Gen. Pavia, a friend of President Castelar, thereupon took possession of the palace of the Cortes with 14,000 troops, dissolved the Cortes much in the manner that Oliver Cromwell dissolved the long parliament, and called together the most distinguished members of all parties for the purpose of forming a new government. These extreme measures, Gen. Pavia declared, were the only means of saving the country. A new Ministry was immediately formed, as follows: President, Serrano; Minister of Foreign Affairs, Sagasta; Minister of War, Zavala; Minister of Justice, Figuerola; Minister of Agriculture, Becerra; Minister of Finance, Echegarray, Minister of the Interior, Garcia Ruiz; Minister of Marine, Topete. Gen. Pavia, notwithstanding his course is approved by the provinces, is to be court-martialed for treason....A famine prevails in the Russian province of Samana....The English court having proclaimed the Loch Earn blameless and eulogized Capt. Robertson, the French court, on the principle, perhaps, that one good turn deserves another, proclaims the Ville du Havre blameless and eulogizes Capt. Surmont; all of which is tantamount to an official announcement that no one is to blame.

MADRID dispatches of the 5th inst. state that a decree had been promulgated suspending the constitutional guarantees, and putting in force throughout Spain the law of 1870 for the maintenance of public order. The new Minister of the Interior, Garcia Ruiz, has ordered the publication of all Carlist and Intransigente newspapers to be stopped. Castelar, in a letter addressed to the country, says he must protest with all his energy against the recent brutal coup d'etat. He concludes: "My conscience will not permit me to associate with demagogues, and conscience and honor refuse to accept a situation created by bayonets." The besieging army at Cartagena has accepted the new Government. The national militia in Madrid has been disarmed. An armed rising in Saragossa was suppressed after eight hours' fighting....The overthrow of the Castelar Government in Spain is favorably received in Havana.

THE diplomatic representatives of Spain at Paris, Brussels and Lisbon have resigned.... It is stated that the besiegers of Cartagena, inspirited by the new order of things, redouble their efforts to reduce the city. At the same time, the defenders seem to have taken fresh courage from the belief that the present Government is unpopular and short-lived. They have recently made several desperate sorties, but without effect, and have hoisted the black flag....Captain-General Jovellar's requisition for supreme powers has been granted by the Spanish Government. The whole of Cuba is now virtually in a state of siege, and the Captain-General is Dictator, amenable to no other law than his own will.

A MADRID dispatch states that Castelar has rejected the overtures of Figueras, Salmeron and Pi y Margall asking him to co-operate with them in organizing the Federal Republicans....The health of Emperor William of Germany continues to improve....The trouble between Castelar and Salmeron seems to have originated in a difference of opinion as to the treatment which the captured insurgents should receive. Salmeron regards the death penalty to be unrepublican and barbarous. Castelar thinks it absolutely necessary for the salvation of the Republic and the restoration of order. The Cortes, most of whom are visionaries, sided on this question with their presiding officer, and the result was that Castelar retired from the head of affairs.

Political.

OFFICIAL returns of the late election from all but one county in Mississippi, give Ames, for Governor, 73,300, and Alcorn, 52,719. Majority for Ames, 20,581....John Logue (Republican) has been elected Mayor of Memphis by 800 majority.

THE Illinois Senate has unanimously adopted a resolution condemning the salary-grab, and demanding its repeal. The House adopted a similar resolution with only two dissenting votes.

THE President has withdrawn the nominations of Messrs. Williams and Bristow as Chief-Justice and Attorney-General, respectively. The following is a copy of Mr. Williams' letter to the President requesting the withdrawal of his name:

TO THE PRESIDENT—Sir: You were kind enough, without my solicitation or any knowledge on my part that you contemplated such a thing, to nominate me for Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Since that time the flood-gates of calumny in all directions have been opened upon me; my abilities have been disparaged, and my integrity brought in question; and it seems to me that a public opinion adverse to my appointment has been created, which might hereafter embarrass your administration and perhaps impair my usefulness upon the bench.

With perfect consciousness that I have performed with clean hand and upright purpose all the duties of the various public offices to which I have been called, and trusting to time, and a just public, when better informed, for my vindication, I respectfully ask you to withdraw my nomination for Chief-Justice. I have the honor to be, with great respect, GEO. H. WILLIAMS.

The Grange.

THE Grange movement has reached the Territories. Colorado has already ten lodges, with an aggregate membership of 400. A lodge has been organized at Bismarck, Dakota.

GRANGES are being formed in Wisconsin at the rate of two a day. The total number in the State as reported by the Secretary, on the 8th inst., was 308.

General.

THE Legislatures of Illinois, Ohio, Minnesota, Missouri, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts and Maine are in session.

THERE are 115 defaulting railroads in the United States, and the amount of interest they have failed to pay is $27,000,000....The bark Polly, from Pensacola for Liverpool, was lost during a hurricane on the 26th of December. The second officer, carpenter, steward, and six men were washed overboard and drowned. ....The National Crop Reporter, of the 5th inst., publishes a final summing up of the result of the corn and Irish potato crops for 1873, in comparison with the previous year, in the West. The percentage of falling off in the corn yield in several States for 1873 is as follows: Illinois, 40 5-10; Indiana, 25; Iowa, 26; Kansas, 48; Minnesota, 23 6-10; Missouri, 33 7-10; Ohio, 20 4-10; Wisconsin, 10 2-10; Tennessee, 24 2-10—an average in the nine States of 31 9-10 per cent. The losses on bushels in the same States are in round numbers as follows: Illinois, 114,200,000; Indiana, 12,800,000; Iowa, 36,800,000; Kansas, 14,500,000; Minnesota, 1,600,000; Missouri, 29,600,000; Ohio, 20,600,000; Wisconsin, 1,600,000; Tennessee, 9,500,000—a total of 241,300,000. The aggregate yield of corn in the States named for 1872 is given as 750,000,000, and for 1873 as 514,000,000. The result of the Irish potato crop in the following eight States is shown in percentages of loss for 1873, as follows: Illinois, 62; Iowa, 50 6-10; Kansas, 72; Minnesota, 34; Missouri, 44 7-10; Ohio, 18 3-10; Wisconsin, 15 3-10; Indiana, 24 2-10—an average loss of 39 per cent. The losses in bushels in each are, in round numbers, Illinois, 6,000,000; Iowa, 4,000,000; Kansas, 2,300,000; Minnesota, 900,000; Missouri, 1,400,000; Ohio, 1,400,000; Wisconsin, 1,100,000; Indiana, 1,300,000—a total of 14,400,000 bushels. The aggregate potato crop in the States named was, for 1872, 47,000,000 bushels, and for 1873, 29,000,000 bushels.

THE Legislatures of the following named States are in session: Ohio, Louisiana, Arkansas, Illinois, Minnesota, New York, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Missouri, Maryland, Maine, Massachusetts....The public debt of the United States has been decreased less than three millions of dollars during the year 1873.

A CONFERENCE of railroad men at New York has decided to increase the freight rates from Chicago to the East.

THE Railroad law of Iowa has been sustained by the United States Supreme Court as far as to be declared not in conflict with the Federal power of regulating commerce between the States. This law requires the railroads to fix their tariffs every September, make them public by posting at all the stations, and to adhere to them honestly. A suit brought against the Chicago and Northwestern road for violation of these provisions, and decided against it, was carried by the company through the State courts to the United States Supreme Court on the ground indicated above. The Supreme Court have decided that the law does not attempt to regulate commerce between the States, but is only a police regulation such as a State may always enact.

CONGRESS.

MONDAY, Jan. 5.—Senate.—The Judiciary Committee reported a bill modifying the Bankrupt act. The following are its chief provisions: The involuntary clause is retained, yet one-fourth of the creditors are necessary to force a man into bankruptcy, instead of one creditor, as at present. The bankrupt is to be absolutely discharged of his debt, whatever the percentage he can pay. The fourteen days' term for non-payment of commercial paper is changed to thirty days. Provision is made for the use of a composition deed after the model of the British law. Arrangements for the settlement of a bankrupt estate by a trustee are made lawful.... The Chair, Mr. Carpenter, laid before the Senate the report of the Secretary of the Senate in reply to the resolution of Dec. 17, calling for information as to the amount of compensation received by Senators since the organization of the Government. It gives all the laws changing the rates of their pay, and shows that all of them were retroactive, though none of them were for so long a period as the last. ....Wright (Iowa) introduced a resolution instructing the Committee on the Civil Service and Retrenchment to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill making a reduction of 10 per cent. of the compensation of all officers of the Government whose salaries exceed $1,000 per annum or $5 per day. Laid over....The Salary bill was brought up and discussed, the debate turning on an amendment offered by Pratt, proposing that all the members of the present Congress shall be paid at the rate of $5,000 a year, and shall be made to reimburse the Treasury for the additional pay they have drawn since March 4, 1873. The amendment was opposed by Logan, Morrill and Stewart, and advocated by Thurman and Edmunds.

House.—Bills introduced: To provide for the appointment of a Commission to examine the labor question; to prevent the slaughter of buffalo; to appropriate the money that is due Indiana and Illinois; to create a National Board of Trade; to reduce the army; to prevent deficiencies in the public service; for a uniform system of railroad transportation in the United States; to provide a uniform currency....The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President in reference to the steamer Virginius....The Supplementary Civil Rights bill was discussed, the main feature of the debate being the speech of A. H. Stephens in opposition to the measure. He was replied to by Ransier, a colored member.

TUESDAY, Jan. 6.—Senate.—Buckingham's Free Banking bill was taking up and referred to the Finance Committee....The Finance Committee reported back Sumner's resolution instructing that committee to report a bill abolishing the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and to provide for the collection of taxes by stamps, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. The report was concurred in....The bill to repeal the Salary act was taken up. Flanagan addressed the Senate in opposition to repeal. He had voted for the bill, and thought $7,500 not an excessive salary, and had remarked when the bill passed that it should have been $10,000. Since then he had not changed his opinion. He had drawn the money (producing greenbacks from his pocket). "Here they are, sir! This is my pay. I am going to fight for it till the last. [Laughter.] I have not stolen that pay. I have done nothing that preys upon my conscience. I have endeavored to earn it." [Renewed laughter.] Carpenter followed Flanagan, in which he declared that he had voted to raise the salaries, and believed now as he did when he voted for the bill, and the country was making a mistake in clamoring for repeal; but, in deference to his constituents, four-fifths of whom he believed to be in favor of the repeal of the law, he would vote for putting the salaries at the old figure. Edmunds, Conkling and Stewart also spoke in favor of the repeal.

House.—Coburn introduced a bill for the construction of ship canals around Niagara and at the mouth of the Mississippi; also an amendment to the Constitution in relation to the election and appointment of officers....The time of the House was occupied in discussing the Civil Rights bill. Dunham opened the discussion, and was followed by Elliott (colored) in a speech of over an hour. The debate was further continued by Walls, Purman and Stowell for the bill, and by Blount, Bright, Herndon, Whitehead and Buckner against it. The debate had great attractions for the colored people, and the galleries were packed to overflowing and the doorways were blocked up by the crowd, in which the colored race counted for at least 75 per cent.

TUESDAY, Jan. 7.—Senate.—Nearly the whole day was consumed in discussing the salary matter.

House.—The debate on the Civil Rights bill was continued, Butler's speech being the feature of the day. The bill was recommitted, and will probably be reported in a modified form.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 8.—Senate.—A message was received from the President withdrawing the nominations of Mr. Williams as Chief Justice and Mr. Bristow as Attorney-General....Petitions were presented, asking for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the sale and manufacture of alcoholic liquors; asking that Congress enact necessary laws to prevent the traffic in Italian children; for the establishment of a uniform system of quarantine under national supervision; asking for a repeal and modification of the Bankrupt law....The Salary Repeal bill came up. Pratt's amendment, that the pay of the balance of this Congress shall be such an amount as to make the total, with that already received, $10,000 ($5,000 for each year), was rejected—14 to 46. Pratt submitted another amendment, providing that the amount of compensation of Senators, members and delegates for the year ending March 3, 1874, shall be $7,500, and for the year ending March 3, 1875, $2,500, exclusive of mileage and allowances. Adjourned without action in the matter.

House.—The bill to establish an educational fund was considered, without action....The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Naval Appropriation bill, and soon after adjourned.

Penitentiary Barbarities—The "Solitary."

An ex-convict in the Joliet (Ill.) Penitentiary relates, in the Chicago Times, some of his experiences in that institution. He says:

One day I was at work in the "solitary," when Deeming, the keeper of the "solitary," brought young Collins in. Collins was a stone-cutter, belonging to stone-shop No. 3. His offense was disrespect or insolence to his keeper. Young Collins was put into a cell about eight feet from where I was at work, and hung up to the "bull rings" by the wrists. The "bull rings" are iron rings fastened in the walls of the cell, about as high from the floor as the chin of an average sized man is when he is standing straight. A pair of handcuffs are put through this ring, and then fastened up to the wall in the manner described; then a gag was put into his mouth by force. I saw the gag. It was about an inch in diameter, with a strap at each end to fasten to the back of the head. Collins resisted all in his power to having the gag put in his mouth, and begged them not to gag him, but of no avail. A convict named Skinner, who has charge of the "solitary" to keep it clean, and to help torture men, rushed in and took hold of Collins and held him while Deeming fastened the gag in Collins' mouth. Deeming then locked the cell door, and left poor Collins to suffer a living death. A short time after Collins had been hung up, he began to groan. Skinner, the convict "duffer" of the place, came to the door, and told Collins to be still, or he would come in and give him something to groan for. To my certain knowledge, Collins hung in those irons, with that gag in his mouth, all that day. The next morning he was hung up again and left all day, and the third day the same; how much longer I do not know, as I had finished my job.

During the time that Collins was hung up there was another young man hung up in the cell opposite. I saw Deeming let him down for the night. The young man was so stiff and numb from his punishment that he staggered up against the wall of the cell. Deeming took hold of his collar and dragged him around the cell, shook him, and cuffed him, saying at the same time, "D—n you! wake up! stir around and get some life into you."

Sinking of the Virginius.

Lieut.-Com. Haswell, of the Ossipee, making the following statement concerning the loss of the Virginius: The Ossipee left the Tortugas, with the Virginius in tow, on the morning of the 18th of December. They had fair weather until the afternoon of Saturday, the following day, when a gale sprang up. They continued to have bad weather, and the Virginius signaled that she was leaking badly. Capt. Walters, therefore, determined to shape his course for Charleston, S. C., but as they got into smoother water the Virginius behaved better and the water was kept out of her fire-room. On the morning of Christmas Day, the severe weather having continued, the Virginius was again leaking as badly as ever, and the vessel put into Frying-Pan Shoals, about ten miles south of Cape Fear light, where smoother water could be obtained. Here the vessels came to an anchor, Capt. Walters hoping that the Virginius would ride out the gale. Before daylight the next morning (Friday), Commander Woodrow signaled with lights that the Virginius was leaking rapidly, with her fires out and the pumps stopped, and that the crew wished to be taken off. The boats were lowered from the Ossipee at daylight, and at 7 o'clock in the morning all on board of the Virginius were transferred to the former vessel. As a heavy sea was running, the work of removing the crew was one of much danger and difficulty, and, therefore, no lives were riskey in endeavoring to save their personal effects or any other property on the Virginius. The hawser of the Virginius was cut and a buoy attached to mark her position in case she sank out of sight.

The Ossipee remained at anchor during the day, and at a quarter past 4 o'clock in the afternoon the Virginius, which had been gradually settling, went to the bottom. She sank in eight fathoms of water, and the tops of her masts remain above the surface.

War and Taxes.

Sydney Smith describes, as only Sydney Smith could, the consequences of being too fond of "glory." And by "glory" he meant war, with all the attendant and consequent evils: "We can inform Jonathan what are the inevitable consequences of being too fond of glory. Taxes upon every article which enters into the mouth or covers the back or is placed under the foot; taxes upon every thing which it is pleasant to hear, see, feel, smell, taste; taxes upon everything on earth and the waters under the earth; on every thing that comes from abroad or is grown at home; taxes on the raw material, taxes on every fresh value that is added to it by the industry of man, taxes on the sauce that pampers man's appetite, and the drug that restores him to health; on the ermine which decorates the judge and the rope which hangs the criminal; on the poor man's salt and the rich man's spice, on the brass nails of the coffin and the ribbons of the bride, at bed or board, couchant or levant, we must pay. The school boy whips his taxed top, the beardless youth manages his taxed horse, with a taxed bridle, on a taxed road, and the dying Englishman, pouring his medicine which has paid seven per cent. into a spoon that has paid fifteen per cent., flings himself back upon his chintz bed, which has paid twenty-two per cent., and expires in the arms of an apothecary, who has paid a license of a hundred pounds for the privilege of putting him to death. His whole property is then immediately taxed from two to ten per cent. Besides the probate, large fees are demanded for burying him in the chancel, his virtues are handed down to posterity on taxed marble, and he is then gathered to his fathers to be taxed no more."

Railway Unpunctuality—A Notable Suit for Damages in England.

The question of whether railway companies are bound to keep the time set down in their time-tables was raised before Mr. Whigham in the County Court at Aylesbury recently. The plaintiff was Mr. William Adams, cattle dealer, and the defendants were the London and Northwestern Railroad Company, as the proprietors of the branch line between Aylesbury and Cheddington. It was shown that on the 20th of October the plaintiff took a ticket at Aylesbury for Luton, where he ought to have arrived at 9:28 a. m., in time for Luton market, at which he was to dispose of some beasts. The train by which he was traveling from Aylesbury to the main line was delayed nearly an hour, owing to the engine being short of steam. The consequence was he missed the train at Cheddington, and did not arrive at Luton till 11:30 a. m., by which time the market was over. He now claimed 10 shillings damages per head of his beasts—thirty in number—which he did not get sold for nine days. The want of steam, it appeared, arose from the fire-box of the engine having been choked, the fireman having Welsh coal that day, a variety to which he was not accustomed. It was pleaded for the defense that the company were exonerated from liability by the statement on their time-tables that they would not be responsible for delay. His honor held, however, that the choking of the fire-box was not a circumstance over which the company's servants had no control, and he therefore gave a decree for the plaintiff for 40s. in respect for the loss of his time through having found no market for his cattle at Luton.—London Daily News.

How the Ashantees Fight.

[Ashantee Cor. New York Herald.]

The enemy lay in wait in the middle of what they call here a bush, but which should be more appropriately called a jungle; it is so dense in some places that one wonders at first sight how naked people have the temerity to risk their bodies in what must necessarily punish their unprotected cuticles most painfully. This jungle probably covers many hundred acres, literally choking the earth with its density and luxuriance. It admits every kind of shrub, plant, and flower into a close companionship, where they intermingle each other's luxurious stalks, where they twist and twine in each other's long, slender arms about one another, and defy the utmost power of the sun to penetrate the leafy tangle they have reared 10 and 15 feet above the dark earth. This is the "bush" into which the Ashantee warriors creep in on all fours and lie in wait in the gloomy recesses for the enemy. It was in such a locality as this that Sir Garnet found the Ashantees, and where he suffered such losses in his staff and officers. Until the sonorous sounds of Danish musketry awoke the echoes few of the English suspected the foe so near. Until they themselves betrayed their presence the English might have searched in vain for the hidden enemy.

The Milan Cathedral.

Of the Cathedral of Milan it is difficult by words to convey any idea; it is so vast, so complicated, so magnificent. The interior is deeply impressive; five naves, divided by fifty-two gigantic columns, from which the majestic arches gracefully spring to support a roof that looks as though the clouds might rest upon it; the vast dome lifting itself far up towards heaven—in the dim distance of which is a solitary lamp, so placed as to throw all its light upon a blood-stained spike, which the devout Catholic believes is one of the identical nails driven into the blessed hands of Our Lord.

So great is the area that many services may be going on at the same time without confusion. We actually witnessed a marriage at one altar, a baptism at another, and a funeral might have taken place at a third, and a mass been celebrated at a fourth; and, in addition, there was a crowd of wondering and admiring spectators, all with abundant room and space.

The material of the edifice is white marble, and it looks like a mountain of stone, cut into a labyrinth of spires, pinnacles, flying buttresses, and statuary. The roof is a forest of statuary and pinnacles; it seems to me overcrowded. Think of 7,000 statues in one building!—Florence Letter.

FRANCE, from the variety of her industries, is one of the most self-supporting nations in the world.

"Chosen Men of the Nation."

(Extract from Ben Butler's Speech on the Salary Repeal Bill.)

There is one thing I wish to say to my fellow-members, especially those who are here for the first time. During the seven years, more or less, that I have been here, I have found that the great fault in Congress is the self-abnegation of its members. Let but a man point his finger at a member of Congress, and we are apt to shrink away from him, and act toward him as if he must have done some wrong, without standing by him as an honest gentleman until his guilt is proven. Let a single thing be said against the acts of any member of Congress, and forthwith some demagogue—for occasionally demagogues get in here, as of Christ's twelve apostles one of them had a devil—[laughter]—some demagogue, I say, to show that he is not guilty of the same thing, when most probably his conscience accuses him, brings in a bill restraining the Congressman from doing the thing charged. This has gone on for a series of years, until a Congressman is shut out from the pursuit of almost all kinds of business. We cannot have any interest in a contract that has any relation to the Government. We cannot practice as attorneys in the courts in which the largest interests of the United States are involved. The Supreme Court is about the only one left to us. We cannot go home and practice in our State courts, or do any other business, without neglecting our public duties.

The trouble is that we do not stand together, but let the men up there (pointing to the reporters' gallery), who live by our bounty, sit there by our indulgence, to write diatribes against us, and blacken us all over until the whole world is made to believe that members of Congress are worse than other men, when, in fact, we are the chosen men of the nation, and better as a class, than men in any other single profession—clergymen, lawyers, or doctors; for whenever a clergyman gets into Congress, we have seen he is not especially conspicuous for his virtue any more than his fellows. [Laughter.] I say that we ought to stand here and say Congress is not to be maligned; and if we are maligned, let us stand together and say that without proof the character of no man, simply because he is a member of Congress, shall be attacked, and the attack hounded on by his fellows from petty envy, jealousy or rivalry.

Bingham in Japan—A Lively Scene.

A Tokei, Japan, correspondent of the Boston Transcript, writing of the celebration of the Mikado's birthday, in November last, says:

In the evening a dinner was given at the Emperor's summer palace, to the eight foreign ministers accredited to Japan. Terashima, formerly envoy extraordinary to Great Britain, and now Minister of Foreign Affairs, presided.

With the dessert, Sir Harry S. Parkes, as British minister, rose and proposed the health of His Majesty the Emperor, which he accompanied by a neat little speech. At the close he called upon the French minister, remarking it was his turn next to speak. The Count briefly responded, excusing himself from speaking in English, and, as he resumed his seat, Judge Bingham, the United States minister, rose to offer "Progress, prosperity and happiness to the sovereign and people of Japan," when Sir Harry, violently interrupting, shut him off completely, motioning him to sit down, and crying out: "No more, no more!"

Judge Bingham resumed his seat gracefully, like a true gentleman, but immediately opened a lively discussion across the table, in which Sir Harry got very excited, contending warmly that the sentiment was out of order, as it introduced politics, and was superfluous in language, as "the Emperor was the people;" but the Judge coolly informed him that he might have heard of a church without a bishop, or a people without a crown, but inquired if it were possible to have a bishop without a church, or a sovereign without a people. When pressed for an answer, Sir Harry reluctantly admitted it could not be, and immediately Judge Bingham good-naturedly congratulated him on having "come to his way of thinking."

Government Buildings.

One of the fruitful causes of expenditure by the last Congress was the appropriation of over $12,000,000 for the erection of public buildings for Government use in various cities and towns. In the face, however, of this fact, a much larger movement in that direction has already been made in the present Congress. It was ascertained at the Capitol to-day that there were over 40 bills pending before the committee for the erection of public edifices in the following cities and towns, and involving an expenditure of nearly $30,000,000: Austin, Tyler, Dallas, Galveston, Houston and Jefferson, Texas; Leavenworth and Topeka, Kan.; Kansas City, Jefferson City and St. Joseph, Mo.; Council Bluffs, Iowa; Charleston, S. C.; Charleston, W. Va.; Portland, Oregon; Brooklyn, N. Y.; two in Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Syracuse, Lynchburg, Atlanta, Santa Fe, Greenville, S. C., Erie, Pa., New Albany, Ind., Wilmington, N. C., Auburn, N. Y., Port Townsend and Olympia, Washington Territory, Tallahassee and Jacksonville, Fla., Montgomery, Ala., Rochester, N. Y., Oxford, Miss., Nebraska City, etc. If the promised retrenchment is carried out, not one of these buildings will be authorized, though most of the bills for them have been presented since the resolution of economy passed the House. —Washington Telegram.

M. GUIZOT has been making a speech at Caen—a speech not fully reported as yet. The veteran statesman said, among other things, that having honestly served a liberal, legal and constitutional monarchy, he could not serve another form of government. "But," he added, "I do not try to pull down what exists. I am not a destroyer. I look at my successors without endeavoring to upset them. I cannot say what will become of France, but we should apply ourselves to preserve what remains. France has passed through many trials, but she has always righted herself. Illusions ruin people; hope saves them. We have seen ruins enough, and shall probably succeed in reaching a form of government liberal, legal and durable."

THE PRESIDENT'S SALARY.

Grudge not the mean pittance—'tis not so immense;
Oh, reason, true patriots! be patient and gay!
True, some will complain on futile pretense;
But mind not their murmurs,—they'll soon pass away.
For 'tis only a small fifty thousand a year
To him who did "save" this imperiled great nation;
Though the patriots slain, thick on plains far and near,
Repose, for their friends begging raiment and ration.

Behold our great country, so varied and vast,
With its wealth so immense of the mines and the soil;
Let our hopes never wane, nor our minds be o'ercast,
For the thousands that hunger, the millions that toil;
For 'tis scarce thirteen thousand a quarter; and then
That small sum's to keep foul temptation at bay;
And who would make Presidents know beggary, when
But a few paltry dollars shall stand in the way?

If we stick to economy in seeking for men
To direct our great ship safely onward to port,
We may sink; but double their salaries, then
O how safe glides our ship through the waves' wildest sport!
For 'tis only four thousand a month for a man
That can speak of the currency, Cuba, and Spain;
Can turn gold on the market, then greenbacks, and plan;
Then can smoke his Havana, and—quiet remain.

To prevent men from thieving we surfeit with gold;
A plethoric dog will not steal a man's dinner;
Where danger comes never, the coward's more bold;
And the man soon to die is never a sinner;
But one thousand a week for the man at the helm,
While the tax-ridden poor "learn to labor and wait,"
Where the Rings are unbroken and rule the whole realm,
Where corruption doth wield all the powers of the State.

*

Let us have due respect for the great and the wise,
And "speak well of a bridge that carries us over;"
Frown not on a salary that comes as a prize,
But eagerly seize it as cows do fresh clover;
For 'tis only one hundred and forty a day;
The chances come seldom; the time is far spent;
And great men cannot think mighty thoughts without pay,
Nor indite learned messages at fifty per cent!

Once again let us reason, revolve, and reflect;
Though not lofty in thought, be romantic in pride;
And, as all cannot be great Presidents elect,
Let us make ours a model, a guardian, and guide;
For his salary's only six dollars each hour,
So we fill his lean larder, and Brussels his rooms,
Surround him with waiters, and feather his bower,
And build for him stables, and supply faithful grooms.

In England 'tis done in more liberal way;
America seems not to fancy the notion:
For here office-holders, while begging more pay,
Will die of more pay in the coming commotion;
For 'tis ten cents a minute, awake or asleep,
Puffing smoke from cigars, coaxing thoughts from the brain,
Or wondering when people more quiet will keep,
Or whether 'tis safe back-pay or front to retain.

To conclude the whole matter, 'tis well, then, to state
That an ill-gotten dollar, though in gold, "swag," or straw,
Whether filched by the lowly or "grabbed" by the great,
Is condemned by the Scriptures, by morals, and law,
And the people declare fifty thousand a year,
And in perquisites doubled, shall nevermore win;
For the labor's too light, or the price quite too dear;
'Tis in greenbacks too thick, or in service too thin!

THE REIGN OF CORRUPTION.

Ringing Letter from Alexander Delmar, of New York, to the Illinois Farmers' Association

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1873.

DEAR SIR: Your polite invitation to attend the meeting in Decatur, or to address it by letter, was received to-day. My heart is with you, and I should have been glad to come, but I cannot well get away. I must, therefore, write.

Your cause is my cause; it is that of my children, who are growing up around me in fetters to unjust laws; it is that of the many; it is that of the country, which by reason of this injustice is steadily drifting into another civil war.

Only those who have rendered themselves familiar with the sufferings of the French previous to the First Revolution can measure the provocation which led to the bloody Reign of Terror. The tyranny and scorn of the land owners for the peasantry; the venality of the courts of law, which always sided with the rich; the corruption of men and debasement of women by the aristocracy; the infamous parc aux cerfs, where the dissolute monarch kept a seraglio of 500 abducted girls; the disregard of plebeian life and limb by the nobility, who drove over and trampled down with horses the plodding pedestrians of the country road or city lane; the lettres de cachet, or blank orders of imprisonment, by aid of which they threw all who opposed them, and whom they could not destroy, into secret and loathsome dungeons;—all these offenses combined might have failed to bring about the Revolution, for they were offenses against individuals. They were felt only by those against whom they were directed; the rest escaped; and such is the selfish nature of men and their well-grounded horror of commotion and anarchy, that, unless they are made to suffer in common, they seldom revolt.

But added to these crimes of the rich were the universal serfdom and wretchedness they inflicted upon the poor through the laws of monopoly and taxation. These were blows that fell upon the backs of all the people at once—the blows that evoked the avengeful and gory guillotine.

In this view I am supported by the writings of a man for whom the world, and particularly the agricultural world, has garnered up a hundred years of profound respect and esteem—I mean Arthur Young. This man was an English farmer, who traveled through France in the years 1787, 1788 and 1789, and closely observed and recorded every detail relating to the economical and social condition of that country at that eventful juncture. Without reference to his immortal "Travels," no complete work on the French Revolution ever has been, or ever can be, written; and these are the words with which he commences his twelfth chapter:

"The gross infamy which attended lettres de cachet and the Bastile, during the reign of Louis XV., made them esteemed in England, by people not well informed, as the most prominent features of the despotism of France. They were certainly carried to an excess hardly credible—to the length of being sold with blanks to be filled up with names at the pleasure of the purchaser, who was thus able, in the gratification of private revenge, to tear a man from the bosom of his family and bury him in a dungeon, where he would exist forgotten and die unknown! But such excesses could not be common in any country; and they were reduced almost to nothing upon the accession of the present King (Louis XVI.) The great mass of the people—by which I mean the lower and middle ranks—could suffer very little from such engines; and as few of them are objects of jealousy, had there been nothing else to complain of, it is not probable they would ever have been brought to take up arms; but the abuses attending the levy of taxes were heavy and universal. * * * Such an enormous power constantly acting, and from which no man was free, must, in the nature of things, have degenerated in many cases into absolute tyranny."

Not only the tax laws, but those of privileges and patents, were so subverted, by devilish ingenuity, as to constitute a Juggernaut of monopoly, that remorselessly crushed to death the life of the nation. The resolutions of complaint respectfully addressed by the the people to the monarch on the subject (cahiers du tiers etat), not only arouse a righteous indignation even at this distant period of time, but appeal to the profoundest emotions of pity. I quote from the cahier of the people of Rennes:

"Fixed and heavy rents; vexatious processes to secure them; appreciated unjustly to augment them; rents solidaires and revenchable; rents cheantes and levantes; fumages. Fines at every change of the property, in the direct as well as collateral line; feudal redemption (retraite); fines on sale to the eighth and even sixth penny; redemptions (rachats) injurious in their origin, and still more so in their extension; banalite of the mill, of the oven, and of the wine and cider press; corvees by custom; corvees by usage of the fief; corvees established by unjust decrees; corvees arbitrary, and even fantastical; servitudes; prestations extravagant and burdensome; collections by assessments incollectible; aveux, minus, impunissimens, litigations ruinous and without end; the rod of seigneurial finance forever shaken over our heads; vexation, ruin, outrage, violence and destructive servitude, under which the peasants, almost on a par with Polish slaves, can never but be miserable, vile and oppressed!"

Is it any wonder that a people thus abused should afterward have thrust aside the restraints of law and prudence and taken a terrible revenge; or that with that revenge excesses should have been committed and the innocent condemned to suffer with the guilty? Is it wonderful that these cruelly outraged men should have been driven by despair to become bloody monsters, or that their humble wives and daughters should be turned to those cruel and stony-hearted judges who sat in the revolutionary tribunals of justice, coldly knitting sentences of death in worsted work, and impatiently awaiting fresh executions?

The sufferings of these unhappy people are forgotten; their subsequent history has seen a thousand changes; a century of time has passed away; but the tortures they once suffered, and the natural, though deplorable, consequences of their heroic resolution to outlive them, are brought vividly to the mind when we survey the accumulation of fraud and injustice that is overwhelming our own people, and threatens to drive them into similar measures of violent justice.

The American Revolution was a reaction from monarchical rule, and drew its inspiration largely from the writings of those Frenchmen who had made eloquent the miserable condition of their countrymen at that period. In establishing here a Government of the people by the people, we fondly hoped to render impossible those grievances which had called forth the works of Rousseau and the Encyclopædists.

Yet, scarcely have three generations passed away before we find all the old class ascendancy re-established, and every abuse of government that marked the decline of the last century, in both hemispheres, reinstated before our very doors.

Extravagant and useless public expenditures, of which we are made to bear the burden; rings, Federal, State, municipal and corporative, which rob us right and left; corrupt officials, forged warrants, sequestered appropriations, suppressed or cooked accounts, embezzlements, defalcations and conspiracies, sixty millions to one railway, an empire of territory to another, credits mobilier, land grabs, back pay, forward pay, secret pay, pay by commutation, bribes to members of Congress, bribery from the highest to the lowest officials in Government employ, watered stock, construction companies, ring drawing-room car companies, ring elevators, patent monopolies unlawfully granted and reissued on every article of wear, of use, of consumption, defaulting commission merchants, swindling brokers, dishonest bankers, the currency of the country seized for the benefit of gamblers in and out of office, the public debt funded at an extortionate and unnecessary rate of interest, and so managed as to absorb new appropriations of money at every session of Congress, the courts of law subverted to the ends of dishonest officials, dishonest claimants, dishonest classes, the press bought up or subsidized, so that the interests of the people have absolutely no representation near the seat of Government, nor in the metropolis; in short, every technicality of law, every expedient of finance, every engine of power is wielded to extort unjust and unwilling tribute from the people, and reduce them and their posterity to the base condition of serfs.

Are these the just fruits of those sacrifices which this people made on the bloody fields of Lexington and Brandywine? Was it for the preservation of a Government which conserves such results as these that we recently sacrificed a million of men and six thousand millions of treasure? Was the late war to enslave the whites, or liberate the blacks?

As yet, many of the numerous specific abuses, which the lawyers and speculators or financiers have saddled upon us, are not perceived. We only see the results. We see, on the one hand, a class of wealthy aristocrats, daintily nursed, schooled, housed and fed; their paths in life strewn with flowers, the road to every aspiration open. On the other, we see the people, born to toil, reared in indigence, schooled to poverty, housed in the rude cabin of the prairies, fed with the coarsest food, doomed to lives of toil in the service of unknown and exacting masters; and no other future possible but the dismal prospect of seeing their offspring insured to still greater debasement. But the means by which these results are brought about do not lie on the surface. The greedy tyrants of to-day are the same greedy tyrants that they were a century ago; only that they have to deal with more intelligence in the masses, and their ways are more tortuous and secret.

I read with great pleasure your speeches delivered at Biggs' Grove and Topeka, and was glad you had referred to that one of the many forms of monopoly from which the people suffer, and which, though usually least adverted to, perhaps burdens them as heavily as any other—I mean the patent laws. But general complaints rarely enlist sympathy or promote reform. I therefore descend to particulars.

It is a curious and alarming fact, that through a perversion of these laws there is actually imposed upon every man in this country a poll tax for the benefit of a ring of unscrupulous capitalists! I refer to the Wells hat-body monopoly.

The Constitution of the United States empowers Congress "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." Under this provision Congress enacted certain patent laws, one of which very justly provided that no patent could attach to any mechanism, contrivance, or design already known; a provision essentially differing from that of the English law, which enables the patent to be taken for anything, but compels the patentee to make good his claim of originality and usefulness before the courts of law. Under our law the patent accords an almost indefeasible presumption of originality; under the English law it is simply a caveat.

Previous to 1833 many persons had invented machines for making hat bodies, by which, after the fur is removed from the skins of animals it is felted and fashioned into a hat. The soft felt hats so common in this country, and which the necessities of the climate almost compel us to wear, one of which is probably worn by every man whom this address will reach, are all made by the processes thus invented; the main features of which are are the feed-roll, the picker or doffer, the perforated and revolving gauze or wire cone, and the air-sucker or exhaust contrivance. Only two more contrivances were needed to render the machines perfect, and these to regulate the flow of fur on the revolving cone, so as to bring the bur batting to any desired thickness, and to remove the completed hat-body from the cone without injury. The first of these improvements was attained in 1833, through the ingenuity of a man named Thomas R. Williams, an American, then residing in London; the other by one Ponsford, who patented his improvement in England in 1839; and so the process was perfected.

Two years previous to the patenting of Ponsford's improvement in England, an American named Henry H. Wells went to London and took out patents for several processes previously in use in this country, and invented by other people. Williams, observing this, and fearing that Wells might go back to America and repeat his trick here, by adopting his (Williams') invention as his own—the more because he became aware that Wells had obtained drawings of his machine—sent to the American Patent-Office drawings and specifications of his invention, and applied for an American patent, at the same time warning the Commissioner against Wells. These papers were deposited in the Patent-Office May 8, 1838. The Commissioner's objecting to the wording of Williams' specifications, sent them back for amendment and called for a working model, etc.; but before these demands were complied with by Williams, Wells returned to this country and succeeded in getting patented as his own, not only Williams' invention, but Williams' invention covering the very points previously objected to by the Commissioner against Williams. Wells' caveat was filed in 1844, and a patent issued to him in 1840. The very foundation of the patent, as will have been perceived, was grounded in fraud and injustice; but this is not the worst of it. Many persons have since invented machines for making hat-bodies, notably one Boydon and one Hill, but, although their claims for originality were sustained by the courts of first resort, the Wells hat-body association audaciously and fraudulently adopted their improvement as their own, and obtained by corrupt means an extension of their monopyly, including these stolen improvements; so that in effect they have monopolized not only a specific machine embodying contrivances not their own, for making hat-bodies, but the very principle of making hat-bodies—which involves all machines. They refuse to sell the machines or to allow them to be used by others; they compel every manufacturer to bring his fur to them to be made up into hats; they mix the fur indiscriminately; they waste it in the manufacture; they adopt the styles thus compelled to be confided to them. Thus they not only levy a poll-tax on the people, they stop the progress of invention, and even forbid the development of economy and taste in manufacture. Their profits have amounted to a vast sum, to be reckoned in millions. The last extension of their monopoly was made by Congress in 1867 for seven years, and it is said that in addition to other means employed to obtain it, they bargained with the party in power to pay $100,000 to the corrupt Legislature of New Jersey to elect a Senator to Congress pledged to vote for the impeachment of the President—then a darling project of political conspirators. They are now before Congress for another extension of this unconstitutional, this unlawful, this unjust and infamous poll-tax on the people, and unless the voice of the latter is heard on the subject may again succeed in their gigantic scheme of lust and power.

As with the patent laws, so with all others. Many of the laws—I am sorry I cannot say all of them—are framed in the public interest; but chicanery and corruption have subverted them in practice. Our agricultural populations, which comprise fully one-half of the nation, are peculiarly the victims of monopoly, because unlike other classes they cannot get even with their oppressors by raising the price of food. This price is fixed, and must always remain fixed or affected by competition with the agricultural products of other nations in foreign markets; i. e., so long as we continue to produce as largely as we do now. Were the product diminished, so that we raised only sufficient for our home markets, and the tariff on imported breadstuffs were always kept high enough to forbid foreign importations, we might possess the means to retort on our oppressors, as the patriots did who taxed Edmund Dantes—they supplied him with food, but took care to charge him a thousand dollars per meal. Were I in power to-morrow, I should carry out this very policy. Our masters say they want protection. Well, they should have it; only my protective system would extend protection to all; not merely to a few favored classes.

I have only one more word to add: beware of treachery!

All sorts of rascals and fools in the garb of reformers will flock to your standard, because they are secret emissaries of vested interests, because it promises preferment, or because they have hobbies to ride. Unless you can keep these men out, they will demoralize your forces and break you up, as they have broken up other great organizations, by sowing feuds, by dilatory or rash proceedings, by prompting or encouraging unwise measures, etc. How shall you be able to detect these men, how know them from the true and the wise? There is no infallible criterion, but the nearest thing in it that I know of is this: put that man down as a rogue or a fool who proposes the enactment of a law, and him for an honest man and a wise one who favors repeals. No matter how plausible a scheme of legislation looks, it is almost certain, if enacted, to become an additional means of worsting you; no matter how simple a repeal is proposed, it is equally certain of bettering you. In every law there lies hidden an abuse, just as in every fruit there lies concealed a worm. All the victories which in modern days have been won over the people were won through laws. The great strides by which the progress of mankind is to be measured were all the results of repeal. The Magna Charta was a repeal, the Bill of Rights was a repeal, the Emancipation act was a repeal. Men are naturally free. Formerly brute strength alone could enslave them; now-a-days it is the law which they are sworn to obey.

This nation is like the Laocoon and his sons in the folds of the Python; it is strength and youth paralyzed in the wily folds of execrable and relentless laws made or administered—often both—in the interests of monopolists. We have too many laws, and want no more, either good or bad. What we want is freedom!

I am, sir, yours very respectfully,

ALEX. DELMAR.

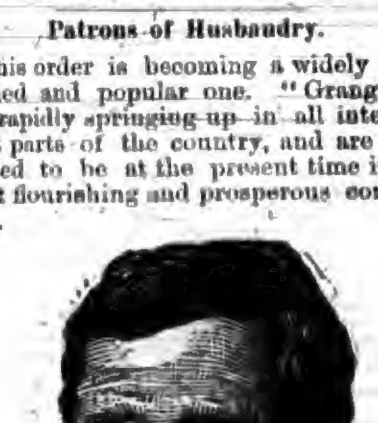
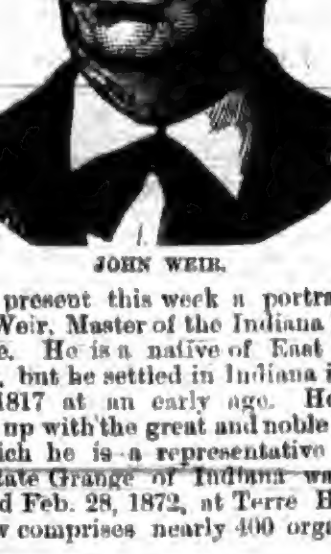
Patrons of Husbandry.

This order is becoming a widely extended and popular one. "Granges" are rapidly springing up in all intelligent parts of the country, and are reported to be at the present time in a most flourishing and prosperous condition.



JOHN WEIR.

We present this week a portrait of John Weir, Master of the Indiana State Grange. He is a native of East Tennessee, but he settled in Indiana in the year 1817 at an early age. He has grown up with the great and noble State of which he is a representative man. The State Grange of Indiana was organized Feb. 28, 1872, at Terre Haute. It now comprises nearly 400 organizations.



MRS. J. C. ABBOTT.

One of the pleasant features of this order is the admission to membership of ladies. The degrees conferred upon them are respectively entitled, "Maid," "Shepherdess," "Gleaner," "Matron," "Pomona," "Flora," and "Ceres." The society of women will contribute much to the social refinement and good order of the association. The above portrait is of Mrs. J. C. Abbott, a prominent member of the order.

"FROM THE EARTH TO THE MOON, direct in ninety-seven hours and twenty minutes, and a Trip Around It," is the title of a new book by Jules Verne, which has just been published by Scribner, Armstrong & Co., of New York. This handsome volume contains eighty full-page illustrations, and is the richest work that has been offered to the public for a long time. It must be read to be appreciated. Price $3.00.

Why Chubb Mourned.

When Chubb's wife died we called in to mourn with him, and, if possible, to console him in his affliction. The old man sat in the rocking-chair with his eyes closed, chewing a toothpick, and rocking to and fro as he apparently mused over the years he had spent so happily in company with his late partner. We gently approached the subject of Mrs. Chubb's departure. We assured him that we sympathized with him in his deep affliction, and the more sincerely because we well knew the estimable qualities of his wife, and were familiar with the virtues with which she adorned her home.

"She was, indeed," we said, "an excellent woman, a remarkable woman; a woman of sterling qualities and unaffected piety."

Chubb stopped rocking, and looked at us mournfully. Then exclaimed:

"Unaffected piety! That's just what's the matter. I tell you, Adeler," said he, bringing his hand down emphatically on the arm of the chair, "the way that woman would roast a sugar-cured ham would bring the tears to the eyes of a graven image."

Then we went out and left him alone with his sorrow. There are some kinds of grief that are too sacred to be lightly intruded upon.—Max Adeler.

Steam Canal-Boats.

In the recent trial of steam canal-boats, by competitors for the Government reward of one hundred thousand dollars, the Baxter seems to have taken the lead. This boat is flat-bottomed, and, when loaded with two hundred tons of cargo, draws five feet, eight and one-one-half inches. There are three-bladed screws, four and a half feet in diameter, and having a pitch of four feet. These screws are driven by a pair of twenty-five-horse-power Baxter engines. During the trial-trip, which occupied eighteen hours and three minutes, only eight hundred and thirty pounds of hard coal were consumed. The fact that this amount of coal was less than one-fifth that consumed by the best of the four rival boats led to a dispute as to the truth of the record. In order to reach a final settlement of this very important question, a second trip was ordered, certain officials accompanying the Baxter for the purpose of checking the weighing of the coal. The result was satisfactory, and the inventor of this compact and ingenious motor stands a fair chance of being declared the winner of the one hundred thousand dollar prize. Should the decision be reserved, we learn that it is proposed to make such alteration in the model of the Baxter as shall meet all the conditions imposed by the Legislature.

Texas Cattle-Raising.

A residence of a few weeks in San Antonio (says a writers in Scribner's for January) affords one a good look into the cattle trade of Western Texas. One might with justice call it an indolent industry—for it accomplishes great results in a lazy, disorderly way; and makes men millionaires before they have had time to arouse themselves and go to work. Cattle-trading is a grand pastime with hundreds of Texans. They enjoy the adventurous life on the great grazing plains, the freedom of the ranch, the possibility of an Indian incursion, the swift coursing on horseback over the great stretches, the romance of the road. Nearly all the immense region from the Colorado to the Rio Grande is given up to stock-raising. The mountainous regions around San Antonio offer superb facilities for sheep husbandry; and the valleys along the streams are fertile enough for the most exacting farmer. There are millions of cattle now scattered over the plains between San Antonio and the Rio Grande, and the number is steadily increasing. It is not uncommon for a single individual to own 200,000 head of cattle.

Germany Flooded with Silver.

The circulation of coin in Europe is about to be considerably increased. The German Empire, in a very short time, will call in the circulation of silver,—all except enough for small change,—and substitute gold therefor. There is about $3,000,000 of silver, and little or no gold, in circulation in Germany. After the German Government received the French indemnity money, it was resolved to get rid of the clumsy silver, and substitute the more portable and valuable gold coin. With this purpose in view, the Berlin Mint has been coining about 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 of thalers per week; and there must be now at least $200,000,000 of that coin ready for distribution. But the Government is puzzled what to do with the vast quantity of surplus silver. Large shipments of it have been made to India and China, for purchase of teas and other products; but, as the people of those countries are not accustomed to the silver thaler (about a 70-cent piece), the money was received with suspicion and at a discount.—Paris Letter.

A Warrior.

A man who had recently been elected a Major of militia, and who was not overburdened with brains, took it into his head, on the morning of parade, to exercise a little by himself. The field selected for this purpose was his own apartment. Placing himself in a military attitude, with his sword drawn, he exclaimed: "Attention, company! Rear rank, three paces, march!" and he tumbled down into the cellar. His wife hearing the racket, came running in, saying, "My dear, have you killed yourself?" "Go about your business, woman," said the hero; "what do you know about war?"

WHEN the seats were drawn at the beginning of the present Congress, it will be remembered that Ben Butler fell on the Democratic side of the House. For several days the Democrats with a Ben Butler among them had a good deal of fun at his expense. Ben himself did not enjoy it so well. But he wasn't made peculiar-eyed for nothing. The other morning the Democrats found Ben out of that seat, and the blackest colored member of the House in it, Ben had traded. The Democrats are not so elated now as they were. They see that there's a dark side to this joke.—Ex.

Fall of a Monster Aerolite.

[Trenton (Mo.) Correspondence Chicago Times.]

A few days since the inhabitants of the vicinity of Farmersville, a hamlet of Livingston county, in this State, were startled by the appearance in the heavens in broad daylight of an immense ball of fire, or meteor, falling with inconceivable velocity to the earth. The spot of its fall was visited by the awe-struck citizens in crowds to learn more of the strange apparition. A man was found who had been at work in the woods close by, and who seemed almost distracted by fear, but who soon recovered himself sufficiently to tell what he knew of it. He said as he was at work he heard a sound like the fierce screaming of a huge shot from a rifled cannon, accompanied by a rushing noise, like the sweep of a tornado. Looking about to discover the source of so strange a sound, a bright glare like a flash of lightning attracted his eye upward, and then he beheld, apparently coming directly toward him, a mass of fire "as big as a mountain." Before he had time to escape it, it struck the earth a quarter of a mile away, and the shock was like an earthquake. The party approached and found a glowing mass, which prevented close inspection by its radiant heat. It cooled off gradually and now presents the usual appearance of such bodies, being a black, shining mass of meteoric iron, but its huge size is unprecedented. It is described as reaching a height of full twenty feet from the surface of the ground, and as being twenty or twenty-five feet in diameter! This seems almost incredible, but as hundreds of respectable and truthful people have seen it, and all tell the same story, the facts force themselves on our belief. It is supposed, and with good reason, that at least half of it is buried out of sight; but up to this time no means have been used to ascertain the depth of its penetration.

The largest aerolite on record to my knowledge is one which fell in Asia Minor, wichh was estimated to weigh 25,000 pounds. But this huge monster from the upper deep will weigh nearly as many hundred weights.

Bazaine's Place of Confinement.

The island of St. Marguerite, where Bazaine is to be confined, is one of the two Luvin Islands on the Mediterranean coast of France. The largest of these islands is St. Marguerite, the smaller St. Honorat. Both are fortified islands, and have been used by different French Governments for many years, as a place of seclusion for State prisoners. The fortress on St. Marguerite, to which Bazaine is destined, is famed in story as one of the places of the imprisonment of the "man with the iron mask." While confined there, as the romance goes, he wrote his story on one of the silver plates on which his meals were served, and threw it overboard. A fisherman picked it up, but being unable to read, brought it to the Governor of the castle. In consequence of this incident, the prisoner was removed to the Bastile, where he died. In latter days St. Marguerite has only been brought into notice as the temporary abiding-place of some of the Communist prisoners. Probably, as the French always have an eye to the historical fitness of things, Marshal Bazaine may now occupy the same apartments once tenanted by the prisoner whose story is one of the saddest, as well as the most romantic, episodes of modern history.

Co-operation in Germany.

Here is the progress of co-operation in Germany: In 1850 there were 80 societies, with 18,676 members, who had on loan 4,181,436 thalers; share capital, 246,001 thalers; and in 1870 these figures had risen to 740 societies, 314,656 members, 207,618,287 thalers lent, and the share capital had risen to 13,440,152 thalers. Even during the Franco-German war, the number of co-operative banks increased by 121, and 112 new stores were opened, while 9 manufacturing societies were established. The business done by all these societies in 1870 amounted to 350,000,000 thalers. The paid-up capital was 27,000,000, and the loan capital 62,000,000. The number of co-operators now in Germany exceeds 1,000,000. Among the trading associations there are of shoemakers, 65; agriculturists, 43; tailors, 37; cabinet-makers, 24; smiths, 8; weavers, 5; bookbinders, 4; glove manufacturers, 2; carpenters, 1; basket-makers, 2; house-painters, 1; millers, 1; cloth-makers, 1; sewing machinists, 2; booking establishments, 1; house-building establishments, 5; and they appear to make most progress in co-operation, just where we make least.

TEMPEST IN A BILLIARD ROOM.—A lady did good work at a billiard hall in Atkinson, Ill., the other evening, and made it lively for a while, smashing glasses and bottles, etc. She threw the billiard balls into the street, and sent sundry kegs of lager after them. Besides this playfulness she caused a beer mug to carom on the eye of the bartender, which gives a sinister expression to his fact. The cause of all these demonstrations was the fact that the lady's two sons have been diverting themselves at billiards and fire-water—and at considerable expense—since last autumn, refusing to do any work for their own maintenance or that of their mother.

HANNAFORD & THOMPSON, Subscription Book Publishers, Chicago, have in press an exhaustive History of the FARMERS' MOVEMENT, by Hon. J. Periam, Editor Western Rural, one of our ablest and best known agricultural writers. Its title is THE GROUNDSWELL. It will be the standard work on Granges, Clubs, etc., and is certain to prove a great hit. Book Agents, and Farmers especially, should read the publishers' advertisement. It is bound to sell.

Firmness of Gov. Hendricks.

A singular temptation was thrown in the way of Governor Hendricks a few days since, and nobly resisted. One Galven, an attorney of Tipton, carried away by the excitement of the October election in 1872, backed his faith in Hendricks with a wager of considerable magnitude, and scooped it in. Some mean-spirited, low-down cuss procured his indictment by the Grand Jury, and he was fined one hundred dollars. A few days ago he made application to the Governor to have the fine remitted. Here was a predicament for his excellency. His feelings prompted him to be lenient to a personal and political friend, who had manifested so sublime a confidence in the popularity of his excellency. On the other hand there was the law—the red-eyed law—and also a fear that his enemies would charge that he had remitted the fine simply because he won bet on him. Thomas considered the matter, and finally wrote to Mr. Galven that, as he had won the bet, he had better pay the fine.

Rev. Milton B. Hopkins, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, strongly advocates the licensing of saloons. The Superintendent argues that if the sale of liquor is permitted at all, the school fund might just as well receive a yearly revenue of $100,000 from that source. Under the Baxter Law the school fund gets nothing.

Marshal Serrano, the friend of Prim and the pillar of the monarchists, in executive power in Spain, brings that unhappy country back to the same condition it was under the young Italian, King, Amadeus. Serrano will hold the country in trust, as MacMahon means to do, for the royal line—probably Prince Alfonso, the son of the infamous Isabella. The ministry announced is the same that held power with Prim in 1868.

A. Wheeler, of Derby, Mass., who played the fife at Lundy's Lane, died a few days ago, almost a hundred years old.

ONE SUMMER'S GAIN.

BY J. P. C.

"Oh, dear me! another day of drudgery before me. I do wish those little pests would hurry along. Here it is already 9 o'clock, and not one of them visible. If I knew they were all at home, I should feel perfectly contented; but if they have started, it is I who will have no take the blame should they not be here in season. Yes, there they come."

She rang the little bell, and in a moment there came in a dozen or two boys and girls, with the perspiration standing on their brows, or streaming down their red faces. They came in puffing like miniature steam boats. The windows were all opened, the door also, so by the time the teacher had called the roll, marking the usual number present and absent, the scholars were somewhat cooled off. The puffing had subsided, and the lessons for the day were begun.

First came the usual reading classes, then a long row of boys and girls were drawn up in "battle array" The oldest and tallest at one end; then they gradually grew smaller, until you came to the little freck'ed-faced, bare-footed boy at the foot, who really seemed nothingness itself.

Just as they were getting interested in the wonderful combination of letters in such words as "at" and "is," their attention was diverted from their lesson by a stranger who had driven up and was now tying his horse to a tree by the school house.

"I wonder who that can be?" thought the teacher. "I hope it is no one to see me."

Every scholar had his or her head turned toward the door to watch the approach of the stranger. Visitors, you must know, rarely came to the school.

The gentleman came forward saying, "good morning Miss Acton. I am Mr. Brackford, Superintendent of the schools in this district, and am making a tour of inspection. Don't let me disturb your exercises." She placed a chair for him—the only one the school boasted—but he preferred to sit on one of the empty seats by the window."

In vain she tried to draw the attention of the pupils to their lessons. All dilligence for that afternoon was gone; and it seemed to her they never had been so noisy or had such poor lessons.

She had been teaching here only three months and had never taught before. Her family had always been very well off in worldly goods until one day they found the wheel of Fortune had been turned completely over by some unlucky speculations, and they were down. A friend had procured this situation for her, and she felt very grateful, even if it was the most disagreeable occupation to her.

The long forenoon dragged along. Occasionally a shrill voice would call out, "Please, Marm, may I go out?" or, "Jim Jones is making pictures on my slate."

At noon recess, she went up to Mr. Brackford and told him she "should be glad to have him go home with her. It was only a short distance down the road."

"He should be very happy to go, and they could ride down in his carriage."

On the way he began to question her in regard to her school.

"Do you like to teach, Miss Acton? I really think you must, if you stay out here, in this forlorn place."

"No, I do not. I dislike it more every day; and fear my pupils make such slow progress. The Committee will be glad when my term is through. I never taught before in my life, and never shall again, if I can help it. I beg your pardon, but should like to ask you if you visit the same school often?"

"Well, no; I do not as a general rule visit these small schools more than once or twice during each term, unless they need my attention, in which case I visit them oftener."

"I hope you will not come again, for my pupils never have acted so unruly since I came here, but I don't know as I can blame them, for you are the first person that has honored us by a call since I came."

"You don't think your school needs especial attention from me?"

"Yes, I think it does; but I would rather you would wait until next term when they will have another teacher."

They found a nice dinner awaiting them. The people with whom Miss Acton boarded were not like the most of those living in the neighborhood. She always felt repaid for her day's labor when she returned home at night. Here everything was pleasant; no noisy children to annoy her. Her room was always bright and clean, and Mrs. Webster was always glad to see her, for she said, "it reminded her of the days when her own girls were at home." When Mr. Brackford departed she invited him to stop at their home "whenever he came through. They were always glad to see company."

That afternoon Miss Acton gave her pupils a long lecture on manners, and tried her very best to teach them something, but they seemed duller than usual. Perhaps it was the effect of the heat, or the advent of the stranger that seemed to effect their minds. Many times during the afternoon she would gaze for a moment, see the trees and the inviting shade, and wish there were no spelling books or primers, or dull boys and girls."

Days wore on, and Miss Acton was again surprised by a visit from the Superintendent. He stayed but a few moments; complimented her on the behavior of her pupils, and thought, "should he come again, he should see quite a model school."

At parting, he said "he should spend the night at her boarding place, as, after visiting a school a little farther on, he should return and spend the night at Mr. Webster's."

Evening came, and brought with it Mr. Brackford. Mr. Webster slyly remarked to him, "I suppose you are looking after the interest of the schools in this section. As a general rule, these country schools are neglected, and I am glad you take such an interest in them."

Mr. Brackford felt a prick of conscience, but made no reply other than "he thought he should be through here frequently and wanted to know if they could accommodate him."

"Certainly, certainly; we shall be glad to have you come. I am afraid Miss Acton finds it pretty dull here, although she is a great deal of company for us."

The evening was spent on the balcony. Mr. Brackford was a good conversationalist and entertained them with many amusing accounts of his travels.

When Mr. Brackford departed in the morning, he handed several books to Miss Acton, asking her if she had read them? "If not, keep them until I return. I intend to go through here again in a few weeks, and can get them then."

Miss Acton thanked him kindly, and thought how many pleasant hours she could spend with them.

Our friend made a great many visits to the "Pleasant Hill" school; but it became quite apparent, at last, that it was not the school he came to see, but its teacher.

The last day came, bringing her father to take her home. When the time came to leave the place, she felt not a sorrow in bidding good-bye to the old school house; but her home at Mr. Webster's had been pleasant, and a tear stood in her eye when she bade them good-bye.

Her summer's work was over, and she gladly went home to rest, thinking even if it was more humble than it ever had been it was still home. Besides, the summer had brought her a nice little sum of money—the first she had ever earned—and a true lover who was soon to claim her for his wife.

The power and disposition of the Republican party to reform the abuses which have grown up under its rule crops out in about the same way in all places, but in New York, where reform is most needed, it is a conspicuous failure. In speaking of the situation there, that able Republican paper, The Nation, makes the following humiliating admission: "In spite of the spirit of reform which has taken possession of the people of this city and State during the last three years, no real change has been effected in the character or composition of the State Legislature. Either the same men or the same kind of men are sent back regularly every year. The half dozen able or distinguished men who were sent up to it during the excitement of 1871 found that when they reached Albany they were without influence or consideration. Some of the most notorious rogues of the Ring period have been elected this year by Republican constituencies."

A Singular Death.

Perhaps the strangest story related of the sudden and mysterious death of any person, is that of a beautiful young lady in Louisiana, who by meddling with her husband's rocks, became suddenly petrified. An exchange says of this singular case: "A beautiful girl of sixteen was married to a lawyer, in Louisiana, a short time ago, who was also a geologist. The next day she went into his 'rock study,' broke open an Arkansas bowlder and drank the water found in the middle of it. She died in fifteen minutes, and in three-quarters of an hour her body was a piece of carnelian stone."

A Reminiscence of Gov. Allen.

A friend informs us that when he was a boy at college he had a roommate from the State of Ohio. He was fond of speaking of the celebrities of his native State, and Senator Allen was one of the chosen heroes. He related to our friend the following incident, which may prove interesting at this day. The Senator was addressing a large audience in the native town of our informant. When about half through his speech, after making some positive assertion, a stentorian voice cried out,—

"That's a lie, sir!"

The Senator paused a moment, and then asked,—

"What is your name, sir?"

The answer was given,—

"My name is Vass."

The Senator responded,—

"I move the V be stricken from that man's name. All in favor of it, say ay."

And a hundred voices cried out, "Ay."

"Now," said the Senator, "you are voted an ass."

THE TWO HOMES.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

My home was seated high and fair,
  Upon a mountain's side;
The day was longest, brightest, there;
  Beneath, the world was wide.
Across its blue, embracing zone
The rivers gleamed, the cities shone,
And over the edge of the fading rim
I saw the storms in the distance dim,
  And the flash of the soundless thunder.

But weary grew the sharp, cold whine
  Of winds that never kissed,
The changeless green of fir and pine,
  The gray and clinging mist.
Above the granite sprang no bowers;
The soil gave low and scentless flowers;
And the drone and din of the waterfall
Became a challenge, a taunting call:
  "'Tis fair, 'tis fair in the valley!"

Of all the homesteads deep and far
  My fancy clung to one,
Whose gable burned, a mellow star,
  Touched by the sinking sun.
[illegible] around, but not [illegible],
[illegible] made a leafy nest;
The turf before it was thick, I knew,
And bees were busy the garden through,
  And the windows were dark with roses.

"'Tis happier there, below," I sighed;
  "The world is warm and near,
And closer love and comfort hide,
  That cannot reach me here.
Who master is must be so blest
He'll share with me his sheltered nest,
If down to the valley I should go,
Leaving the granite, the pines and snow,
  And the winds that are keen as lances."

I wandered down, by ridge and dell;
  The way was rough and long;
Though earlier shadows round me fell,
  I cheered them with my song.
The world's great circle narrower grew,
Till hedge and thicket hid the blue;
But over the orchards, near at hand,
The gable shone on the quiet land,
  And far away was the mountain!

Then came the master; mournful-eyed
  And stern of brow was he.
"O, planted in such peace!" I cried,
  "Spare but the least to me!"
"Who seeks," he said, "this brooding haze,
The tameness of these weary days?
The highway's dust, the glimmer and heat,
The woods that fetter the young wind's feet
  And hide the world and its beauty?"

He stretched his hand; he looked afar
  With eyes of old desire;
I saw my home, a mellow star
  That held the sunset's fire.
"But yonder home," he cried, "how fair!
Its chambers burn like girded air;
I know that the gardens are wild as dreams,
With the sweep of winds, the dash of streams,
And the pines that sound as an anthem!

"So quiet, so serenely high
  It sits, when clouds are furled,
And knows the beauty of the sky,
  The glory of the world!
Who there abides must be so blest
He'll share with me that lofty crest,
If up to the mountain I should go,
Leaving the dust and the glare below,
  And the weary life of the valley!"

THE SECRET BENEFACTOR.

"Have you attended to the business I spoke of particularly, yesterday?" asked Mr. Lambert, a wealthy owner of real estate, addressing an intelligent, fair-looking young man, who sat at a desk, as the above named gentleman entered his office.

Charles Burchard colored with embarrassment. For a moment his hand moved nervously across his brow, then raising his handsome eyes to his employer's face, he answered in a frank, steady tone—

"I have neglected to follow your instructions in this case."

"Sir!"

"I am sorry—"

"Sorry!" cried Mr. Lambert, angrily, "sorry indeed! and this is the way you attend to my affairs! Young man, if you think I will pass over this carelessness—"

"I beg your pardon," said Charles, with a face like marble, but speaking in a calm tone, "I am guilty of no carelessness. I have endeavored to do my duty—"

"Your duty was to follow my instructions. Number 23 has been a losing business for me long enough. The family have had warning. You could not have misunderstood me. I told you that if the rent was not paid before 12 o'clock yesterday—"

"I visited the family," rejoined Charles, "and it seemed to me that had you seen what I saw, you would not have had me apply the extremity of the law to their miserable case. They are very poor—they are sick—they are suffering. You would not have had the heart to—"

"Charles Burchard," exclaimed Mr. Lambert, angrily, "you have been in my employ two years. I have found you faithful, honest, capable—and I would not willingly part with you; but since you prefer your way of doing business to mine, and presume to dictate, it is not proper that we should work together any longer."

"I have thought myself," said Charles, "that since I cannot conscientiously pursue the extremes you deem necessary, it will be best for me to quit your service. I am ready," he added, fixing his mild eye upon Mr. Lambert's face; "I am ready to go."

"Well, sir, we will have a settlement at once. How much am I indebted to you? What is your due?"

"Nothing."

"Nothing! How—how is this?"

"You will see. Cast your eye over this page."

"Yes—I perceive—you have taken up your wages lately, as soon as due," said Mr. Lambert, who, remembering his clerk's fidelity and capacity, was becoming softened. "This is a new thing, however. But I presume you have invested your money advantageously?"

"I have tried to make a Christian use of it," answered Charles, coldly.

"Have you been dealing in stocks?"

"No, sir."

"Ah, you lost confidence in me, and thought proper to put your money into other hands?"

"I have neither made investments nor loans," said Charles, with a peculiar smile. "What small sum I could command, I have used."

"You!"

"Yes, sir."

"Bless me, Charles! I thought you a steady young man; and how you can have consumed your entire salary, I am unable to conceive."

"And I presume I should be unable to explain it to your satisfaction, sir. It is a subject which it can avail nothing to converse upon. If you get a man in my place immediately, I should be willing to save you the trouble of instructing him in the state of your business."

"Certainly—if you please—and you shall be paid—"

"I did not make the offer expecting remuneration. I trust that I have kept my accounts in such a manner that it will not require half an hour to make an intelligent man understand the entire business."

"Charles," exclaimed Mr. Lambert, "I dislike to part with you so. We have always agreed until this time."

"Six months ago," replied Charles Burchard, "this family in No. 23 could not pay their quarter's rent. I had orders to turn them into the street. I did not do it."

"But—but the rent was paid."

"You permitted me to give them a few days' grace; you permitted this, on my promising to see that the rent was paid. You are right, sir—it was paid; the next quarter's rent was also paid. At present they cannot pay. Knowing the condition of the family, I cannot follow your instructions."

"Well," said Mr. Lambert, hardening himself, "I have rules with regard to my tenants, which cannot be broken. I have rules with regard to persons in my employ, which nothing can induce me to break. Justice is my motto. It is a good one; I shall stand by it."

"Mercy is a better one, sometimes," replied Charles, [illegible]. "Justice is admirable in all—but mercy in the powerful is godlike."

Thus Mr. Lambert parted with his faithful clerk. Another took the place of Charles Burchard, and the latter was without a situation.

About the first business Mr. Carroll, the new clerk, attended to concerned the poor family in No. 23.

"They vacate the premises immediately," he said to Mr. Lambert. "But there is something mysterious about that family; they made allusions to yourself which I was unable to understand."

"To me!"

"Yes, sir; they spoke of your kindness to them—"

"My kindness!"

Mr. Lambert colored.

"The man is a fine-looking, intellectual person, with thin cheeks, a broad, pale forehead, and bright, expressive eyes. He has been for a year or two at work on some mechanical invention, which he believes is to be of vast benefit to manufactures."

"I have heard Mr. Burchard speak of that," replied Mr. Lambert. "But what did these people say of me?"

"That they had been indebted to you for numerous favors—"

"Favors!"

"Yes, sir—at work at his invention, which of course can afford him no income until completed—Mr. Ward has not been able to do much toward the support of his family. Mrs. Ward, as I said, is an invalid. Their only child—a daughter of about eighteen, and a girl of some accomplishments—has done considerable toward their support—"

"I have heard all this from Mr. Burchard. What did they say of me?"

"That in these circumstances they have received benefits from you, for which they are very grateful."

"It is a mere taunt—insolent irony," muttered Mr. Lambert.

"I assure you, sir, there were tears in the poor woman's eyes when she said it; she was sincere."

"Humph!"

"They appreciated these favors so much the more," said Mr. Carroll, "from the fact that, as Mr. Ward's invention is a secret, and as all his instruments and contrivances have been in the house, it would have been a sore disadvantage to be obliged to move. His invention is now on the eve of completion, and he is firm in the hope of being able to pay with interest all your benefits."

Mr. Lambert was greatly perplexed by this inexplicable conversation of his clerk; but he concealed his feelings, and leaving Mr. Carroll to believe he was a man who did a great deal of good in a quiet way, went himself to make an attempt to explore the mystery, by visiting No. 23.

He found the Wards making preparations to vacate the premises. To a beautiful girl, with a handkerchief over her head, who was carrying small articles of furniture to the hall, he made known his wish to see Mr. Ward.

This gentleman was engaged in packing up his machinery; but soon coming out of his private room and locking the door behind him, he appeared before Mr. Lambert. As these two individuals had never met, the landlord was obliged to introduce himself.

"I feel highly honored—I am thankful for this new indication of kindness," said Mr. Ward, with emotion.

"I understand," said Mr. Lambert, "that you have been at work on an important mechanical invention."

"Yes, sir, and I am happy to inform you it is completed; the model has gone to Washington. I have used all the money I could scrape together to pay the expenses of the patent right; but sir, a manufacturing company are ready to negotiate with me for my machine, and in a very short time I shall be able to pay all my debts."

Mr. Lambert had hitherto regarded his tenant as a visionary. He did not look like one. The thought struck Mr. Lambert that he might, after all, be able to pay his rent.

"I have concluded that I might as well permit you to stay here a short time longer—although I am myself pressed for money," he said with a thoughtful air.

"My dear sir," exclaimed Mr. Ward, "this is a favor I had no right to expect, notwithstanding all you have done for us; but I am sincerely grateful; for all your kindness to me. We are going into a miserable house, where we did not anticipate residing more than two or three weeks, or until I find my funds coming in; and if we can remain here, you shall be no loser by the operation. Your debt I consider sacred; those many benefits shall never be forgotten."

"Benefits! I am not aware that you are much indebted to me—"

"You are pleased to say so—but for two quarters' rent you gave receipts in full, relying upon my honor for payment at some future time. I have at no time doubted but that they came from you."

Mr. Lambert pressed his forehead with his hand. After a pause he said; "And why, may I ask—why did you—give me credit—"

"Excuse me for mentioning the subject," said Mr. Ward, with emotion, "but although you parted in anger from your sister—"

"Sir!" exclaimed Mr. Lambert, starting and changing color.

"Here was a pardonable offense," said Mr. Ward. "She declined marrying the man whom you chose for her husband. You disowned her; you have never met her since. But this was years ago. I knew you could not cherish resentment so long."

"My God!" cried Mr. Lambert, "what do you mean? I have heard nothing of her for twenty years. I know not what has become of her."

Mr. Ward fixed his eyes upon his landlord in speechless astonishment.

"Is it possible?" he murmured; "are you serious?"

"Upon my soul! I have made inquiries for Mary, without success. I have supposed her dead."

"Then these benefits have not been bestowed because—"

"Sir, I know nothing of what you say. I die with suspense! If you know anything of Mary, tell me what has become of her."

The tenant's eye looked searchingly and earnestly into the landlord's face; then taking him by the arm, he led him deliberately and softly into another room.

There was a pale, thin woman sitting in an arm chair. She started on seeing the two men enter, and uttered a faint cry of surprise.

"My brother!"

"Mary!" gasped Mr. Lambert; "can it be my sister?"

"Your sister and my wife!"

* * * * * * *

An hour later, Mr. Lambert might have been seen entering Charles Burchard's lodgings. The young man was at home. With surprise he greeted his late employer. The latter was apparently excited by the occurrence of some recent event.

"Young man," said he, "I have learned in what way you have used your salary the past year."

"Sir!"

"You have compromised me; I—I do not wish to blame you; but you should not have left the Ward family to suppose the money they received came from me. You paid their rent, and gave them receipts in my name!"

"And do they know it?" cried Charles.

"Why should they not? Why did you not act openly with them?"

"I had no thought that you would be injured by being suspected of helping them, and I had my reasons for not wishing to be known as the author of the benefits," said Charles, blushing.

"I demand your reasons."

"The truth is, if I must confess it, I—I hope some day to marry Mary Ward—"

"Ay!"

"She is a worthy girl, sir—"

"But this is no reason!" exclaimed Mr. L.

"Well, then, you must know, sir, had I advanced money to the family openly," said Charles, recovering his self-possession, and his face beaming with frankness, "there was a possibility that I might be suspected of unworthy motives. And again, even had it been otherwise, and I could have won Miss Ward, as I would have wished to win her, she might have loved me more from a sense of gratitude than for myself; and I would not have bought her love. As it is, I hope she loves me for what I am, and that she will accept my hand, when I am in a position to support a wife."

"Charles," said Mr. Lambert, pressing the young man's hand, "I honor you! You have acted nobly. Return to your situation; you shall have the entire control of my business; your salary shall be doubled—"

"But Mr. Carroll—"

"He is not permanently engaged. I will procure a place for him. Charles, you must come back! I confess I have acted wrong in this matter. To tell you a secret, Charles, Mrs. Ward is my own sister!"

"Your sister!"

"I do not wonder at your astonishment; but it cannot equal mine, when I learned the fact this morning. I disclaimed all connection with her twenty years ago, because she refused to marry a man who was my friend. I was unjust. Afterward she married Mr. Ward, of whom I knew nothing. She supposed, however, that I might have learned the facts; and all the favors they have received from you have thus been credited to me. But it shall all be made right. I thank Heaven that I have now an opportunity to atone for my injustice to my only sister, and to thank you for the lesson in humanity you have taught me. Wealthy as I am, I shall never again distress a tenant for rents, without ascertaining whether he is deserving of any favors."

Mr. Lambert was not permitted to do all the good he proposed to his sister's family. In a few days, Mr. Ward's patent was decreed, and his fortune made. Thanks to his noble invention, his family was raised to affluence; but Mrs. Ward did not disdain the kindness of her restored brother.

Mr. Lambert had lost no time in acquainting his relatives with the nature of their indebtedness to Charles Burchard. If they esteemed and loved this generous-hearted young man before, what was now their admiration of his noble qualities! None however, felt their influence like Miss Ward. The only way in which she could express her joy, gratitude and love was by becoming his wife, with a dowry which relieved him of the care of providing for the comforts of life. Prosperous in business, happy in his domestic relations, Charles Burchard often had occasion to look back with a smile on the time when he left the service of Mr. Lambert "for conscience' sake."

A Republic in Spain an Impossibility.

The logic of facts and statistics is opposed to the theory of Republicanism in Spain. Education, the foundation of self-government, is wanting. The official data of statistics show that Spain contains an aggregate population of 15,673,074 souls, of whom 11,837,391 can neither read nor write; 705,768 can read but cannot write; and only a little over 3,000,000 can read and write. There are 422 Justices of the Peace who can neither read nor write; and 711,119 Aldermen and 12,479 members of Town Councils who are unable to sign their own names. Under such circumstances as these, not to mention the natural hotheadedness and bloodthirstiness of the Spaniard, a republic in Spain is an impossibility, and any attempt at one will always result in the hybrid monstrosity of the present theoretical one, until the Spanish people have learned by education how to govern themselves. Until that time, absolute force can be the only controlling power in Spain.—Chicago Tribune.

All Sorts.

Two HUNDRED and fifty papers died last year.

TEN newspapers have been discontinued in Iowa since the first of November.

THE new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, now in course of preparation, will, it is said, cost the publishers $1,000,000.

THE cost of the London underground railway for building and equipment was £1,000,000 per mile, or £50,000,000 for the entire work.

"HE was a good man," says an Iowa paper of a deceased citizen, "but then he sometimes bet on the wrong horse, the same as the rest of us."

THE London Times estimates that 74,000,000 bushels of wheat will be required from this country to supply the markets of Europe until the crop of 1874 is harvested.

GEN. C. P. STONE and Gen. W. W. Loring, American officers in the service of the Khedive of Egypt, have each been advanced to the grade of Major-General in the Egyptian army.

SHIP-BUILDING is becoming an important interest of the Pacific coast. Twenty-five sea-going vessels, with a total capacity of 5,000 tons, have been built at Coos Bay, Oregon.

TREASURER SPINNER still keeps as a relic the torn and blood-stained play-bill with which Laura Keene attempted to staunch the wound of President Lincoln, in his box at Ford's theater, on the night of the assassination.

THE late Prof. Agassiz was never injured by the bite of a snake, or the poison of any venomous reptile, herb or flower—a fact attributed to the courage and impunity with which the naturalists moved among them in their wild state.

FULL beards have long been regarded as a defense against bronchitis and sore throat, and it is asserted that the sappers and miners of the French army, who are noted for the size and beauty of their beards enjoy a special immunity from affections of this nature.

A MILL has been recently started in England in which flour is made by crushing the grain by small trip-hammers instead of grinding it. It is claimed that a pounding mill, costing $1,000, will produce as much flour in the same time as a grinding mill worth $5,000.

ALEXIS has besought his father not to send him around the world again. The stern old Czar consents on condition that he will break with the girl of his affection. She's a beautiful, high-toned, amiable creature, but there appears to be something the matter with her "blood."

PRINCE BISMARCK, (Galignani says) desiring to have his own tongue adopted as the common language of diplomacy, recently sent a note in German to Prince Gortschakoff, who, much to the German Chancellor's annoyance, replied in Russian, a language which he does not understand.

THE late John Hopkins, of Baltimore, was one of the prominent business men of that city, and his wealth was estimated at $12,000,000. He is chiefly remembered, however, for his munificence toward the city. He had given $4,000,000 to found a hospital, and $3,000,000 for a university, and had presented the city a park.

AT a church fair device in Troy a ragged colored man and woman entered the crowded rooms and pleaded for alms. They said they were starving, and their plight touched the hearts and wallets of the crowd. After collecting a good sum of money, the colored couple wiped the burnt cork from their faces, and two of the pillars of the church were revealed.

THE Wisconsin Lumberman estimates the grand total of the pine [illegible] of Wisconsin at the enormous amount of 40,000,000,000 feet. Pine grows in the forests with wonderful rapidity, and, if the above figures are not exaggerated, there is likely to be as much pine cut in the State forty years hence as during any of the recent years. The supply is practically inexhaustible.

A Tough Old Couple.

The toughest man in America lives two miles below this place. His name is F. A. Rose. He is over 75 years old. Within the last ten years he has had both legs broken, his skull smashed, his hip dislocated, a shoulder-blade and three ribs fractured, an arm broken and his teeth knocked out—all by runaway accidents. He always drives a young and spirited horse before a wagon over forty years old. His harness is patched up and tied together with ropes and strings. After every one of his accidents he has insisted on getting around before the broken bones were properly set. The consequence is that his limbs are crooked and not to be relied on. He is obliged to attend to his work on crutches, but still drives fractious young horses to his dilapidated wagon. The horse that will not rear and plunge at the sight of the cars is too tame for him, and he exchanges it for another.

Mr. Rose has a wife as tough as himself. She is almost old as he, and has been more or less crippled for years, but has attended to her household duties with the aid of canes or crutches. She recently fell and broke her arm, but she did not think it worth mentioning, and went about her work as usual.

Old Mr. Rose is one of the wealthiest men in the Delaware Valley. Together with his son and two grandsons, he owns two miles of rich flat along the river and as far back on the mountain. He says he thinks he will reach a hundred years if the next horse that runs away with him does not break his neck. Nothing short of that, he thinks, will kill him.—Matamoras (Pa.) Cor. New York Sun.

SOMETHING FROM HIS PEN."—Brown relates the following bit of conversation he had with an acquaintance: He said he used to write for the papers once, and, meeting an editor one day, the editor said that he would like something from his pen, and, says he, "What do you think I sent him?" Says I, "Give it up." Says he: "Well, he said he wanted something from my pen, so I sent him a pig."

Senatorial Gossip.

The Washington correspondent of the Daily Graphic writes: Maj. Ben Perley Poore has issued proof copies of the valuable Congressional Directory he compiles as "Clerk of the Printing Records." Like its jolly editor, it grows in bulk and value year by year. Some of the statistics to be gleaned from its pages would interest the "arithmetic man" of the World as well as the general reader. Taking the Senate for illustration, and one finds that there is one Senator, Simon Cameron, over 74 years of age; and one, Dorsey, of Arkansas, just turned 31. The next youngest is Conover, of Florida—both carpet-baggers. Is there any probability of the old proverb proving true—"Whom the gods love die young?—for, of course, the gods must, in American eyes, love those who are elected to the United States Senate. Precocity runs in the new South. Spencer, of Alabama, is but 37; Patterson, of South Carolina, does not give his age, but looks about 35. There are, besides those named, two Senators whose ages are 38; two of 40 years; two of 42; three of 43; four of 44; one of 45; six of 46 years; one of 47; three of 49 years; three of 50; two of 51; the same of 53; one of 54; four of 55; the same of 56; two of 57; three of 58 years; three of 60; one of 61; one each, 62, 63, 64, 68, and 69 years of age. The latter is the venerable and urbane Gov. Buckingham, of Connecticut. There are two elderly Senators who seem anxious to conceal their ages. One is Gen. Logan, from whom Poore has never been able to wax that secret. Logan must be over 50, but he seems to have found the secret fountain of Ponce de Leon, and never appears to grow a day older. The other elderly gentleman who doesn't like to consult the register of his birth is Gilbert, of Florida. The united age of the seventy-two Senators now in the Chamber is over 3,000 years—being, without counting Gilbert, Logan, and Patterson, whose ages are not given, 2,970 years in the aggregate. Adding 150 for the three gentlemen named, the total will be 3,120, or an average of 43 years and 4 months for each. As will be seen, by far the largest number are in the very prime of life—fifty-two of the whole number being between [illegible] and 60 years of age.

The nativities of Senators are thus indicated: Pennsylvania claims eight Senators, including those who represent the State. New York has six Senators, including Messrs. Conkling and Fenton; Massachusetts has five sons in the Senate, including her own Senators; New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Maine and Connecticut are represented by native-born Senators, while Vermont and Maine give two to other States. Ohio has four of her sons in the Chamber, including John Sherman, and Virginia has five, including the two Senators of the State; New Jersey has two native-born Senators, and one other claims the State as his birthplace; Maryland claims three Senators, her own and one other; Delaware, Georgia, and North Carolina claim their own Senators as natives; Illinois and Indiana gave homes to two Senators from each, Gov. Morton and Gen. Logan both being born in the States they represent; Louisiana claims her Senator as a native; Alabama is the birthplace of one of the Texas Senators; South Carolina has one native-born Senator; Michigan the same; while Germany and Wales are claimed for Schurz and Jones. Twenty-two States hold the birthplaces of seventy Senators, the remainder being born abroad.

Following a Buck to Sea.

During the recent camp hunt on St. James Island by some of our citizens, an incident occurred which is perhaps without a parallel in the annals of hunting, and deserves to be recorded. A large buck, closely pursued by that famous stag hound, old Ring, belonging to Mr. Hopkins, took water and headed right out to sea. The dog, without hesitation, boldly followed him in his voyage over the "dark and treacherous waves." They were watched with intense interest by the hunters until each was a mere speck upon the surface of the sea, and until they were finally and totally lost to view. After some time, when it was supposed that both dog and deer had found a watery and perhaps a bloody grave, in mortal combat, or been devoured by sharks, a small object was discovered, which proved to be old Ring, returning from his long swim, much exhausted, but reaching the shore in safety. But, to the great surprise of the spectators after a time the deer also appeared in sight, making right for shore, on reaching which he was shot down by one of the hunters.—Tallahassee Floridian.

The Heat the Human Body Can Endure.

During the reheating of the furnaces in an iron establishment in England, says the British Journal of Science, the men worked when the thermometer, placed so as not to be influenced by the radiation of heat from the open doors, marked 120 degrees. In the Bessemer pits the men continue a kind of labor requiring great muscular effort at 140 In some of the operations of glass-making the ordinary summer working temperature is considerably over 100, and the radiant heats to which the workmen are subject far exceeds 212 degrees. In a Turkish bath, the shampooers continue four or five hours at a time in a moist atmosphere at temperatures ranging from 105 to 110 degrees. In enamel works men labor daily in a heat of over 300 degrees. On the Red Sea steamers the temperature of the stoke hole is 145 degrees. And yet in none of these cases does any special form or type of disease develop itself.

TIM'S REVENGE.

"Little Tim" was the name of him
  Of whom I have to tell,
And his abode on the western road
  In the busy town of L——.

As trains went down through the little town,
  He peddled through the cars
His stock in trade—iced lemonade,
  Cakes, peanuts, and cigars.

Conductor Dunn was the only one
  Who'd not his trade allow,
And so 'twixt him and Little Tim
  There always was a row.

At last one day they had a fray,
  And Timothy declared
He'd "fix old Dunn, 'as sure's a gun,'"
  If both their lives were spared.

So off he went, with this intent,
  And sold his stock in trade;
His earnings hard he spent for lard,
  And started for "the grade."

(This place, you know, is where trains go
  Upon the steep hillside,
And where—with lard—it isn't hard
  To set [illegible] a sliding.)

He took a stick and spread it thick,
  Remarking, with a smile,
"There'll be some fun when Mr. Dunn
  Commences to 'strike ile!'"

He lay in wait; the train was late
  And came a-puffing hard,
With heavy load, right up the road
  To where he'd spread the lard.

They tried in vain; that fated train
  Could not ascend the grade;
The wheels would spin with horrid din,
  Yet no advance was made.

Then little Tim—'twas bold in him—
  Cried out in accents shrill,
"Remember me, Conductor D.,
  When you get up the hill!"

MORAL.

Success in trade is up a grade
  That we should all ascend,
And with a will help up the hill
  Our fellow-man and friend;

When "on the road," don't incommode
  The seeker after pelf.
Or, ten to one, like Mr. Dunn,
  You won't get up yourself.

AN Irishman on observing a beautiful cemetery, remarked that he considered it a healthy place to be buried in.

A PLUMBER had an Irish lad in his employ, and one day, having occasion for a piece of zinc, ordered him to get one twelve inches square. "Yes, sir," said Pat, "twelve inches square, but how long?"

AN Irishman was asked if Lola Montez ever smoked. "Yes, sir, she did!" he exclaimed, "and so does every volcano, Perhaps you'll show me the lovely crater that don't smoke!"

AN Irishman quarreling with an Englishman, told him that if he didn't hold his tongue he would break his impenetrable head and let the brains out of his empty skull.

SIMPKINS, having wedded and settled, accumulated a slight scar over his eyebrow; the cause of which it is unnecessary to state; but an inquisitive acquaintance asked him whether it was the mark of the chicken-pox. "Worse than that," replied Simpkins, "it's the mark of the henpeck."

A MISSIONARY among the freedmen in Tennessee, after relating to some little colored children the story of Ananias and Sapphira, asked them why God does not strike everybody dead that tells a lie, when one of the least in the room answered: "Because there wouldn't be anybody left."

"WHAT do you sell those fowls for?" inquired a person of a man attempting to dispose of some chickens of questionable appearance. "I sell them for profits," was the answer. "Thank you for the information that they are prophets," responded the querist; "I took them to be patriarchs."

IT is stated that a wealthy Boston gentleman met a prominent Judge in the street a few days since and said, "Judge, I suppose you believe I am a sane man?" "Certainly," replied the Judge; "but why?" "I have made my will to-day, and I didn't know but some fifth cousin would swear I was non compos mentis, and so I wanted high judicial authority for my sanity." It won't do to contest that will while Judge X. is living.

IN 1775, after the battle of Lexington, and when Gage was shut up in Boston, an English writer, in "An Ode to the Earl of Dartmouth," gave a bit of advice to the Ministry:

The stubborn Yankees let alone;
They hurl defiance at the throne,
  And all your schemes unsettle;
To mark your act with more disgrace,
They fling their teapots in your face,
  And scald you with the kettle!

THERE is exhibited in St. Louis just now a curious bit of work in amateur art. This is a medallion of a sleeping face, very well executed, it is said, not in clay nor marble, but in butter. It came from the head and hands of an Arkansas farmer's wife who caught the idea while in her dairy. She made a quantity of studies with the aid of her butter paddle, cedar sticks, broom-straws, and a camel's hair pencil, and at last succeeded in modeling a really creditable head. It is ingeniously mounted in a milk-pan, which in turn is framed.

Congressmen Five and Twenty Years Ago.

Ben Perley Poore, in his Boston correspondence, thus alludes to the above topic: Five-and-twenty years ago there were seldom over five-and-twenty Congressmen who brought their wives to Washington and kept them there during the session. Up to that time the Senators and Representatives usually lived here in what they called "messes." From half a dozen to fifteen congenial spirits would take rooms at some boarding-house, with the understanding that no one else was to be admitted, and the party thus formed a family circle. In many of these "messes" no ladies were tolerated, while in others the chief attraction was the wife of some Senator or Representative, who was virtually the queen of the establishment. Was it to be wondered at that so many Congressmen used to pass their evenings in "fighting the tiger" at some of the comfortable gaming hells on the avenue, or in carousals at the gorgeously fitted-up establishments near by. Washington city was then a very immoral city, and many a fine intellect failed to preserve the owner from temptation.

Nowadays matters have changed. There are to-day in Washington forty-five Senators out of seventy-two, and one hundred and six Representatives out of two hundred and thirty-five, who are accompanied by their wives; and these one hundred and fifty-one wives of Congressmen exercise a potent influence. Gambling, drunkenness, and other vices which it is not necessary to name here, once so common among Senators and Representatives, are not now openly practiced, if practiced at all, by any of them. About forty Congressmen keep house, and are benefited by the social influences of home, while the others board at hotels or boarding-houses where agreeable circles are formed. Eighteen Senators and twenty-four Representatives have also here with them daughters who go into society; others are accompanied by female relations or friends, and thirty have with them children too young to go out. So the successors of men who used to pass their evenings at a faro bank or poker table, escort their daughters to balls, or remain at home and frolic with their children. All this is a decided change for the better.

Terrible Retribution in Store for America!

[From the Havana Voz de Cuba.]

A telegram announces the loss of the Virginius. We did not expect anything else from the American Government. It has acted with the Virginius the same as it did with the Florida, in order not to be compelled to return that steamer to Brazil. Such nobility corresponds with the course of those who are patronizing Cuban assassins and incendiaries in their heroic enterprise. This will not exempt them from paying the full value of the Virginius—she being the prize of the Tornado—nor from giving ample satisfaction and paying proper damages to Spain for the great injury which America has inflicted in breaking its treaty stipulations so scandalously in permitting the enlistment of men after such enlistment had been advertised beforehand in the journals, and protecting such men, when once out of the country, with their flag and vessels of war upon the high seas and in foreign ports, thereby making themselves the accomplices of assassins and incendiaries. If the weakness or fickleness of Castelar, not of Spain, delivered to them the Virginius, the bad faith of the American Government buried the pirate ship in the bottom of the sea, as it did the coal barge Upland at the mouth of the dry-dock in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, to prevent the departure of the Arapiles, which they feared so much. With such deeds they will gain everything except honor, and will transmit to the pages of history that which, instead of being their glory, will cause their descendants to blush for having had such illustrious ancestors. It is useless to try to gather pears from elms. What Grant, Sickles and the rest of the crew can produce, has already been fully demonstrated. For the great wrong of the Spanish nation, terrible atonements are reserved, and their hour will come.

High Railway Points.

The altitude of the highest point in the world where railroads are now in operation is at Apizaco, on the Vera Cruz and Mexico railway, 7,478 feet above the level of the sea. The next highest is on the Central Pacific, in the Nevada range, 7,111 feet above the level of the sea. The third is at Arequipa, an important city in Peru, 7,000 feet above the level of the sea, and, under the Peruvian railway system, the work is to be continued, and is expected to reach double that altitude. It sets out upon an ascent to pass to the west of the Eastern Cordilleras, and puts itself thus in connection with the famous lake of Titicaca and the entire Andine Bolivia, also with the great historic realm of the Incas, the ancient capital of Cuzco, and must reach a point at the breath-taking height of 14,000 feet above the level of the sea—less than 4,000 feet lower than the crater of Popocatepetl, and over 6,000 feet higher than the city of Mexico. The inspirations of our Peruvian neighbors are shown by these vast undertakings to be as grand as the traditional empire of their Incas, and as lofty as the sublime heights of their magnificent Cordilleras.—City of Mexico Two Republics.

Encouraging.

A conceited actor, who was by no means a favorite with the public, was sitting one evening in a cafe, when the waiter informed him that there was a gentleman outside who wished to see him. Forthwith the actor stepped into the street, only to find himself in the presence of a noted wag and inveterate practical joker, with whom he was, by the way, familiarly acquainted.

"Well?" said the actor, inquiringly.

"Well?" echoed the other, coolly.

"Did you call me?" asked the comedian, somewhat puzzled.

"I did," was the response.

"What may have been your motive?" the other went on to say.

"To encourage you," answered the practical joker; "for at the theater I don't remember that you were ever called out."

A Checkered Life.

The career of a witness in the Bazaine trial is thus reviewed by the Paris correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette: "The person to whom I allude is Maud'heux, who was employed as an emissary, by the commandant of Thionville, to communicate with Bazaine. This individual, who has just been brought before the Court of Assize in the Cote d'Or, is the son of a Paris advocate who was condemned to hard labor for life for forgery. The son was carefully brought up by his mother, and received a first-class education. He studied the law with success, mastered six or seven foreign languages, and might have made himself a capital position. However, he took to bad ways, and then enlisted. The discipline of the army did not improve him, and he was several times tried by court-martial. When his time was out in prison, he returned to civil life and committed forgery. He was tried, and passed several years in jail. When released, he took to literature under a false name, and produced fifteen or sixteen volumes on diverse subjects. He wrote for several papers, and obtained the editorship of a paper in Algeria, but he committed new crimes and was forced to fly. In order to live, he was reduced to accept the position of a common servant, under an assumed name. He got into fresh trouble, and then wandered from town to town, abusing the confidence of friends and relatives, deceiving people with his seductive tongue, and robbing ladies to whom he promised marriage. He then got work at an iron-master's in the Moselle, and it was there that Col. Turnier found him. Since the war he has committed half a dozen more forgeries, not to speak of other crimes."

A Useful Item.—Perhaps one of the most aggravating difficulties ever encountered by a busy housewife is that of attending the lighting of fires on still, damp mornings. The stove at first won't draw; even vigorous "blowing" will not suffice; and then when it does start, it is with a sort of explosion or outward rush of air which fills the room with smoke and gas, oftentimes puffing the unpleasant fumes in the face of the operator. The trouble is caused by the difficulty encountered in overcoming the inertia of the long column of air in the pipe or chimney, by the small column of air that can be forced up through the interstices of wood and coal, at the bottom of which the fire is kindled. All this may be remedied by simply putting a few shavings or bits of dry paper on the top of the wood or coal, and first lighting that. It immediately bursts into a blaze, because the air has perfectly free access to it from all sides, the heated air forces its way in the chimney, and establishes there an upward current. The match can then be applied to the kindling under the fuel, which will readily light, and, if dry, burst into a brisk flame.

Camphor as a Medicine.—The Scientific American lectures those people who make frequent use of camphor as a medicine. It says:

The physiological action of camphor is not yet understood; but, judging by the symptoms that follow the taking of a moderate dose, it may be called a nervous stimulant. It is somewhat like opium and alcohol therefore, in its action, when given in small quantities; but, when taken in large doses, it causes excessive irritation to the nervous system, producing convulsions and death. Camphor acts to irritate and congest and finally to inflame the mucous lining of the stomach, causing in the milder cases a form of dyspepsia, and in the more aggravated, ulceration of the stomach. From these two actions—namely, that of the nervous stimulant and local irritation—come all the good and evil of its use. We can, therefore, readily see how unsuited this drug is to be a household remedy.

No Danger of Strikes There.—It is such little incidents as this that keep alive one's faith in human nature and in the future: Just after the great fire, the employes of Macullar, Williams & Parker, Boston, of their own notion, proposed a reduction of salaries. Their generous offer was accepted. Since then the business of the firm has prospered, and, last Wednesday, the partners played the return game. They presented each of their clerks with a check for the full amount of the pay surrendered, and announced that all the salaries had been put back to the old figures. We wish such histories as this got into the newspapers a great deal oftener than they do.—Springfield Republican.

Vinegar Bitters.—Dr. J. Walker, a regular practicing physician of California, has conferred a priceless boon upon mankind, by the introduction of a "Bitters" compounded from herbs exclusively, which may be truly said to be superseding all others, and is becoming a bitter dose indeed for the charlatans and quacks, on account of its immense sale and universal popularity. Not only are these Vinegar Bitters, as he calls them, an invaluable tonic and alterative, but they are acknowledged as a standard Medicine, and the astonishing rapidity with which they cure diseases hitherto declared incurable seems almost incredible. After having been carefully tested, they are kept on hand in thousands of households, and used for any and every form of disease, many relying upon them in preference to the most celebrated physicians. They have become a recognized "Family Remedy," and properly so. 25

Marrying His Grandmother.—A marriage of rather a singular description took place at Greenbrier a short time since. A young man about 18 years of age, by the name of Zoph, married his grandmother, a lady nearly 40. By this coup de main he becomes his father's pa and his own grandfather, and thereby occupies a supremely independent and enviable position.—Richmond Whig.

Russian Prison Statistics.—On the 5th of September the number of prisoners in the Empire of Russia was 78,464. Russia has 620 prisons, with accommodations for only 59,200 persons. Over 14,000 prisoners had, therefore, to be put in temporary quarters, even more unhealthy than the regular prisons. The mortality of prisoners is, therefore, inordinately large. In the two years, 1868 and 1869, of 600,200 prisoners kept for a longer or shorter time in confinement, 151,852 had to undergo medical treatment, and 17,370 died. That is to say, one out of every four got sick, and one out of every nine died.

Cures All Kinds of Catarrh.

So successful has Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery proven, as a constitutional treatment for Catarrh, when coupled with the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, applied locally by the use of Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche (the only method of reaching the upper and back cavities of the head), that the proprietor of these medicines has long offered a standing reward of $500 for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure. The two medicines, with instrument, for $2 by druggists.

A SPECIMEN OUT OF THOUSANDS.

Cortland, Ill., April 28, 1873.

Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir: It is with pleasure I make this statement to you that after taking medicine for twenty years for the Catarrh, I tried your Catarrh Remedy and effected a cure, so that it has not troubled me for two years.

S. Wheeler.

STEALING OUR THUNDER.

People should beware of those impostors who copy Dr. Pierce's original style of advertising, by offering various sized rewards for cases of Catarrh and other diseases which they can not cure. Those who do not possess sufficient intelligence to write an original advertisement are not likely to have made great and valuable discoveries in Medicine.—[Com.

Milwaukee Monthly Magazine.

The Milwaukee Monthly Magazine is one of the best periodicals of its price published in America. The January number is one of the finest ever issued, being filled with stories, sketches, poems, etc., by the best Western writers, including two fifty-dollar stories—"Muggins' Holidays," by D. H. Johnson, and "Little Ruth," by Eben E. Rexford. It is furnished at the extremely low price of $1 a year. Address T. J. Gilmore, 407 Broadway, Milwaukee, Wis.

We were pleased to see, not long since, in one of our exchanges, some pretty severe remarks addressed to several persons who, during an interesting lecture by Rev. Jno. S. C. Abbott, kept a continuous coughing, which prevented many from hearing. People who cannot refrain from coughing, had better stay away from such places, or else take a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment with them.

Chapped Hands, face, rough skin, pimples, ringworm, salt-rheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and the skin made soft and smooth, by using the Juniper Tar Soap, made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. Be certain to get the Juniper Tar Soap, made by us, as there are many imitations made with common tar which are worthless.—[Com.

Neglected Coughs and Colds.—Few are aware of the importance of checking a Cough or "Common Cold" in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to "Brown's Bronchial Troches," if neglected often works upon the Lungs.—[Com.

Samples Free.—The Saturday Evening Post, 319 Walnut street, Philadelphia, gives a beautiful Chromo to every yearly subscriber.—[Com.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons,

Has been widely used, during the last twenty-five years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such unvarying success, that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. The shakes, or chills, once broken by it, do not return until the disease is contracted again. This has made it an accepted remedy, and trusted specific, for the Fever and Ague of the West, and the Chills and Fever of the South.

Ayer's Ague Cure eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack. It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dysentery or Debility follows the cure. Indeed, where disorders of the Liver and Bowels have occurred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will expel the poison and protect them from attack. Travelers and temporary residents in Fever and Ague localities are thus enabled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to ensue from continued exposure to Malaria and Miasm has no speedier remedy.

For Liver Complaints it is an excellent remedy.

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

C. N. U. No. 3

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, January 22, 1874.

The Kendallville Standard says the Democratic party is getting small, and confines it to Holman and Cox for not endorsing the salary grab. We would rather have two honest men compose that party, than be in power with the rascals that are stealing the country blind, from President down to postmasters.

* * *

The election of Judge Thurman to be his own successor in the United States Senate, will meet with the approval of every Democrat in the land, and not a few Republicans will be satisfied with it. Mr. Thurman has proven himself a statesman worthy of the better days of the Government, sound in judgment, correct in principle and imbued with a spirit of honest independence which raises him above the rabble by which he is surrounded. It is an honor to the State to have such a representative in the highest house of legislation.

* * *

The Republicans of the Ohio Legislature thought to play a nice game by the introduction of a resolution censuring the Congressional salary-grabbers for taking their part of the steal. This cheap buncomb of the Radicals was deftly turned against them, when a Democrat immediately moved an amendment to the resolution to include Grant among the rest of the thieves. This was too much to swallow. When it came up for passage the vote stood 59 Democrats for, and 43 Republicans against their own resolution. It wouldn't do to censure Grant! Oh, no.

* * *

The report on the case of Judge Durell, it is thought, will now be ready for three weeks to come. The testimony is voluminous, and is said to bear very hard upon Durell. Its publication will naturally have an effect favorable to ordering a new election in Louisiana. Republican advices from that State indicate utter ruin and prostration. The President is regarded by some as anxious to escape any share of responsibility for the present unfortunate state of affairs there, and the impeachment of Durell would be a heavy blow to the Kellogg usurpation.

* * *

A special dispatch says that nothing has been heard to-day by the Texas delegation in respect to the doings of Governor Davis, who is attempting to usurp the office of Governor in defiance of the people; but the belief of the Members of the House, and also in official circles, is that, finding the General Government will not back him he will to-morrow reluctantly abandon the contest. Davis is said, by those who know him, to be a bad, selfish, desperate and utterly reckless man, who would not hesitate to plunge the State into civil war, if he had any military support either from the President or the Texas Radicals. His applications for troops were, it is known, backed up by two United States Senators, Messrs. Flanagan and Hamilton, but the case was too gross and patent for the Government to intervene in his behalf.

* * *

Congress has repealed the odious salary grab only as relates to themselves, Grant still being allowed $50,000 a year. The repeal re-establishes the pay of Congress as it existed before the 4th of March, with the obnoxious and partial mileage. In other words, members of Congress will henceforth receive $5,000 per annum as salary, and 20 cents for every mile of travel coming to and going from the capital. Now, everybody knows this charge for mileage is a gross abuse. To receive it, therefore, is to ignore public sentiment entirely. The bill also passes over the increased pay since the 4th of March last, which members pocketed during nine months without rendering any service whatever, and before Congress was even organized, aggregating a round million of dollars. They are allowed to keep that plum as a solace for an enforced submission in other respects.

No change is made in regard to the President's double pay, or that of the Supreme Court. The Senate even voted down a proposition to restore the old salary of the President, to take effect at the end of the current term. So far as Gen. Grant is concerned, the majority were horified at the suggestion of violating the Constitution though they knew that his compensation was not fixed by the act of last March.

Our best Tea we still keep at the reduction of 15 cents per pound. We have all other grades, from 30 cents per pound up. Our 1 10 is the best in the market, and equal to any Tea sold at 50 cents more. Our only secret in selling Teas so much lower than other houses is that our immense sales of two and three chests a day enable us to purchase direct from Importers, and we, selling direct to the consumer, our customers save the profit of the speculator, and wholesale merchant, which is at least 10 to 20 cents per pound.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

J. A. BARNS, CONDUCTOR.

Examination of Teachers.

Examinations will be held at Auburn, on the first Saturday in each month until further notice.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co., Supt.

Samuel Greenamyer, of Wilmington township, is to have Webster's Dictionaries in each of his schools. Who is next?

Some of the schools visited within the last few weeks will bear comparison with any in the State—yes, or with those of any other State. Teachers be encouraged.

It is hoped that trustees will keep the Superintendent posted as to the change of time and place in holding their institutes, as he expects to attend as many of these as possible. A postal card willl do the work and is not very expensive.

Wilmington township held its first institute at Butler last Saturday. All but three of the teachers were in attendance, and great interest was manifested. Next meeting is at school house No. 7 on the first Saturday in February. Pupils of the schools, together with their parents and all others interested are invited to attend

Having, up to this time, visited quite a number of our schools, it gives me great pleasure to record the growing interest which teachers and pupils manifest in their school work. Teachers were never better prepared than at present, and never have they labored more faithfully than they are doing now.

Are not many more of our teachers able to take an educational journal of some kind, than are taking one now? A year and a half ago, only two copies of the Indiana School Journal were taken in this county. Since then we have raised this number to thirty or forty. This shows a more satisfactory state of things, but it is believed that even now three-fourths of our teachers take no educational paper whatever. Many of them are abundantly able to subscribe for one, much more so than some who are already subscribers. Many of our school journals are valuable help in the school room. Let us try some of them.

Township Institutes.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

According to notice given by Peter Shaffer, Trustee of Jackson township, the teachers met at the center school house on Saturday, January, 3rd, 1874. The teachers of the township were all present. Mr. Shaffer, the Trustee, being present, called the meeting to order. On motion, Mr. Allen was elected President, and Miss Malvina Keeran Secretary.

The principal work of the institute consisted in the discussion of questions, of which the following is a list: 1st, What benefit is derived from township institutes? 2nd, What is the best method of teaching the Alphabet to children? 3rd, What method of questioning is most beneficial to the class? 4th, Which is the better method of teaching spelling, orally or by writing? 5th, What is the best method of conducting a class in history in a district school? 6th, How can whispering be prevented in school?

Notwithstanding the fact that the questions are all those that have been discussed many times and before many institutes, the teachers found new life in them, and all manifested a lively interest in their discussion The fact that the whole number of teachers in the township were present, assures us that this work evidently means something, and that instead of meeting for mere pastime, we meet for the advancement of the science of teaching "the young idea how to shoot."

The institute adjourned to meet at the same place on Saturday, January 24th, 1874.

MALVINA KEERAN, Secretary.

SMITHFIELD TOWNSHIP.

Institute met at school house No. 5, January 10th, 1874. Called to order by J. W. Baxter, President. All the teachers were present. Recitations were as follows: The adjective, by W. Harms; penmanship, by A. Wolf; division of fractions, S. B. Mottinger; spelling, A. J. Beard—Mr. Keep receiving the highest grade; long division, H Harms. Noon recesss.

Afternoon session—Recitations—Greatest common divisor, by Miss Edie Jackman; map of Indiana drawn by H. H. Keep; physiology, by T. J. Baxter; least common multiple; by O. H. Taylor. Questions discussed: "Should we have the adjective divided as we usually find it in our text books?" "How should we teach grammar to primary pupils?" "How to govern a school" "Should whispering be abolished?"

Work was then assigned for next meeting, H. Keep was appointed critic, and the institute adjourned to meet in three weeks.

Our popular friend B. F. Casebeer has been appointed agent for Geo. Wood's celebrated organs. They are a good instrument and are becoming very popular. He will be found at Miller & Casebeer's Store, on Main-st., where he will be pleased to see all those desiring to purchase instruments.

We don't like to lecture our small boys because we like to see them have their fun, but it is a great abuse to hear them swear horrid oaths, and yell and chase along the sidewalks at late hours of the night to the disgust of everybody. We can't blame the boys much but their parents are certainly in fault. Boys under 12 years of age ought not to be allowed by their parents to be upon the streets after 8 o'clock, without having something to do.

See advertisement of Baltimore Road for ties in another column. They will be purchased in small or large quantities and paid for on delivery on the line of the road. Some of the village papers near the line think it an awful thing that as rich a company as the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad cannot pay its debts. We surmise that there are very few honest debts against that corporation. Sub-contractors will swindle their employees. The direct contractors of the road have so far paid out what money they have received except a per cent retained to prevent swindling by sub-contractors, and they are now coming up and adjusting the difficulties.

SAMUEL K. FIRESTONE, Adm'r,

The Press says, in regard to our bill against the Agricultural Society, that a bare majority consented to its payment to keep the COURIER quiet. The minority protested against its payment. The Press is certainly mistaken. There was no protest made at the time the bill was allowed We were present and know of what we speak. A suggestion was made by a friend of ours in a private way. If Charles Washington insists on the above then we say Charles Washington fraudulently lies. But we believe he is mistaken and take pleasure in correcting him. But we have nothing to do with the Press as to these bills. If the association makes that paper its mouth-piece then we may reply. Until then we decline any further controversy with a paper that we know has the ability to misrepresent. We are assured that this paper is not authorized to make such statements.

For a learned dessertation on the grange question the exquisite balderdash in the last Press takes the lead. It is evidently from the gifted pen of Charles Washington, and the only regret is that it did not appear sooner, as it would have saved the trouble of organizing the thousand of granges now in the west. He pronounces them a fraud upon the public.—If that public consists of thelves and swindlers that are daily praying upon the country, filling their own pockets and organizing monoplies to crush the poor man and the farmer, then they are a fraud and we believe they will be a large enough fraud to make all those who endorse and pander to these swindling villains tremble, and that at no distant day. Three fifths of the voters of the United States are farmers, and through them the abuses now prevalent over the land are to be corrected. We stand by the grangers, and shall do what we can to assist them in the great object in view.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

A Lady to Lecture for us.

We are pleased to anounce that Miss Raper perhaps the fairest lady lecturer in the west, of Ann Arbor Michigan, will lecture at the M. E. Church in Auburn, next Saturday evening for the benefit of the Sabbath School. Miss R. is a graduate of the State University, and her subject will be the relations of the Press to Human Progression. The following notices of her and her lectures speak loudly in her favor.

A correspondent writing from Fairfield under date of the 28th says: "The good people of Fairfield were entertained last evening at the M. E. Church, by a lecture from Miss Anna V. Raper. Her subject was "The relation of the Press to Human Progression." The lecture was indeed a rare treat, and evidently the result of a fine culture and extensive study. In her delivery, Miss R. is deliberate, self-possessed, and at home.—Adrian Times.

Also in regard to the same lecture we copy from the Hudson Post, the following extract.

"A more refined, and at the same time forcible effort, I have never heard from he lips of a lady. And extract from the Tecumseh Record: Her theme was the Relation of the Press to Human Progress" which she handled throughout in a most scholarly manner showing that she had carefully studied her subject.

We hope that a large audience will greet her. The Sabbath school needs a benefit to get a new library and we hope every one that can raise 25 cents will be there. Let your money do you and somebody else a little good once.

The Square Men of Toledo.

Below we give the names of the enterprising men of Toledo, those who know their business and do it. Among them we may mention Messrs Hamilton and King, who worked diligently and faithfully to bring the subject of the Eel River Road before the citizens and solicited their aid. To them all honor is due especially among the large list of white men who so numerously infest the "corn city." Every one of these contributed to the building of the Eel River road from this point to Butler and we place their names upon the scroll of honor;

DEATHS.

BARKLEY—Franklin A. Barkley was born in Franklin County, Penn., July 4th 1845, and after a long protracted illness died at Detroit Mich., on Jan. 12, 1874 aged 28 years, 6 months and 8 days. His disease was a mysterious nervous disorder, baffleing the wisdom of our physicians. In hope of relief he was taken to Detroit and his medical attendants there were wholy unable to determine satisfactorily the nature of his disorder. He was attacked with excruciating pains in his head—in one of these paroxysms of pain he passed away. He gave every evidence of a change of heart, and purposed to living a new and better life if spared. He was a christian and died happy.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from hence forth: yea saith the the spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them"—Rev. 14-13.

The funeral discourse was delivered at the Presbyterian church by Rev. Geo. A. Harter a Lutheran minister, of which denomination the wife of the deceased is a member.

E.

Do Not! Do Not!! Do Not!!!

Do not employ such physicians as give you opium, laudanum, morphine or hydrate of chloral to stop your pain or cough, as those narcotics will not cure the disease, but only lull you to certain death with a false hope. But call or send to Dr. S. Clay Todd, No. 4 East Columbia street, Fort Wayne, who will give you immediate relief by removing the cause of the disease, and there will be no more pain, and you will rapidly recover your ullhealth and strength.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

A REVOLTING scene took place in the Hudson county (N. J.) jail, the other day, at the execution of Jacob Michels. After Michels had been hanging about three minutes, and while being lowered for the convenience of the physicians the knot slipped, and he fell heavily to the ground. IT is alleged by a Washington correspondent, who derives his authority from a naval officer at Key West, that it was understood among naval officers there that the Virginius would go to the bottom before reaching New York. He states further that the meteorological charts of the signal service were consulted so as to ascertain the probability of a storm which would furnish an excuse for the sinking of the vessel.

Black."....Mr. Hurlbut, of Illinois, has introduced in the House a bill chartering a double-track trunk railroad from New York to the Missouri river, for freight only. AT last the insurgents who have so long been holding Cartagena, Spain, against the siege and bombardment of the Government military and naval forces, have been obliged to capitulate. The city has been surrendered, and is now in possession of the Government.

SPANISH items: The Madrid Government announces that order has been restored in that city. A portion of the force engaged in the siege of Cartagena has marched against the Carlists. The Government forces, on occupying Cartagena, found the fortifications and all the buildings badly damaged by the bombardment. PRESIDENT GRANT has refused to send troops to Texas to aid Gov. Davis in preventing the newly-elected State Government from taking control. He telegraphs to Davis that the request was not made in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, and pertinently adds: "The acts of the Legislature of Texas providing for the recent elections have received your approval, and both political parties having made nominations and having conducted the political campaign under its provisions, would it not be prudent, as well as right, to yield to the verdict of the people as expressed by their ballots?"

HON. ALLEN G. THURMAN has been re-elected United States Senator from Ohio. The Democrats voted solidly for him, while the Republicans supported Gov. Noyes....Senator Sargent, of California, produced something of a sensation in the Republican Senatorial caucus which assembled the other day to consider the nomination of Caleb Cushing. The Senator produced and read a letter written from Washington to Jeff Davis, dated March 21, 1861. The letter began with "Dear Friend," and recommended to Davis "My young friend, Archibald Rowan." The letter proceeds to state that said Rowan desired to join the fortunes of the Confederacy; that he had invented a rifle which might be of service to the rebels; that he had contributed to DeBow's Review, published at Richmond, Va., and had used his best efforts to overthrow the American Union. In closing, Mr. Cushing hoped that Mr. Davis would use his best endeavors to advance the interests of young Rowan. Jesse Bright wrote a similar letter for the same young man, which, being intercepted, led to Bright's ejection from the United States Senate. Rowan had been a clerk in the Attorney-General's office while Cushing was Attorney-General. He took this letter to Davis, who eventually placed him at the head of the Confederate Produce Loan Bureau. This letter was captured with the archives of the Confederacy, and placed in the hands of the Southern Claims Committee. It was taken a few days ago, when being copied by a clerk, to Adjutant-General Townsend, who sent it to Belknap. Belknap, in turn, sent it to Grant. The letter fell into Sargent's hands. Before the reading of the letter a ballot had been taken, and eleven Senators had expressed themselves favorable to confirmation. After the production of the fatal document another ballot was had, and not a solitary vote was cast for Cushing....The Texas Legislature convened at Austin on the 13th inst., and organized without opposition from Gov. Davis or the Federal authorities....The Virginia Legislature has elected Col. Robert E. Withers United States Senator for six years from the 4th of March.

THE funding scheme recommended by Gov. Kellogg has passed the Louisana Legislature. It repudiates forty per cent. of the State debt. ....Advices from Texas represent that the Legislature will certainly meet, notwithstanding the decision of the State Supreme Court that the recent election was unconstitutional. Gen. Augur, the commander of that district, is credited with the opinion that the military will not interfere in the squabble....Memphis will celebrate Mardi Gras in grand style.

THE Pennsylvania coal miners are stubbornly resisting the proposed reduction of wages. Orders have been given for a general strike in the Schuylkill coal fields, and nearly the whole anthracite and bituminous region of Pennsylvania is involved in the struggle. It is estimated that over fifty thousand men are already idle, and the number is being constantly increased. The contest threatens to be a long and desperate one, as both the operators and miners manifest an unyielding stubbornness.

THE Michigan Southern, Michigan Central, and Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne railroads have abolished the free-pass system....The National Board of Trade commenced its session at Baltimore on the 13th inst.

THE strike of the miners in Pennsylvania has assumed a new aspect. A portion of the workmen have not only refused to accept the reduction of wages proposed by their employers, but have entered a counter demand for an increase of ten per cent. over the schedule of 1873, and are disposed to insist upon their demand.

After considerable debate, and the rejection of a number of amendments, the whole question was finally disposed of by the adoption of a substitute offered by Conkling, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act making appropriation for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874," as provides for the compensation of public officers and employes, whether members of Congress, Delegates, or others, except President of the United States and Justices of the Supreme Court, be, and the same hereby is, repealed, and the salaries, compensation and allowances of all said persons, except as aforesaid, shall be fixed by the law in force at the time of the passage of said act; provided, that milage shall be allowed for the first session of the Forty-third Congress; that all moneys appropriated as compensation to members of the Forty-second Congress, in excess of milage and allowances fixed by law at the commencement of said Congress, and which shall not have been drawn by members of said Congress respectively, or which, having been drawn, have been returned in any form to the United States, are hereby covered into the Treasury of the United States, and declared to be moneys of the United States absolutely the same as if they had never been appropriated as aforesaid:

Transportation in Congress.

The House Committee on Railways and Canals has prepared a bill to regulate the rates for the transportation of passengers and freights on all the railroads in the country. It begins by declaring that every line of railroad shall be considered as engaged in commerce between the States, and that any road that exacts unreasonable toll shall be punished for extortion. It provides for the appointment of a Board of Railroad Commissioners by the President with the consent of the Senate, one of whom shall be chosen from each of the judicial circuits of the country; and this Board shall thoroughly investigate the whole subject of rates for transportation on the various railways, and draw up a schedule of maximum prices which the road may charge. These schedules shall be filed in the office of the Clerk of the Court, and certified copies of them shall be posted in each of the offices and depots of the several roads. In other words, the maximum rates of transportation on each of the railways of the country shall be fixed by the Government.

Playing Billiards with his Nose.

An American has come forward with a fresh notion, which may entirely revolutionize the world of billiards. The gifted person flings away the time-honored cue and undertakes to conquer his opponents by simply substituting his nose in its place. In a report of a match played with Dufton the other day, we read: "His modus operandi is very simple. Bufton plays a break with the cue in the usual way, and as soon as he leaves off Jefferson bends over the table, taps the ball with his nose, and rolls it into a pocket or caroms from it on the other ball." There are undoubtedly some advantages in thus dispensing with the cue. The player, we presume, is not obliged to chalk his nose.—London Daily News.

CAPITAL appears in England to have learned a lesson from labor. On the principle of fighting fire with fire, it now proposes to meet combination with combination. For this purpose, the English manufacturers and capitalists have formed a society called the "National Federation of Associated Employers of Labor." In availing itself of the same weapons which the trades unions use, the association distinctly disclaims any aggressive intentions. It will publish an organ, watch every legislative measure which tends to affect the relations between employers and employes, and seek to give to "education, intelligence, and capital" their fair share of influence in the constituencies. The association includes the names of the most wealthy manufacturers in the country, and represents a body which employs about two millions of workingmen.

Tree-Planting.

A correspondent of the Farm Journal gives the results of experiments in the way of planting forest trees, as follows: In April, 1868, I planted about two acres of cottonwood seedlings, of one year's growth; they were about eighteen inches high. The trees were planted four feet apart each way, which I think is about the right distance, as by close planting we get more growth in the trunks and less in the lower branches. I marked the ground one way, and planted across the marks with a spade, which I think is the best way. In this way I got the rows straight enough to cultivate well both ways, which is important. My trees were cultivated two seasons. Since that they have had no care. They are now from twenty to thirty feet high, and growing finely. In 1869 I planted some cottonwood cuttings in the same way, but neglected to cultivate them. The result is, they are not half as large as those a year older. I have planted trees and cuttings of different kinds by setting them in a deep furrow and turning another furrow against them; this does very well on a hedgerow or for a narrow belt. In planting black walnut, my method is to bury the nuts in a dry place in the fall, and plant them about corn planting time the next spring, four feet apart each way. Cover two or three inches deep. Timber planted in this way may be allowed to stand till the trees are large enough for fuel or fencing; then thin them out as occasion requires. I have sowed a small quantity of honey-locust seed the present season, which is growing well. Gather the seed in the fall, and when dry, pound the seed out of the pods with a stick. When the ground is ready, say about the first of May, give the seed a good scalding, and plant on clean ground and cultivate well. Two cottonwood seedlings planted in prairie sod in the spring of 1867, and mulched the same summer, were killed by fire last fall; one of them measured twenty-seven inches in circumference, the other a trifle less. As the cottonwood tree is perhaps the fastest growing native tree in Nebraska, I would first plant a grove of that, then black walnut, soft maple, hickory, honey-locust, red elm, etc. I have had very little experience with any but native trees.

New Agricultural Machine.

The English Mechanic says, Messrs. McDonne and Leuchan, of Dublin, have invented a machine which performs the operations of rolling, sowing, and harrowing simultaneously. The roller is of wrought iron, riveted on cast-iron wheels, forming a cylinder six feet in length by three feet in diameter. Immediately above the roller is a sowing apparatus, by which the seed is rapidly delivered, a star wheel of four points keeping the conductors in constant motion. As the seed is strewn a harrow of four rows of oblique teeth set in a central axis turns up the earth over the seed. The harrow is kept in motion by an endless chain or belt which passes round the extreme end of the large cylinder, and fits the groove of a small wheel at the corresponding end of the harrow. Every time the large roller turns over, the circular harrow turns nearly five times, causing the teeth to tear up the soil about twenty times at each of the revolutions. Meantime the seed-conductor and distributor rises and falls twelve times during each of these revolutions, and there is a contrivance by which the quantity required to be sown can be regulated. A lever is also connected with the supports of the harrow, and rest upon a fulcrum placed at a suitable part of the frame of the machine. By means of this lever the harrow portion of the machine can be raised off the ground and the roller only used; and the distributor or sower may be worked simultaneously by means of the chain-band, which can be closed and the flow of seed stopped. The machines can be easily made to suit either the purposes of sowing corn or grass for pasturage.

Death of a Good Old Horse.

A remarkable old horse called Charlie, the property of Mr. Dexter E. Wadleigh, of Boston, died recently at the age of twenty-five. He was never sick except during the epizootic of 1872. Probably no horse was ever more attached to his master or more anxious to do his bidding than Charlie. He has traveled seventy miles in one day without exhibiting fatigue, and was as fresh as ever for the next day's work. During one year his owner drove him over 3,000 miles. When purchased, Charlie was inclined to be balky, and would stop suddenly; but his master never struck him with a whip, choosing rather to conquer him with kindness, in which he was successful. He was usually driven in a chaise; and when these contrary notions would seize him, his master would turn him in a large circle, working patiently and kindly with him for a few moments, when he would be "all right." By this method Mr. Wadleigh soon succeeded in breaking him of the habit entirely. During the twenty-five years he never struck the horse a blow that he would be unwilling to receive upon his own back. Charlie was so familiar with his master's step that he would always turn toward him as he approached, and greet him with an affectionate whinny.

The Financial Outlook.

The Bank of England rate is now 4 per cent., and everything begins to wear a more prosperous look in England, as well as here. During the last two years a constant drain of gold has been going on, resulting from the decision of the German Government in 1871 to adopt a gold standard instead of the mixed currencies, which had previously been in use, mainly based on a silver standard. For this purpose, the general stock of gold throughout the world had to be drawn upon, and this resulted in a succession of monetary spasms, gradually increasing in intensity, amounting in 1873 to a panic, or something like a panic, in every gold-using country. As the difficulty was aggravated by the crash in this country, the general stringency found its way at last to the center of exchange in London, and sent the bank rate up to 9 per cent., from which it has suddenly dropped to 4½. The German Government has now issued £50,000,000, a sum which, it is calculated, will replace the old currency, and it is expected that in the Prussian States the coinage of gold this year, will be limited to £5,000,000. It seems likely, therefore, that, so far as money stringency is concerned, gold-using countries are entering upon easier times. The year also opens with better prospects for trade both in England and this country.—The Nation.

The Story of Lincoln's Proclamation.

Mr. Seward told me the story of the Emancipation Proclamation. Day after day the most earnest and acrimonious debates took place in relation to the propriety or impropriety of the President issuing such a proclamation. Although an attentive listener to these discussions of his Secretaries, Mr. Lincoln did not take active part in them. So much was this the case that several, at least, of his advisers were very uncertain as to what his ultimate determination would be. So bitter did the controversy grow that it resulted, after a time, not only in a breach of personal, and to some extent, even official, relations between certain of the Cabinet officers, but eventually, even in a prolonged discontinuance of Cabinet meetings. During the interregnum matters which had been usually discussed and disposed of at such meetings had to be settled by inter-departmental correspondence. One of the other Secretaries, with the obvious purpose of annoying—I use a mild word—Mr. Chase, addressed several very important official communications directly to me, ignoring the head of the department. This condition of things lasted until Mr. Seward received an autographic letter from the President requesting him to attend, without fail, a meeting of the Cabinet which he proposed to hold on the morrow. All the other Secretaries received similar letters, and not one of them knew or entertained any confident conjecture about the particular purpose for which they were called together. At the appointed time Mr. Lincoln waited until they were all assembled, having been unusually reticent to the first comers. He then addressed them somewhat as follows: "Gentlemen, I have asked you to come here that I may have the opportunity of reading to you a proclamation which I am about to issue. Before proceeding to read it, however, I desire to say that not only do I not invite any discussion about the propriety or impropriety of its issue, but that I am unwilling to listen to any. My mind is made up. On the contrary, as to matters of form, I wish you to make any suggestions that may occur to you." He then drew from his pocket a manuscript, and, to the amazement of some, if not all of, those assembled, proceeded to read the emancipation proclamation. When he had finished, for a while nobody spoke. Mr. Seward was the first to break the silence, and to recommend a verbal alteration. Mr. Lincoln adopted it without a word of objection. Other gentlemen suggested further changes. Mr. Lincoln accepted them all without discussion. When nobody had any more suggestions to make, the meeting broke up, and the ministers soon dispersed. The next day the emancipation from slavery of 4,000,000 human beings in the United States was published to the world. Mr. Lincoln had waited until the people were ripe for it; and, what he had first looked upon as inopportune, he at last regarded as expedient and necessary.—Maunsell B. Fields' Memoirs.

The Money Value of an Immigrant.

A statement of the total immigration, from the earliest records of our national history, including the fiscal year 1873, ending June 30th, makes the grand aggregate of about 8,750,800. An analysis of our population shows that nearly fifteen per cent. of it is made up of actual immigrants, and that twenty-five per cent. is of unmixed foreign population. In addition to the enormous increase of societary movement, the direct contribution to the national wealth, in the form of active capital brought by the immigrants to this country, is an important consideration. Reckoning each immigrant to be worth $800 to the country, we have the enormous sum of $7,000,640,000 added to the national wealth since immigration commenced, and probably five-sixths of this sum have been added since 1820, and constituting nearly one-third of the annual productions of the several years. Since 1820 the wealth added to the country annually by this new civilizing element has been about $6,000,000,000, and, at the rate of immigration for the year ending June 30, 1873, the grand total for the decades would be about $19,647,404,200. The States increasing in wealth most rapidly have been those which have secured the largest number of immigrants. All the Western States, especially, owe much of their progress and prosperity to the elements from abroad. —Appletons' Journal.

The Editor.

We have seen many definitions of many names, words, and phrases, but the following of the editor, given by Josh Billings, is about the best we ever yet encountered:

An editor is a male being whose biziness is to navigate a nuse paper. He writes editorials, grinds out poetry, inserts deths and wedding, sorts out manuscripts, keeps a waste basket, blows up the "devil," steals matter, fites other people's battles, sells his paper for a dollar and 50 cents a year, takes white beans and apple sass for pay when he kan git, raizes a large family, works 19 hours out of every 24, knows no Sunday, gits damned bi everybody, and once in a while whipt bi sumboddy, livs poor, dies middle-aged and often broken-hearted, leaves no money, iz rewarded for a life of toil with a short, but free obituary puff in the nuzepapers. Co-Operation in Buying and Selling.

BY JAMES A. CREIGHTON.

In discussing this question I shall consider, simply, will it pay the farmer? Can he save money by co-operation in buying and selling?

The present system of buying and selling through a long chain of agents, or middle-men, reaching from the manufacturer to the farmer, and back again from the farmer to the consumer, is greatly to our disadvantage. We pay all the expenses both ways. A manufacturer in one of our large cities, for instance, of reapers or sewing machines, in order to reach his customers, employs a General Agent to take charge of his business in a given territory; under him a State Agent for each State, and under him a County Agent in each county. And instead of buying of the manufacturer, we buy of the County Agent, who gets from 20 to 50 per cent.; the State Agent, say 10 per cent., and the General Agent 5 per cent. So there is from 35 to 65 per cent. of what we pay swallowed up before it reaches the manufacturer Thus, when we buy a $200 harvester, at least 35 per cent—$70—or if an $80 sewing machine, 50 per cent.—$40—of what we pay for each machine sticks to the fingers of that unnecessary chain of agents through which these things reach us. And the same is true of almost every article of merchandise which the farmer uses.

The smooth-tongued gentleman who calls on us with his matched greys and fine carriage, and persuades us that we need a reaper, or our wife that she needs a sewing machine, must be paid for his visit. His fancy rig and handsome salary are wrung from our hard earnings. The manufacturer does not pay a cent of this expense. He must have back all the money he invests, with his full profits on the investment.

In short, under the present system, the farmer buys everything he uses at an advance of from 25 to 100 per cent. above cost of production. At least one-third of all the money he pays out goes, not to pay the cost of producing the article he buys, but to pay commissions and profits to the agents and merchants through whom he receives it.

My plan for buying would be something like this: Let there be a grange or club in every township; elect a contract agent, who shall represent all the farmers in the State, and make arrangements with manufacturers and wholesale dealers to supply us with such things as farm machinery of every description, furniture, lumber, building material, groceries, and everything else we need that can be had cheaper by such an arrangement. When the State Agent has secured the best terms possible, let him issue a circular containing the names of all the articles he has arranged for, and the price at which they are to be furnished, and have this circular sent to every grange and club in the State. Then any member who desires to buy anything on the list can notify the Secretary of his grange or club, who can order through the State Agent anything desired, which will be shipped to his nearest freight office at the price published, to be paid for on receipt. The order should be made through the Secretary, or some other officer of the grange or club (of whom it would be well to require a small bond), to protect the Agent from loss through irresponsible persons, or those not members. By this plan the most favorable terms can be secured for anything we may wish to buy. Through our State Agent we can offer inducements to manufacturers and wholesale merchants that will secure better terms for us than can be had by any single agent or retail merchant. By concentrating our patronage we will actually be able to make our purchases at less than ordinary wholesale prices. We have tried it in Wayne county, Ill., and find it works well. When we completed our county organization the first of last June, Racine (Wis.) wagons were selling there, complete, at $110; without box or seat, $100. Now we get them complete, at the shop, at $74; without box or seat, $64.

Double-seat spring wagons with three springs were selling at $145. Now we get them at the shops for $86.

Eight-horse power threshing machines were selling at $750. Now we get the same machine for $530.

The Keystone Superior, I X L, and Buckeye Wheat Drills were selling at from $85 to $90. They are furnished us at $60 to $65.

The Home, the Victor, and other sewing machines were selling at $75 to $125. We now get the Home for $33, the Victor for $37.50, and several others from 40 to 50 per cent. off.

Walking cultivators were selling at $36. We now get them at the shop for $18.

The Champion Fan Mill (or wheat fan) was selling at $35 and could not be bought for less. Now the manufacturers furnish them to us at $17.

Steel Center breaking plows had never sold for less than $22. We now get them $12.50.

Diamond corn plants were selling at $65. We get them now at $40.

Moline breaking plows were sold by the agents at from $13 to $19. They are furnished us at from $7.70 to $11.25 according to size.

We have arranged for almost hundreds of other implements and articles at from 25 to 50 per cent. off of catalogue prices.

There have been but very few instances where manufacturers or wholesale dealers have refused to sell to us as cheap as to agents or retail dealers. All they want to know is that we mean business, and that by making concessions they can secure our trade; and we will be able to secure concessions in prices in proportion as we concentrate our patronage.

When a man buys a fanning mill, a wagon, a cultivator, a sewing machine, etc., and goes home with his new purchase and one-fourth or more of his money left, I tell you his heart is lighter and his purse heavier, than they used to be after making such purchases.

This is the effect of co-operation in buying. By it, hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars will be saved to the farmers of Illinois in a single year. It will enable many a poor man to lift the mortgage from his farm and save a home for his little ones. By it many a father will be enabled to send his bright-eyed son or daughter to the college or academy, and the neat new cottage will take the place of the cabin or the hovel.

Inauguration of the First Grange Governor

[Madison Wis. (Jan. 5) Cor. Chicago Times.]

To-day, at noon, the State officers elected by the reform party met at the assembly chamber in the Capitol, when the oath of office was administered to each by Chief Justice Dixon. The ceremonies were brief, and without any snign of show. An unusually large number of people from different portions of the State were present, and evinced great interest in the proceedings. After the oath of office had been administered, a grand rush was made for the executive chamber, each eager to get the first shake of the hand of the "Farmer Governor." In this apartment was a mixed medley of human beings, republicans and reformers, lawyers, professors, merchants, mechanics, and farmers, all bearing smiling countenances, as though some great blessing had been vouchsafed to them.

Gov. Taylor remained in private consultation with ex-Gov. Washburn a few minutes after arriving at the executive chamber, when the late occupant of the gubernatorial chair addressed his successor in these words: "Governor, I wish you much success. I see here many friends eager to meet you with congratulations. Good day, sir."

Both clasped hands and gave a hearty shake and a decided demonstration of approval was noticeable among the assembled spectators.

* * * By this time the reformed Governor of our great Commonwealth was receiving congratulations. His stately form had a position in the center of the executive chamber, and his brawny hands were outstretched to all; politicians and street laborer received the same treatment; Senator or Assemblyman, judge or justice, were not hailed by the farmer executive sooner than the poor and honest tiller of the soil. The mechanic employed the half hour allotted him for dinner, to visit the scene and shake an honest and hard working man's hand—a hand that is to wield the executive for the next two years. There were men present who had never before dared to darken the doors of the apartment, but now they forgot the stiff and polished customs of former occasions and their rough home-spun blouses rubbed fine broadcloth. Their right there was recognized, and their unwashed hands of toil were welcome to Gov. Taylor. An hour and a half of greeting and friendly chat was indulged in, when the affair closed, and all repaired to dinner, seemingly with light hearts.

No event for the past 20 years has caused such a feeling of wonder and amazement as the metamorphosis of to-day. For near 20 years the Republicans have held unlimited sway in this State, during which time not a man of opposite faith has been permitted to hold official position. To see this state of things changed—peacefully and quietly—in a day, and an entire set of new men, of a new political faith, change places with the old incumbents, is an event long to be remembered. The new men in power have an open field before them. It is within their power to long retain the vantage ground the people have given them. If they but grapple with the live questions of the hour with honest zeal and heroic fortitude, determined to serve the people, regardless of party henchmen, they will deserve, and cannot fail to receive, the long lease of power which it is in their power to obtain.

The Iowa Grangers.

(Des Moines Cor. Chicago Tribune.)

Your correspondent to-day paid a visit to the office of Mr. J. D. Whitman, State Agent for the Patrons of Husbandry, with a view to learning something of the workings of the agency for the past year, and of its plans and prospects for the future. He was informed that Mr. W. was at present in Chicago, looking after the interests of the order. The gentleman's secretary, however, vouchsafed all the information in his power. The agency was instituted by the Patrons about eight months since, and was at the time simply an experiment. The object was to make the agency a medium of communication between the manufacturer and consumer; and the endeavor has been to reduce the price of agricultural implements and machinery. That the enterprise has been successful, the following statements, gleaned from the books in the Agent's office, will show:

The agency has handled over $200,000 worth of machinery. The saving to Patrons on sewing machines alone aggregates over $5,000; and, for the past week, on reapers and mowers, over $3,000.

Direct shipments of stock, grain, and farm produce are now made in large quantities to the agency in Chicago; and the difference in amounts realized upon grain, between those consigned to the agency and to outsiders, has been from 10 to 20 cents per bushel. The work of the agency is constantly increasing. Last spring it gave its whole patronage for plows to one of the factories here. The business soon grew too large for a single factory, when a second one was attached; and now arrangements have been made to run a third here in the city. In addition to these, there are three other large factories in the State controlled by the Patrons.

Manufacturers are fast awaking to the power and influence of the grange in Iowa, and are soliciting patronage of the State agency, both in person and by letter. The secretary showed your correspondent a large book, in which were filed propositions from nearly all the leading manufacturers of the country, asking for patronage, and giving lowest cash figures.

Letters of inquiry and orders for produce are continually being received from all parts of the country. Within the past few days, orders have been filled for parties in Vermont, Massachusetts, West Virginia, Alabama, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, New York, and Maryland.

The agency has done an immense business, and proved an unexampled success. It will be seen that the farmers of Iowa propose to have a voice and exert an influence in all matters pertaining to their interests, whether on the farm or in the city.

The indications are that the State Agency will do a much larger business the ensuing year than in the past. Within the past thirty days, cash-orders for machinery, to be filled within the next two months, have been received to the amount of over $18,000—on which Agent Whitman estimates a saving of at least $7,000, as the same machinery could not have been purchased for outsiders for less than $25,000. All machines are subjected to severe tests before being offered to the Patrons.

How Monopolies Thrive.

The farmers of the West little realize how much of their yearly earnings over and above what is legitimate according to our rules of equity, go to increase the wealth and power of monopolies. The honest, credulous agriculturists are being robbed from year to year of from forty to fifty per cent. of their earnings by the railroads and the manufacturers, and it is high time that they united in an earnest protest. This will be seen by the following comparison:

There are in the State of Illinois 376,441 persons engaged in agriculture, whose total productions amount to $210,860,580. This gives to every farmer a gross average income of $560. Out of this amount interest on capital invested and taxes must be paid, and out of the balance he must support himself and family.

Now, in the State of Massachusetts there are 279,880 persons engaged in manufactures, whose total products amount to $553,912,000. Deducting out $334,413,982, the cost of material used, leaves a net profit of $219,498,586. This gives to every person engaged in manufacturing an average income of $749.

To enable the Massachusetts manufacturer to realize $749, the Illinois farmer must pay an average of 50 per cent. more than a fair and reasonable price for his manufactured wares. He must pay the railroads from 20 to 25 per cent. for the transportation of his products to market, before he can make his purchases and donation of fifty per cent. to the manufacturer.

How long shall such unfairness continue? How much longer can the Illinois farmers afford to support so liberally the great monopolies? Farmers, you must look to your interests and save yourselves from ruin. Be warned in time and lay aside all old personal and party prejudices and unite like honest, earnest men to crush out the heartless powers that are now wringing from you your hard earnings and gradually reducing you to the condition of English serfs.—Woodstock New Era.

The Contrast in Iowa.

At the session of the Iowa Legislature in the winter of 1872-3 there were in attendance four representative of the Grangers, who were soliciting some relief from the freight rates of the railroad monopoly. After they had been there some two or three weeks, some railway chattel introduced the following resolution, which passed the Senate by nearly a strict party vote:

> "WHEREAS, The e gentlemen appear to be entirely destitute of any visible means of support; therefore, be it
>
> "Resolved, By the Senate, the House concurring, that the Janitor permit aforesaid gentlemen, in gathering up all the waste papers, old newspapers, etc., from under the desks of the members, and they be allowed one postage stamp each, the American Agriculturist, What Greeley Knows About Farming, and that they be permitted to take with them to their homes, if they have any, all the rejected railroad tariff bills, including Richards' and O'Donnell's Tariff Commission bills, Duncombe's speech on railroad tariffs, Beardsley's speech on female suffrage, Clausen's reply, Kasson's speech on Barnacles, Blakeley's Dog bill, Teale's Liquor bill, and be given a pass over the Des Moines Valley railroad, with the earnest hope that they will never return to Des Moines."

These resolutions were smothered and not sent to the House, and the valiant pettifogger who introduced them has been buried where it will be hard at any political resurrection to find him. He will probably be permitted to howl around the town courts at $3 per hour—and $2 extra for swearing—the balance of his life.

This winter the lower house is in the control of the Grangers, and the friends of the author of the above infamous resolution have a bare majority in the Senate. "Time at last brings all things even."—Industrial Age.

Arbitration vs. Lawsuits.

Grangers don't like lawsuits. They know they are vexations and expensive luxuries that farmers can't afford to indulge in—that they cost more than they are worth; that the lawyers' fees, witness' fees, Sheriff's fees, Clerk's fees, jury fees and other expenses make even a victory in the law an expensive affair. Hence, many of the Grangers say they don't want to go to law. They prefer to have their differences settled by their friends and brothers, without expense—and they favor arbitration. Many granges have adopted clauses in their Constitutions obligating their members to settle all their troubles by committees appointed by their respective granges. Already a great deal of litigation has been prevented and heavy costs saved. The farmers make too little nowadays to throw away what little they do make to feed and support other classes, unless compelled to do so. Reforms like this, one after another, will be introduced in the grange, and thus a great saving of time and money will be effected.

Patrons of Husbandry.

The Patrons of Husbandry, it seems, are not confined to the West alone. There are several "granges" in this State, and the New York papers of yesterday recorded the proceedings of an organization very much similar in character, which met on Monday night, in New York city, and adopted strong resolutions in favor of cheap transportation and other doctrines advocated by this growing society. The establishment of several "granges" in New England is also announced, so that the principles of the society are spreading in that direction. The increasing importance of this "Farmers' party" is a subject of deep interest to politicians of all hues, who find in it an element that they did not anticipate having to deal with a few months ago.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The reader will note the remarkable difference of Irish and German distribution. Where one German goes to the Eastern or manufacturing region, there are thirteen Irish; but where one Irish goes to the agricultural region of Middle Western and West Mississippi States, he is accompanied by three Germans. The dislike of both nationalities of the late slave States is conspicuous. Less than four and a half in a hundred of Irish, and only six in a hundred of German, have made their homes south of the Potomac and Ohio.

Legislation in the Interest of the Grangers.

[Washington Cor. Chicago Inter-Ocean.]

Those members of the House who have best claims to represent the farmers' movement give the following as the points of legislation which will be urged on Congress in the interest of the Grangers:

1. The opening of the mouth of the Mississippi to large vessels in such a manner as to insure their entrance and egress at all stages of water without difficulty. As to the means the Grangers are indifferent, and whether the end is attained by dredging or by means of a new canal they will be satisfied, their only desire being to insure water transportation for their grain to the ocean. If a large sum is needed to open the river permanently, they will favor withdrawing the appropriations usually made for a large number of up-river points, and consolidating the whole sum and uniting it for this work.

2. Legislation to prevent the railways west of the Mississippi river from discriminating in their rates of freight against points on the river, and in favor of all railway points beyond, thus making it impossible for farmers to avail themselves of cheap water transportation.

3. Legislation to prevent similar discrimination by roads running east and west against north and south roads, thus preventing farmers, when the Mississippi river is frozen, from sending their grain southward on railways till open river is reached.

4. Legislation for fixing rates for the transportation of live stock on railways from West to east. This is the only article they will ask to have rates fixed upon, and the reason for asking this is that it is the only important article for their products that must come by rail to the East.

The only legislation involving money to be asked for is the opening of the mouth of the Mississippi by withdrawing expenditures from less important works.

A Strange Case of Somnambulism.

Mrs. James Riley, of New Haven, who wandered away from her home in her night-clothes on Sunday night, was found by a policeman at 8 o'clock on Monday evening leaning over the railing of the draw of the East Chapel street bridge. Besides her scanty clothing, she wore a pair of rubber boots. When she had sufficiently recovered, she said she must have been asleep, as she does not remember leaving the house. She crawled beneath the drawbridge and lay all day upon a beam fifteen inches wide, while the dark waters of Mill river ran but a few feet beneath her. Once during the day she remembered having her senses. Then she heard footsteps, and voices saying Jim Riley's wife was being sought for. Some spell, that could not be broken, impelled her to silence. Foot and hand prints were found in the snow on the timbers of the drawbridge, where she had climbed down and crawled in beneath, and prints were also found where she had crawled out on the opposite side of the draw. The place where she remained all day she could hardly have retained in her right mind. Her wanderings are attributed to a sudden and strange attack of somnambulism.—Hartford Courant.

Useful Hints.

Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, gives the following short rules for action in cases of accident, which will be found useful to remember:

For dust in the eyes, avoid rubbing; dash water in them; remove cinders, etc., with the round point of a lead pencil.

Remove wax from the ear by tepid water; never put a hard instrument into the ear.

If an artery is cut, compress above the wound; if a vein is cut, compress below.

If choked, get on all fours and cough.

For slight burns, dip the part in cold water; if the skin is destroyed, cover with varnish.

Smother a fire with carpets, etc.; water will often spread burning oil and increase the danger. Before passing through smoke, take a long breath, and then stoop low; but if carbonic acid gas is suspected, walk erect.

Suck poisoned wounds, unless your mouth is sore; enlarge the wound, or, better, cut out the part without delay; hold the wounded part as long as can be borne to a hot coal or end of a cigar.

In case of poisoning, excite vomiting by tickling the throat, or by warm water and mustard.

For acid poisons, give alkalies; for alkaline poisons, give acids—white of egg is good in most cases; in a case of opium poisoning, give strong coffee, and keep moving.

If in water, float on the back, with the nose and mouth projecting.

For apoplexy, raise the head and body; for fainting, lay the person flat.

The Rattles of Rattlesnakes.

The fomation of rattles upon the tail of rattlesnakes is a curious phenomenon. The notion that one is developed each year is incorrect. Young ones have been known to have six or more; sometimes two or three appear in a single year. The number seldom exceeds fifteen. The skin of one that was six feet long, now in the museum of the Long Island Historical Society of Brooklyn, has fourteen rattles. DeKay cited, in 1842, in the Clarion newspaper, published at Belton, at Lake George, 1,104 rattlesnakes, some of which carried fifteen to twenty rattles. They were killed for their oil. The same author states, on the authority of the Columbian Magazine for November, 1786, that a rattlesnake was killed, having forty-four rattles, which seems an incredible number. The use of the rattles is a subject of discussion. They are evidently well developed—not rudimental merely—and the conclusion is irresistible that they are of service to the creature. We cannot suppose that organs which are constant in a class of animal, could have originated, if entirely useless and unserviceable to it. Prof. Aughey suggests that the whirring rattle is a call-note by the animal to its mate. That it was thus used on one occasion he was an eye-witness. Again, it may be used to terrify its enemies, or to paralyze its victim with fright, or to call assistance in danger. He says: "I once witnessed an attack by seven hogs on a rattlesnake. Immediately the snake rattled, and three others appeared; but the hogs were victorious."—Popular Science Monthly for January.

New Mexico's Capital.

With the exception of our neighbor, Arizona, less is known of New Mexico by the world at large than any other territory of the American Union. Strange as it may seem, yet it is nevertheless true that the Territorial Legislature which convened within the past few days has assembled in the Capitol whose foundation was laid nearly a century before the Pilgrim Fathers landed on Plymouth Rock. Still more strange is it that this building, the "old palace," which is used conjointly by the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the Government, was commenced as far back as 1540, and still remains incomplete, never having been finished. It is one of the many wonders of this remote inland country, and it is a somewhat unsightly structure, despite its name. It is constructed of adobe, but still is a very substantial building. It is proposed that during the coming year it shall be remodeled and repaired. This will cost several thousand dollars—an amount which is trifling in the eyes of an enterprising American, but which appears to be very large to many of the "Greaser" or half-breed Mexican population, whose ideas of liberality in behalf of public improvements are extremely contracted.—Correspondence of the Chicago Tribune.

Wisconsin Charitable and Correctional Institution.

Few States of like population and resources equal Wisconsin in the care taken for classes bereft of reason, or deprived of the use of their senses, or in the extent to which humanitarian ideas have controlled the management of the State correctional institutions. As gathered from last year's report of the State Board of Charities, and the present year's report of the Secretary of State, appropriations for State institutions have been as follows:

	1873.	Total.
Institute for the Blind	$20,750	$468,996
Institute for Deaf and Dumb	26,500	466,438
Soldiers' Orphans' Home	22,000	329,307
State Insane Hospital	85,822	1,184,441
Northern Insane Hospital	69,000	432,000
Industrial School	64,500	486,906
State Prison	45,735	961,420
Aggregate	$336,307	$4,349,510

The appropriations to the above institutions in 1871 amounted to $48,356, in 1872 to $423,904,—making a total in three years of $1,240,568; and the expenditure for last year for these institutions amounted to five-twelfths of the whole expenditure from the general fund.—Chicago Tribune.

BEECHER says there is about as much religion in the act of putting a horseshoe over the door for good luck as in putting a gilt-edged Bible on the center table for the same purpose.

Hog Packing.

The Cincinnati Price Current of the 2d inst. publishes returns from 250 interior points (which do not include Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Milwaukee, and Indianapolis), giving the whole number packed to dates of reports (13th to 30th December), the estimated number for winter season 1873-74, the total packing at the same points during season of 1872-73, and the whole packing in the mentioned States, exclusive of cities named above, during season 1872-73.

	Packed to date.	Estimate, season 1873-74.	Total same places, 1872-73.	All interior points, 1872-73.
Ohio	169,360	233,419	233,229	259,522
Indiana	220,538	258,923	378,087	414,649
Illinois	197,059	274,080	362,410	409,539
Iowa	221,514	303,681	292,997	325,447
Missouri	177,684	238,000	282,194	286,334
Kansas	37,500	48,150	40,003	40,805
Wisconsin	6,140	11,826	11,522	20,572
Minnesota	11,120	20,400	15,000	24,580
Nebraska	23,200	25,000	23,119	20,119
Kentucky	20,517	27,081	28,710	30,326
Tennessee	19,335	29,000	38,100	39,200
Miscellaneous	60,306	79,900	77,756	77,756
Total	1,259,877	1,653,118	1,839,147	2,018,867

The packing at points given exceeds the number to corresponding dates last season 233,000. The points not heard from packed a total of 179,720 during season 1872-73. The aggregate falling off at interior points will be in round numbers 200,000. The estimates for the season exceed packing to dates of reports near 400,000. The whole packing in the West, to Jan. 1 is approximately 1,500,000 at interior points, and 2,500,000 at the six larger cities, or a total of 4,000,000, which is 1,410,000 less than entire season 1872-73.

As regards the six larger Western packing points, we do not esteem it practicable at this time to undertake an estimate of what will be done during the remaining two months of the season. The packing to date at these points aggregates 2,495,000 against 1,945,000 to same time last season, or an excess this season amounting to 550,000, and leaving 900,000 more to be packed to equal last season's numbers. Our latest advices give unmistakable evidence of light supplies of hogs yet to be marketed.

The Price Current also refers to the phenomenon of a much greater shrinkage, and says: "Many of the larger number of hogs this year shrink more than one-fifth of the gross weight, whereas last year 15 per cent. would cover the shrinkage in many instances, and we doubt if the average was more than 17 per cent. In some test cases made with meats it is found that the shrinkage in curing also is more than double what it was last year. The cause of this is generally attributed to the inferior quality and deficient quantity of corn, but whether this is the true explanation or not, the fact remains the same."

Industrial Development at the West.

We read and hear so much of the immense increase of the crops in the West, that most people fancy the West wholly given to agriculture, and ignore the fact that its progress in manufactures is remarkable. The subjoined figures from the census, showing the manufactures of the West at two periods, will illustrate the rapid rise of this interest:

Arkansas	$ 2,880,578	$ 4,729,243
Illinois	57,580,886	205,620,672
Indiana	42,803,479	108,617,278
Iowa	13,971,325	46,534,322
Kansas	4,357,408	11,775,833
Kentucky	37,931,240	54,625,809
Michigan	32,658,356	108,304,776
Minnesota	3,373,172	23,110,700
Missouri	41,782,731	206,213,429
Ohio	121,671,148	269,713,429
Wisconsin	27,849,467	77,214,326

This progress would have appeared still greater had not the mining production, which was included in the statement for 1860, been excluded from that of 1870. But as it stands this table will serve to show how great the industrial interest had become in 1870, and how much had been done to create a home market for Western produce. Since that the Western industrial interests have made immense advances, and though still far below the vast aggregates in New England and the Middle States, it is a question whether they will long remain so. For the Western farmers have recognized the importance to their own interests of this home movement, and lend it all possible aid. To the railroads of the West it is a matter of so much consequence that many railway companies have devoted all their energies to the creation or development of manufacturing interests along their routes, and almost every city or town of any note offers inducements to manufacturers in the shape of exemption from taxes, cheap lands, and often gifts of lots, etc.—Philadelphia North American.

Indiana State Board of Agriculture.

This body held an interesting session at Indianapolis last week. Among other resolutions adopted was the following: Offering a premium on the best worked dirt or gravel roads in the various townships; requiring stock men to keep their exhibits on exhibition only during the continuance of the State fair proper, one week; requiring that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited on fair grounds, malt liquors being included in the prohibition.

A discussion sprang up concerning the breeding of live stock, during which Messrs. Meredith and Coble gave, as the result of their experience, that the best specimens are obtained from in-and-in breeding.

The last week in September was fixed as the time for holding the next State fair, provided it would not conflict with the fairs in Ohio, Kentucky, and Illinois.

A Terrible Picture.

A correspondent of the Daily Graphic gives the following description of a painting in the Wiertz Museum, near Brussels, which represents Napoleon I. in the other world; not to put too fine a point upon it—in Hades: "He is surrounded by those whose lives he caused to be sacrificed in his attempts to conquer the world. Bloody hands are thrust out toward him, and horribly mutilated bodies and dismembered limbs, still dripping with gore, strew the ground. Clinging to him, with faces expressive of anguish or fury, are the wives and sisters of those whom he has slain; yet he is represented standing in the well-known attitude, with folded arms, calmly gazing into futurity, and heeding naught of the scene about him. His face betokens deep thought. The whole picture is terrible in its significance."

"The Baltimore and Ohio road is keeping up a furious fire along the flank of the Pennsylvania company's lines, and each day developes some new feature of the fight. The Pennsylvania company remains unmoved, however, and has taken no official action in regard to the matter as yet. On yesterday a circular was sent from the New York office of the Baltimore and Ohio road, signed by the officers of the line, reducing the passenger fare from New York to Chicago to $18.50. This cuts under the Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne price $3.50, though it does not benefit western travelers going east. The fare on the Baltimore and Ohio remains the same to New York—$20-25. Mr. Walshe, representing the road in this city, stated that the reduction was but a foreshadowing of the coming liberal policy of the company as soon as their new line reached the city next summer. They are cramped now in their through facilities, passengers being compelled to change cars twice between this city and New York, while the Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne is unobstructed, running their through Pullmans into New York city without change. Another feature arising out of the difficulties between the two corporations has been the establishment of a freight line between this city and Philadelphia, termed the "Continental," under the control of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company. The cars are run over the Kankakee line, Marietta and Cincinnati road, and Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore road. Passenger rates from St. Louis to New York city, over the Baltimore and Ohio leased lines, were reduced $4 on yesterday.—Chicago Times.

There is a romantic little story about the way Toledo came to have such a name When the oldest inhabitant arrived at that "eligible site" for frogs—(he was a Frenchman, from Canada, and he loved frogs)—he said to himself, as he gazed upon the heaving mass of green, emerald gemmed, as it were, with frogs, "Now, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, since I have seen this great country, flowing with mud and frogs." Suddenly addressing himself to the little frogs, who had been sitting on their bunkers gazing at him in unaffected astonishment, unable to speak a word, he said, "My children, what do you call this land?" And as he turned, each little frog flipped his hinder-part into the air and chippered gleefully, "T'leedo!" "T'leedo!" and ever after, even unto this day.

Inauguration of the Governor Allen.

Never before was a Governor of Ohio, probably never before was a Governor of any State in the Union, ushered into office with so vast an enthusiasm as attended the Hon. William Allen to the Gubernatorial chair. Half of Ohio seemed to empty itself into Columbus yesterday. There was wealth of music and the flying of flags, and a gret crowd which no man could number, and the military parade and general jubilation. The Capital was garlanded and gay. Old men met the friends of their early years to shake hands over a victory long delayed and to rejoice together for that their eyes had seen the coming of the glory. Young men and maidens mingled their congratulations with those of age. The evening was one of boundless and graceful hilarity. The Governor undoubtedly believed that the fascinations of public life had increased since he, while yet in the prime of life, left the public service. The ovation of yesterday was unprecedented in the State. It was a tribute to the name and fame of the Governor not only, but it furnished evidence that the Democratic party in Ohio is still somewhat animated.

The inaugural address of Governor Allen is brief, forcible and in excellent taste. He makes no specific recommendation, but promises suggestions in the future in the shape of special messages if the public interests shall seem to him to require them. The Governor has two recommendations in general which are comprehensive and excellent. The first, in substance, is that the Legislature do little and do that little quickly. The second is that it reduce the public expenditures and the public taxes. Not "vague and mere verbal economy," but the "earnest and inexorable economy which proclaims its existence by accomplished facts," is urged upon the Legislature by the Governor. "In the prodigality of the past," says the Govenor, "you will find abundant reason for frugality in the future." The leading events in the past few months, the financial panic, which has crippled many, embarrassed everybody, and whose effects are still painfully and universally felt, is named as the commanding cause why this course should be pursued. It was courteous to Governor Allen's predecessor to abstain at this time from making special recommendations to the Legislature. Otherwise he must have either conflicted with the recommendations already submitted to the Legislature, or have said that those recommendations were insufficient. The inaugural concludes with a graceful acknowledgement of the courtesies the Governor that is has received from the retiring Executive.

Now that the victory in Ohio is won and the rejoicing completed, it is proper to look toward the future. Yesterday was chiefly significant as marking, we believe, the beginning of a new epoch in the history of political parties in this country. The only thing needed is that the Democratic party be honest. We have heard the first notes of the jubilee rising from the heart of the Northwest. Soon we shall hear it at the gates of the National Capital. But we must be as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves.—Enquirer.

If there is any of the reconstructed States where the people are literally taxed out of house and home, Arkansas is the one. In order to be sure that the assessors shall not permit any undervaluation of property, they are paid a commission on the amount assessed, so that the higher the valuation they return the larger will be their own share of the plunder. The idea of paying assessors by commission is novel and its natural effect obvious. This plan is so brilliant that it is almost safe to say that it must have originated in the prolific brain of Grant's particular friend, Senator Clayton, to whom the people of Arkansas are deeply indebted in many ways. If a tax on personal property is not paid, the collector may seize it and sell enough to cover the amount due with costs and fifty per cent on the whole besides, paying himself for his trouble. If a real estate owner fails to pay his taxes, his property is sold at auction under provisions which render it almost impossible that he can ever recover it. In case no purchasers come forward to bid for such property, then, in order to make sure that the owner is properly punished for his poverty, the State steps in, buys it, and gives it away to certain railroad companies. And yet, strange to say, there are very few men to be found in this benighted State who are able to properly appreciate the blessings of living under a republican form of government.

A Lafayette Banker is in possession of nineteen fiddles.

The Hindmost Takes the Lantern.

In all monasteries monks are apt to be tardy at midnight vigils and drowsy when in their seats. Their peccadilloes were however shrewdly curbed by abbot who once ordained that whoever entered the chapel last should carry a lantern round and round till he caught some brother napping. Then he might rose sleeper, hand him the lantern and take his seat while the other set out in quest of sleepers.

It fares with land-hunters as with monks. Those who take time by the fore-lock, take the most comfortable places, but the laggards must take their lanterns, and pace many a weary round before they can catch one of their forerunners napping and oust him.

The public domane is so large, that if homesteaders occupy it no faster than they did in the last decade, they will not exhaust it till the end of five centuries But in truth they take it up faster and faster, and the desirable portion of public lands is less than half its area. The acres within reach of railroads are a still smaller fraction. Among the three thousand who have bought farms in Nebraska of the Burlington & Missoury River Railroad, every man in going to his purchase, has probably passed homesteads every way as valuable, which he might once have occupyed as free grants. We allknow how if we only knew when.

But the best thing about Nebraska is, that the governement has sold none of its newer portions to speculators, but that its matchless farms are owned by a railroad, whose line is valueless unless the country it traverses is settled and improved Hence the low rates, fares, freights, interest, the rebate for speedy culture, the long credit, and long-deferred first payments, &c., by which the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company promote settlements along their line. But here, too, the most comfortable seats are fast filling; the laggards take the most pains, for they must carry the lanterns.

PROF. J. D. BUTLER

On the evening train from Albany, recently, was a woman bound for Westfield, who persisted in requesting the affable conductor to inform her when Chester was reached. Every time when the conductor passed through the car, he was greeted with: "Please tell me when we get to Chester." Courteous man though he is, even his patience was finally exhausted, and he politely requested the unfortunate female to maintain silence, as he had heard and would heed her injunction. Chester was finally reached, and "Chester" was yelled at the car door. The train again started, and the conductor mounted the car in which was his persecutor. "Will you tell me when we get to Chester?" she said. "This is Chester," he exclaimed, and, grasping the bell-rape, he had the train back up to the station. "I'm real glad you obliged me," said the daughter of Eve to the exasperated conductor. "My husband used to live here."

Hon. M. R. Waite, of Toledo, is the third nominee for Chief Justice. Mr. Waite is the son of the late Chief Justice Waite, of Connecticut, one of the leading jurists of New England. He is now in his fifty-eighth year. He graduated at Yale college at the age of twenty-two; came to Toledo in 1838, and studied law with S. M. Young, with whom he practiced for eighteen years. He has for many years stood at the head of the bar of northwestern Ohio, and has twice declined a seat on the supreme bench of Ohio. In 1849 he was elected a member of the legislature, serving with distinction. In 1862 he was a candidate for Congress, and though defeated, he received a majority of 1,200 in Toledo. He is now serving as member, and the president, of the Ohio constitutional convention, to which he was chosen by the unanimous vote of both parties. The present appointment, like all other public honors, has come to him without the slightest seeking on his part, as he has discouraged his personal friends from efforts to secure the place for him. His neighbors feel every assurance that in this, as in every other trust, he will abundantly justify the confidence reposed in him.

NO MORTGAGE ON THE FARM.

Mary, let's kill the fatted calf and celebrate the day,
For the last dreadful mortgage on the farm is wiped away;
I have got the papers with me, they are right as right can be—
Let us laugh and sing together, for the dear old farm is free!

Don't all the Yankees celebrate the Fourth day of July,
Because 'twas then that Freedom's sun lit up our nation's sky?
Why shouldn't we then celebrate, and this day ne'er forget?
Where is there any freedom like being out of debt?

I've riz up many mornin's an hour before the sun,
And night has overtaken me before the task was done.
When, weary with my labor, 'twas this thought that nerved my arm;
Each day of toil will help to pay the mortgage on the farm.

And, Mary, you have done your part in rowin' to the shore,
[illegible] butter to the little village store.
You did not spend the money in dressing up for show,
But sang from morn till evening in your faded calico.

And Bessie, our sweet daughter—God bless her loving heart!
The lad that gets her for a wife must be by natur smart—
She's gone without piano, her lonely hours to charm,
To have a hand in payin' off the mortgage on the farm.

I'll build a little cottage soon, to make your heart rejoice;
I'll buy a good piano, to go with Bessie's voice;
You shall not make your butter with that up-and-down concern,
For I'll go this very day and buy the finest patent churn!

Lay by your faded calico, and go with me to town,
And get yourself and Bessie a new and shining gown;
Low prices for our produce need not give us now alarm,
Spruce up a little, Mary! there's no mortgage on the farm

While our hearts are now so joyful, let us, Mary, not forget
To thank the God of heaven for being out of debt,
For he gave the rain and sunshine, and put strength into my arm,
And lengthened out the days to see no mortgage on the farm.

MARRIED LIFE IN CHINA.

Very little is known in this country of the married life of the Chinese, but nevertheless their habits and customs in this respect are very minute, and by no means devoid of interest. The patriarchal system of the country is exhibited, as the Emperor claims to be, and theoretically is, the absolute and despotic ruler of his subjects, so every father exercises a similar power over his family, even claiming the right to sell his children as slaves.

A woman in China, when once she is married and has assumed her husband's clan-name, becomes part and parcel of his family, and henceforward has but a slight connection with her own relations, her duty and obedience being entirely transferred to her husband and his parents, the latter of whom, sad to relate, frequently treat her with great cruelty, and more as a slave than a daughter-in-law.

The Chinese wife's great hope and ambition is that she may have male offspring to perpetuate her husband's name, to care for and support him in old age, and, after death, to watch over and offer sacrifices at his grave, and at stated periods to burn incense before his tablet. If she chance to be so unfortunate as to have no children, or only daughters, there is rarely any happiness in store for her in her married life, and her husband is very likely to take to himself a concubine, if he can afford to do so, hoping thereby to attain the darling wish of his heart.

When women have no children they supplicate the goddess Hui-fu Fu-ein to aid them and send them sons, for if possible, they would rather not have daughters. If a man have no sons he is thought to "live without honor and die unhappy;" and so eager is a Chinaman for a male heir that, failing a son of his own, he will adopt one from his brothers' families, if he can get one. Occasionally, too, from this all-absorbing desire for a son, parents will bribe a nurse to get some poor man's boy and substitute him for a newly-born daughter. In the exaggerated phraseology common to the Chinese, those who do this are said "Tou lung, huan feng," that is, to steal a dragon and exchange it for a phoenix.

The following customs, relating to the "Social Life of the Chinese," are rather amusing, and show what devices women in the Celestial Empire will resort to in the hope that they may be blessed with children. Every year, between the eleventh and fifteenth day of of the first and eighth Chinese moons, several of the most popular temples devoted to the worship of a goddess of children, commonly called "Mother," are frequented by married, but childless women, for the purpose of procuring one of a kind of shoe belonging to her. Those who come for a shoe burn incense before the image of "Mother," and vow that they will offer a thanksgiving if she will aid them in bearing a male child. The shoe is taken home and placed in the niche which holds the family image of the goddess, where it is worshiped in connection with "Mother," though not separately, on the first and fifteenth days of each moon; fresh flowers are then offered up, and incense, candles and mock-money are burned. When the child thus prayed for is born, should such a fortunate event take place, the happy mother, in accordance with her vow, causes two shoes to be made like the one obtained from the temple. These two and the original one are brought to the temple with her thank-offering, which generally consists of several plates of food. Some women, instead of asking for a shoe of the goddess, beg some of the flowers which she usually has in her hands or in a flower-vase near by. The shoe is lent, but the flowers are given. On reaching home some women fasten the floewrs thus obtained in their hair, while others place them in a vase near the niche mentioned above. Should the suppliants not become mothers, no thanksgiving would be expected by the goddess whose aid had been invoked.

When a son is born there are great rejoicings in a family, and shortly afterward what is termed the "milk name" is given, which answers to "pet names" among ourselves. Later on the boy receives a regular name, usually of two characters, corresponding to what we call the "Christian name;" when written it is placed after the clan or surname. When grown up even, boys are often called, not by their proper names, but by their number in the family—for example, A-san or A-woo, that is, Number Four or Number Five.

On the third day after its birth the nurse washes the child for the first time, before the family image of the goddess "Mother," who is currently believed to watch over all children till they reach their 16th year, and at the same time a thank-offering of meats, cakes, fruits, wine, flowers, etc., is placed before her, in recognition of her aid in the character of Lucinda. As is always the case with such like obligations in China, they are afterward consumed by the family.

The important ceremony of binding the wrists is now observed, and the practice in this matter differs considerably. A common plan is to tie a piece of red cotton loosely around the wrists; another is to fasten some ancient copper coins on the wrists for several days by means of red cotton. In some families this is not finally removed from the infant's wrists for several months, though it is more usual to it take off after fourteen days. The idea is that this binding of the wrists together will prevent the baby from being wicked and disobedient, not only in childhood, but also in after life. In allusion to this singular custom, when children are troublesome or naughty, they are asked if their mothers neglected to bind their wrists.

When the baby is a month old the head is shaved for the first time, and in the case of a boy this ceremony is performed before the Ancestral Tablet. A feast is also given, to which the relatives and intimate friends are invited, and it is customary for them to bring presents of toys, food, money, etc., they also frequently club together and send the infant a silver plate, on which they inscribe three characters, meaning longevity, honor and happiness. Shortly after this, the parents make their acknowledgments to their various friends for their congratulations and for the presents which they have sent; this is commonly done by sending a small present of cakes in return. At a subsequent entertainment, which sometimes takes place when the child is four months old, the "happy father," it is said, "bows down before the goddess (Mother), and begs that the child may be good-natured and easy to take care of, that it may grow fat, that it may sleep well at night, and that it may not be given to crying, etc. From this we may naturally infer that the habits of Chinese babies are much the same as those of our own, and that distracted parents in China, as elsewhere, know what it is to have wakeful nights and squalling babies.

The maternal grandmother, when a boy is a year old, sends him a present of a cap and a pair of shoes, as well as some other garments, and on this occasion another family feast is held to celebrate the birth-day.

English mothers, whose children are backward in walking, will be amused at the following piece of Chinese nursing superstition: "It is the custom in many families, when the child is just beginning to walk alone, for a member of the family to take a large knife, often such as is used in the kitchen to cut up vegetables, and, approaching him from behind as he is toddling along, to put it between his legs, or hold it a little way off him, with the edge downwards, and then to bring it to the ground, as in the act of cutting something. This is called "cutting the cords of his feet," and the motion is repeated two or three times. It is done in order to facilitate his learning to walk, and is supposed to be of great use in keeping the child from stumbling and falling down.

After the shaving of the head at the end of the first month, it is a common practice to allow a patch of hair to grow on the top, if the child be a boy, and on both sides, if a girl: the hair is braided into tight little queues, which stick out, and give the children a very comical look in their earlier years. When a girl, however, reaches womanhood, she ceases to wear these queues, which have latterly hung down her back in glossy braids, and her hair is done up on her head in a peculiar Chinese style, which, we believe, varies but little all over the Empire, and report says—though we cannot vouch for the accuracy of the story—that the singular edifice is very rarely taken to pieces, and that the women use a very little cane pillow to prevent the disarrangement of their hair at night.

On the fifteenth day of the first moon of the year, the birthday of the goddess "Mother" occurs, and married women then repair to the temples, and worship her, burning incense, and having crackers let off in her honor. Of this fact we can speak from personal experience, having lived for upwards of two years within a few yards of such a temple, and having been often nearly suffocated with the smell and fumes of the burning joss-sticks; the fire-work part of the performance, too, was always carried on conamore, as we know to our cost. The din and clamor raised by the crowds of women frequenting the small temple of which we speak, on "Mother's" high festivals, will never fade from our memory, for they were truly awful, and could hardly be said to savor much of real devotion.

When a boy goes to school for the first time, he is expected to take with him two small candles, some incense-sticks and mock-money, all of which are burned in honor of Confucius before a slip of paper bearing some such inscriptions as "the teacher, a pattern for ten thousand ages," or one of the great sage's other numerous titles, the new pupil bowing down and making his prostrations the while. About the end of spring in each year, schoolmasters often give their boys a treat, when very similar, though more elaborate ceremonies, are performed, and it is the custom for the pupils to bring presents of money to defray the expenses.

Children of both sexes are said to "go out of childhood," when they are about 16 years of age, as in China they are then considered to have become adults, and the event is usually celebrated by certain family observances. It must, however, be borne in mind that, though a child in China becomes of age at 16, he is not thereby emancipated from the control of his parents, for during their lifetime he is bound by law and custom to obey them implicitly, be he ever so old or ever so wealthy. The only exception that is made to this rule is when the child has attained to some office under the Government, and then he is obliged to render his obedience to the Emperor, who whilst he is in the public service, stands to him in loco parentis. When a son has reached his 16th year, he commonly assumes the direction of the business matters of the family, if his father be dead, unless, indeed, as sometimes happens, his mother have a very strong will of her own. The doctrine inculcated in the Chinese classics is that a woman has three stages of obedience, to-wit: First, she must obey her father (before she marries); second, her husband (after she is married); third, her son (when her husband is dead); provided, of course, that the son have reached the age of manhood. In the last-named case, however, law and custom would never uphold the son in an unkind or unfilial manner. Filial piety is held in the highest esteem in China, even to an exaggerated extent, and it may happen that, in cases of extremely unfilial conduct, parents will bring their offspring before the district magistrate, and invoke the aid of the law in support of their rights; such instances are, however, rare, but they occasionally occur, and the only persons who have any claim to be consulted are the maternal uncles of the accused, who, if these concur with his parents in their view of his misconduct, stands a very bad chance indeed of escaping without some serious mark of indignity, if he be lucky enough to get off without severe punishment.

"Fathers have virtually the power of life and death over their children, for even if they kill them designedly, they are subject to only the chastisement of the bamboo and a year's banishment; if struck by them, to no punishment at all. The penalty of striking parents, or for cursing them, is death, as among the Hebrews. In practice it does not appear that this absolute power bestowed on fathers is productive of evil, the natural feeling being, on the whole, a sufficient security against its abuse."

If a son be convicted of the murder of either of his parents, Chinese law visits the crime with awful severity, for not only is the murderer executed, but his body is cut up into small pieces, and everything possible is done to mark the enormity of the crime. On this point the following extract, from the work quoted before, describes very graphically the course that is pursued: "A man and his wife had beaten and otherwise severly ill-used the mother of the former. This being reported by the Viceroy to Peking, it was determined to enforce, in a singular manner, the fundamental principles of the Empire. The very place where it occurred was anthematized, as it were, and made accursed. The principal offenders were put to death; the mother of the wife bambooed, branded, and exiled for her daughter's crime; the scholars of the district, for three years, were not permitted to attend the public examinations, and their promotion thereby stopped; the magistrates were deprived of their office, and banished. The house in which the offenders dwelt was dug up from the foundations. 'Let the Viceroy,' the edict adds, 'make known this proclamation, and let it be dispersed through the whole Empire, that the people may all learn it. And if there be any rebellious children who oppose, beat, or degrade their parents, they shall be punished in like manner. If the people, indeed, know the principles of reverence, then they will fear and obey the Imperial will, and not look on this as empty declamation. I instruct the magistrates of every province to warn the heads of families and elders of villages, and on the 2d and 16th of every month to read the Sacred Instructions, in order to show the importance of the relations of life, that persons may not rebel against their parents, for I intend to render the Empire filial.'" The forgoing paragraph will give a very clear idea of what is universally the theory on the subject in China, but, judging from our own knowledge of their character, we much fear that in this, as well as in very many other matters, the Chinese are much more perfect in their theory than in their practice.—English Magazine.

A Priceless Dress.

The lace dress which was made by the Compagne des Indes of Paris for the Empress Eugenie is made up over black velvet, and shows to fine effect on that fabric. The underskirt is in one piece, not flounced, its design being a heavy scalloped border of roses and tulips entwined with leaves, and interlacing with another border formed of finer scallops of forget-me-nots and ivy leaves. Each large scallop has a medallion figure filled with roses, tulips and forget-me-nots embedded in an urn of exquisite workmanship. Another medallion semicircles this one, and the two are tied with a true-lover's knot carried around the whole underskirt. This true-lover's knot tying the medallions and underlacing over the whole is considered the gem of the design. A square court train of black velvet, trimmed with lace half a yard wide of the same design, covers the back of the dress. It is formed of two breadths which are united in the back with a shell-work of black velvet one-eighth of an inch wide. This train unites with an overskirt open in front, with bread lappels turned back and faced with peach-colored satin. The corsage and sleeves of velvet are trimmed with a bertha and ruffles of the lace. A handkerchief and fan in the lace of the same stitch and design accompany this magnificent dress, to which no price can be attached.

"I DON'T believe much in the Bible," said a collegian to an old Quaker. "Does thee believe in France?" "Yes, I do. I never saw it, but I have plenty of proof that there is such a country." "Then thee does not believe anything unless thee or any reliable friends have seen it?" "No, be sure I wont." "Did that ever see thy own brains?" "No." "Did thee ever know anybody that has seen thy brains?" "No." "Does thee believe thee has any brains?"

NOVEMBER, 1873, was about the coldest of the last half century. But there is some consolation in the fact that mild winters frequently follow a cold November. In 1827 November was famous for its coldness, being the most severe known for fifty years, but it ended with a complete change, and the winter was the mildest remembered for years.—Exchange.

THE United States have imported considerably less iron and steel this year from Great Britain than they did last year. During the first nine months, this country received from her only 401,523 tons, valued at $34,000,000, being 349,882 tons less in quantity and $11,230,000 in value than in the corresponding period of 1872. This change was mainly owing to the expansion of the American iron industry.

On the Scaffold.

The fortitude with which Mary, Queen of Scots, met death was something remarkable. She had evidently prepared her mind for the sad part she was to play, even costuming herself to suit the tragic scene. She wore a robe of black satin; her jacket was of black satin, also, looped and slashed and trimmed with velvet. Her false hair was arranged with a coil, and over her head and falling down her back was a white veil of delicate lawn. A crucifix of gold hug from her neck. In her hand she held a crucifix of ivory, and a number of jeweled paternosters were attached to her girdle. Attired thus, she mounted the scaffold, and listened calmly to the reading of her death warrant; after it was ended, she quickly made her preparations for death. She laid her crucifix on a chair; her lawn veil was lifted carefully off, not to disturb the hair, and was hung upon the rail. The black robe was next removed. Below it was a petticoat of crimson velvet. The black jacket followed, and under the jacket was a body of crimson satin. One of the ladies handed her a pair of crimson sleeves, with which she hastily covered her arms; and thus she stood on the black scaffold, with the black figures all around her, blood red from head to foot, startling all beholders with her weird beauty. But when, a few minutes later, the executioner did his duty, and then raised the head, as usual, to show it to the crowd, the labored illusion had vanished. The coils and plaits of false hair had fallen off, and only the withered features of a grizzled, wrinkled old woman remained in the stead of that lady who had knelt before the block in the maturity of grace and loveliness.

The Railway Growth of 1873.

A very elaborate compilation, showing the extension of railroads in the United States in 1873 is published in the Railway Monitor and Financial Chronicle of New York. From the footings of the several columns it appears that the total mileage of railroads in the United States is 71,564 miles; the total amount of single track laid, including second track and sidings, is 85,076 miles; the whole number of locomotives is 14,223; the number of cars for passenger trains, 13,725; cars for freight trains, 338,427; capital stock paid up, $2,072,251,954; funded and floating debt, $1,999,741,597; cost of road and equipment, $3,728,416,958; the total miles of road operated on on which the reported earnings are based, 54,454 miles; gross earnings on that mileage, for the latest years obtainable, $478,885,597; net earnings over operating expenses (but not over and above interest and dividend payments), $174,850,912.

The great decrease of railroad building in 1873, as compared with 1872, which marks the end of a notable era in the United States, in shown by the following table of the miles of railroad operated in 1872 and at the close of 1873, together with the number of miles constructed in each State during the last year:

The table published by the Chronicle shows that the entire railroad extension of 1873 was only about one-sixteenth as much as in 1872, and in the Western States it was only about one-twentieth as much. It is apparent that the great game of building railroads with the proceeds of the sale of bonds, and creating a vast amount of stock which cost the first holders of it nothing, but still serves to keep control of the property, has been played out. If justice were done, at least two-thirds of the stock created in 1872 on the 67,000 miles of railroads built in that year should be wiped out, and the railroads handed over to the bond-holders and the towns, counties and cities that have donated money to aid in the construction. These are, in fact, the only parties who have put any considerable amount of capital into the roads.

The full extent, however, of the revulsion in railroad building, has evidently not been experienced yet. Many of the railroads—and even some of those whose stock is even yet salable in the market—have gone on piling debt upon debt, by the issue of more and more bonds, until it is apparent that many of them must go into bankruptcy, that the capital stock, the possession of which puts the property in the control of those who never put a dollar into the construction of the roads, must be wiped out, and the property handed over to the first-mortgage bond-holders. When this process begins, as it undoubtedly will with some of the heavily-indebted roads in the Western States before next spring, it may unsettle the whole market for railroad stocks, to a greater extent than in the panic.

The King's Nose.

The late King of Saxony was in the habit of attending at the State institutions to see that they were kept in working order. One day King John appeared at the telegraph office of a small station, taking the clerk by surprise. This officer had only just time to telegraph to his colleagues at the next station: "The King has just arrived on a visit of inspection," before he was summoned to give all possible details to his sovereign with regard to the amount of traffic in the place, the number of dispatches received, the number sent out, etc. Presently a message came along the wire, which the clerk read in much embarrassment. "What are the contents of that dispatch?" inquired the King. The official stammered out that the contents were unimportant, but, as his royal master insisted on being informed of them, the unhappy clerk was at length compelled to acknowledge that he had telegraphed to his neighbor, "The King has just arrived," and that the answer he had received ran thus: "The King pokes his nose into everything."

THE wreckage table for 1873 show that 459 vessels belonging to, or trading to, ports in the United States, were wrecked in the twelve month, against 417 in 1872. This is an increase of 10 per cent., and the gross damage amounts from $11,097,000 to $11,783,000.

If I were you, when persons I affected,
Wait for three hours to take me down to Kew,
I would, at least, pretend I recollected,
If I were you!

NELLIE.

If I were you, when ladies are so lavish,
Sir, as to keep me every waltz but two,

Really! You would? Why, Frank, you're quite delightful,—
Hot as Othello, and as black of hue;
Borrow my fan. I would not look so frightful,
If I were you!

FRANK.

"It is the cause." I mean your chaperon is Bringing some well-curled juvenile. Adieu!
I shall retire. I'd spare that poor Adonis,
If I were you!

NELLIE.

Go, if you will. At once! And by express, sir!
Where shall it be? To China—or Peru?
Go. I should leave inquirers my address, sir,
If I were you!

FRANK.

No, I remain. To stay and fight a duel
Seems, on the whole, the proper thing to do—
Ah, you are strong! I would not, then, be cruel,
If I were you!

NELLIE.

One does not like one's feelings to be doubted,—

FRANK.

One does not like one's friends to misconstrue.

NELLIE.

If I confess that I a wee bit pouted?—

FRANK.

I should admit that I was piqué too.

Ask me to dance. I'd say no more about it,
If I were you! [Waltz—Exeunt.

Stopped His Train and Saved a Boy from Drowning.

We are indebted to R. L. Taylor, Esq., mail agent on the L. L. & G. Railroad, for the following particulars: On New Year's day, while Capt. Daniels' train was moving at the rate of twenty miles an hour, just as they thundered past Lake Joy, about one-half mile south of Garnett, a boy who had been skating on the lake was discovered by the engineer, Will Lorne, to break through the ice and sink out of sight. In a moment, forgetting everything else but that a fellow-being's life was in danger, he whistled down breaks, reversed his engine, and gave the alarm. While the train was yet in motion, he and several passengers leaped to the rescue. A gentleman by the name of W. L. Parkinson, a lawyer of Ottawa, waded in, the ice breaking under him as he went, up to his armpits, and succeeded in reaching the boy with a pole and rescuing him. The boy's name was Willie Douglas. His father lives in Garnett.—Leavenworth Commercial.

MUFFLING UP.—The more a man bundles up to keep from colds, the more he may. Some persons do nothing but watch against exposures, and keep themselves very busy. The best safeguards are daily exercise in the open air, and the free use of cold water, taking care not to begin the use of the mufflers.

A Very Valuable Work.

"History of the Grange Movement; or the Farmers' War Against Monopolies." Being a full and authentic account of the struggles of the American Farmers against the extortions of the Railroad Companies. With a History of the Rise and Progress of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry. Published by the National Publishing Co., of Chicago and St. Louis.

The most remarkable and powerful movement of the present day is unquestionably the War which the Farmers are waging against the Monopolies of all kinds that have for so long been robbing the people and oppressing the toiling portion of our community.

The work begins with the causes which have aroused the American people against the Monopolists, and treats of the railroad system of the country, its growth, actual condition and prospects. It then shows how this noble system has been perverted to further the ends of selfish capitalists and railroad directors, who seek gain at the expense of the community; and we are given a terrible and thrilling account of the crimes and frauds of the railroad corporations of to-day. The author wields a fearless and vigorous pen, and points out the evils which this selfish greed has entailed upon us. He shows how the great corporations have been able to control the whole country; how they have robbed the nation, and corrupted our Congress, State Legislatures and Courts of Justice.

Passing from the Monopolists and their outrages, the author takes up the cause of the wronged and oppressed farmers, and gives us a detailed statement of the evils from which the farming class is suffering. He analyzes skillfully the causes of these evils, and shows how and by whom the farmers are robbed.

A considerable portion of the work is devoted to a history of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry. A complete account of the organization and objects of the order is given; its laws and mode of procedure are stated; and each feature is explained at length.

It is decidedly the most interesting and useful volume of the day, and, as it comes at a time when the whole country is suffering intensely from the effects of the evils it denounces, cannot fail to have a tremendous sale. It is an ably written work, and a bold and vigorous plea in behalf of the farmers and all who are oppressed and robbed by the grasping Monopolies which are causing so much trouble.

The book is sold by subscription only, and the publishers want agents in every county. See advertisement in another column.—[Com.

Fred Grant on the War Path.

[Washington Dispatch.]

Donn Piatt, of the Capital, publishes a card to-day warning the people not call at his private residence to demand explanation for articles in his paper. It seems that the occasion of this was the appearance of Fred Grant, son of the President, at Piatt's house, to demand satisfaction for an article which appeared a week ago, reflecting on Mrs. Grant's holiday reception so soon after her father's death. Piatt, however, was not at home and did not, therefore, give the satisfaction that was anticipated. Piatt informed the police, who guarded his house for a day or two. In the meantime young Grant became quieted. The affair was magnified by rumor into a very considerable scandal.

AMERICAN WOMEN.—It is a melancholy fact that American women have degenerated in point of health and physique, until they have become literally a race of invalids. How sad it is to look around us and compare the frail and effeminate looking lady of to-day with the hale, hearty and buxom ladies of days gone by. To all such the late discovery of DR. WALKER, of California, which is known as VINEGAR BITTERS, is a priceless boon indeed. For this class of diseases it is certain and safe, and any lady, old or young, can take it with entire confidence in the result, and thus avoid what to thousands is a stumbling block never overcome, viz.: a consultation with a family physician. 'Tis true there may be cases of years' standing, that will necessitate more powerful treatment, but in nine cases out of ten this remedy will reach the disease, and after a little time effect a cure. The number of ladies cured by it are numbered by thousands, and are scattered through every State in the Union. 26

AN INCIDENT OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.—A poor man in Scranton, Pa., lost a child by small-pox. During the sickness he was obliged to beg bread, but so fearful were the people of coming in contact with him, that the morsel that he did receive was barely sufficient to keep his family from starvation. When his child died he applied to the authorities for a coffin, but could not obtain one. Councilmen sent him to the poor-directors, and the poor-directors referred him to the councilmen, so that between the official benevolence of public men, the man returned home and made out of rough boards a box in which he placed his dead child. He was then obliged to carry the rude coffin to a grave which he dug with his own hands.

ON the death of one of England's most eminent physicians, all his effects were sold by auction, and among other things was a sealed packet, marked "Advice to Physicians," which brought a great price. Pimples, Eruptions, Rough Skin.

The system being put under the influence of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for a few weeks, the skin becomes smooth, clear, soft, and velvety, and being illuminated with the glow of perfect health from within, true beauty stands forth in all its glory. Nothing ever presented to the public as a beautifier of the complexion ever gave such satisfaction for this purpose as this Discovery. The effects of all medicines which operate upon the system through the medium of the blood are necessarily somewhat slow, no matter how good the remedy employed. While one to three bottles clear the skin of pimples, blotches, eruptions, yellow spots, comedones, or "grubs," a dozen may possibly be required to cure some cases where the system is rotten with scrofulous or virulent blood poisons. The cure of all these diseases, however, from the common pimple to the worst scrofula, is, with the use of this most potent agent, only a matter of time. Sold by all Druggists.

COVERED WITH ERUPTIONS—CURED.

CLAVERACK, Columbia Co., N. Y.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR: I am sixty years of age, and have been afflicted with Salt Rheum in the worst form for a great many years, until, accidentally, I saw one of your books, which described my case exactly. I bought your Golden Medical Discovery and took two bottles and a half, and was entirely cured. From my shoulders to my hands I was entirely covered with eruptions, also on face and body. I was likewise afflicted with Rheumatism, so that I walked with great difficulty, and that is entirely cured. May God spare you a long life to remain a blessing to mankind. With untold gratitude,

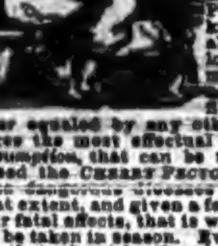
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the

THROAT AND LUNGS,

SUCH AS

Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.



The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS.

UNRIVALED! INCOMPARABLE!

WINNERS OF

Two Highest Medals & Diploma of Honor, At Vienna, 1873;

AND THE

FIRST MEDAL AT PARIS, 1867;

OF

Gold and Silver Medals,

OR OTHER HIGHEST AWARDS

IN AMERICA ALWAYS.

THE MASON AND HAMLIN ORGAN CO. have, by the concurrence of the Special Jury, the International Jury, and two Sub-Juries of most eminent artists and experts from different countries, been officially awarded the First and Highest Medal at the Vienna Exposition in competition with the best makers of all countries. In addition, the Austrian Industrial Society at Vienna awarded to Mr. Emmons Hamlin, of this company, their Grand Silver Medal and Diploma of Honor for the valuable improvements exhibited, and extraordinary superiority displayed in these Organs at the Exposition. Other American exhibitors were not found worthy, in comparison, of any award whatever.

It is significant as to the superiority of the MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS that they are the only American instruments of the class which have ever obtained any award in competition at a World's Fair, and that they have always obtained the highest award at Industrial Exhibitions in America, there not having been half a dozen exceptions at hundreds of such comparisons.

Testimony from 1,000 Musicians

Is published by the MASON & HAMLIN Organ Company in a Testimony Circular, which will be sent free to any address. It will be found to include the judgment of most of the leading organists, pianists, conductors and composers of the country, with the most distinguished vocalists and instrumentalists; the general tenor of whose evidence is that the superiority of the MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS to all others in the world is obvious and material, that they have purity and excellent quality of tone not yet attained by others, which will not only please at first, but continue to please; that they are equally remarkable for their variety of effect, their power and delicacy, their promptness and equality of scale, and, especially, their thoroughness of construction and durability.

And this is the judgment not only of American musicians, but of many of the Most Distinguished in Europe.

The Testimonial Circular alluded to contains testimony from many of the very most eminent musicians in London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin, Prague, St. Petersburg, and other principal European cities.

So highly are the MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS appreciated in Europe, especially in England, that eight hundred of them have been sold in London alone during the year 1873, the demand for them having doubled yearly on an average since their introduction there, a few years since.

The Plan of Selling

Secures fairness and lowest prices to all. THE LOWEST PRICES ARE PRINTED IN THE PRICE LISTS of the company, and are therefore fixed and invariable—alike to all. VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA

VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

C. E. U. No. 4

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, January 29, 1874.

Gov. William Pinckney Whyte, Democrat, has been elected United States Senator, from Maryland.

The legal tender reserve has been reduced from $44,000,000 to $17,000,000. At this rate but little will be left in a month or two.

There are some indications that President Grant is getting tired of being ruled by such men as Morton and Conkling, for he evinces a disposition to kick out of the galling party harness occasionally. This is noticable in the Texas difficulty and in the appointment of Chief Justice.

The miners in the coal districts of Pennsylvania have begun their periodical outrages, though they have hardly got into the strike yet. Grape and canister will materially assist them in being lawabiding citizens. They are not obliged to work, but they should be obliged to remain peaceable.

President Grant is clearly entitled to the honors of a discoverer. He has discovered more obscure any unknown men, and appointed them to important official positions, than any other man mentioned in the world's history. Columbus discovered a continent, but Grant discovered an entire cabinet.

A special from Richmond, Va., makes the announcement of the sudden death of the Siamese twins, last Saturday morning, the 17th, at their residence at Mount Viay, Surry county, N. C. Chang was partially paralyzed last fall, since which time he has been fretful, very much debilitated, and strongly addicted to drinking liquor as a means of alleviating his sufferings. He had been quite feeble for several days, so much so as to confine the brothers to bed.

Friday night Chang became worse and expired suddenly about 4 o'clock Saturday morning. Eng became so terribly shocked that he raved wildly for awhile. This attack was followed by what seemed to be a deadly stupor, and in two hours, it is supposed, from the death of Chang, Eng breathed his last.

The Baxter Law.

The recent action of the Supreme Court has practically annulled the temperance law of this State. The law has been a stupendous failure from the start, and it is to be hoped that the advocates of temperance will hereafter treat the question in a reasonable and sensible manner. In the present condition of the world, the sale and use of intoxicating drinks is a necessary evil, and any attempt to legislate stimulating drinks out of existence is as absurd as it would be to cultivate an orange garden inside of the Arctic Circle. All men recognize the desirability of the total abrogation of all the bad features connected with the use of strong drink, but the same is true of the Social Evil and every other infringement on the generally recognized moral law. No purely legislative act will materially change men's appetites, and as long as there is a desire for spirituous drinks they will be sold. The liquor question should be treated as any other evil which society is obliged to tolerate. It should be kept within reasonable bounds by the high law of moral sentiment, and then the written law should be so adjusted as to lend a helping hand to every advance in moral thought. The great mistake of the extreme temperance advocates is that they expect statutary laws to lead public sentiment on moral questions, and they do this in the face of the fact that the history of the whole world goes to show that unless the moral sentiment of the community is in accord, or in advance of such laws, they are complete failures, and soon become a by-word and a reproach. If the radical temperance men of the country will now recognize the inevitable, and go to work in the right place, much may be done toward the redemption of the people of this State from the evils of intemperance. They should agitate the question purely from a moral standpoint, and then ask for only such laws as will aid them in the development of public sentiment. License laws brings a large revenue to the common school fund, and to education and culture we must look for moral reform.

There is but little change to note in the prices of wheat, corn, oats, &c., [illegible] grain are fairly active with an upward tendency. The amount of wheat coming to market, owing to the bad roads, is small. Then, too, the open winter, with its freezes and continued thaws, is seriously effecting the growing crop. All these influences, with a large foreign demand, make prices firm. Hogs and cattle are creeping up with an active demand.

Detroit, Eel River and Illinois Railroad.

A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, dated Jan. 18th, gives the following interesting bit of news concerning efforts being made by the Eel River Company to obtain western connections. It says:

The Detroit, Eel River and Illinois Railroad, it is said, are about to lease the branch of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad, formerly known as the Toledo, Logansport & Burlington, running from Logansport to the State line, distance 64 miles. Should the Company effect the lease, it would at once place it in the front rank of trunk lines, by connecting it at the State line with the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw, running almost directly west from Toledo to Burlington and Keokuk, Iowa. The Toledo, Wabash & Western Road has heretofore controlled freight on the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw by means of this branch, and should the lease be consummated, of which there is every probability, it will cut off one of the great feeders of that road.

What it Means.

The increase of the expenses of the government for the last three months as compared with the same months of the year before may be summed up about as follows: For Civil expenses, $2,250,000, for Foreign Intercourse, $200,000, for Indians $2,500,000, for Pensions $1,780,000, for Military establishments $11,060,000, for Naval establishment $4,500,000, for Public buildings and miscellaneous matters about $7,000,000. This is about $27,000,000 and a very large part of it seems to be totally unnecessary; if not the country would be pleased to know what caused this large increase, and what assurance can be given that it will not continue on in the same manner for an indefinite time. In speaking of this same matter, the New York Post, although a Republican paper, has the independence to cry loudly against such profligacy. It concedes that twenty millions of this money has been needlessly squandered, and then says: "Do our readers know what this misuse of twenty millions of dollars really means? It means the annihilation of the labor of forty thousand men for a year, at five hundred dollars a year. It means the annihilation of the interest of nearly three hundred and fifty millions of dollars at six per cent. It means that the labor and capital of the country, which are the sources of its income, are paralyzed just to the extent in which they are squandered in these prodigalities. Every dollar of the tax imposed upon us to supply the waste is a dollar subtracted from the wages of the workingmen or the profits of the capitalists to support idlers or to encourage extravagance.

"But with these truths staring us in the face, Congress teems with projects, not of economy and retrenchment, but of augmented outlay. No one as yet has calculated the sum total of the burdens which it is proposed to impose upon the poor ass, the federal government, in the way of railroad commissioners appointed to embarrass commerce under a pretext of regulating it, and canal projects, and river improvements, and telegraph purchases, and savings banks and what not; but it would be a very short estimate to confine the amount to that of our present national debt—all of it to be done out of the people at a time when the agricultural classes are mad with suffering, when the mercantile classes are almost prostrate under the effects of a monetary crisis, and when the workingmen parade the streets of our cities, uttering cries wholly new to us, and which are only heard at intervals among the oppressed populations of the old world.

"Do the gentlemen at Washington understand these things? or will they go on with their petty and preposterous projects until disasters worse than panics bring them suddenly to their senses? We want economy first of all—thorough, rigid, uncompromising; and then we want the real interests of the country attended to, and not the schemes of speculators and lobbyists."

Our best Tea we still keep at the reduction of 15 cents per pound. We have all other grades, from 30 cents per pound up. Our 1 10 is the best in the market, and equal to any Tea sold at 30 cents more. Our only secret in selling Teas so much lower than other houses is that our immense sales of two and three chests a day enable us to purchase direct from Importers, and we, selling direct to the customer, our customers save the profit of the speculator, and wholesale merchant, which is at least 10 to 20 cents per pound.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

J. A. BARNS, CORRECTOR.

Examination of Teachers.

Examinations will be held at Auburn, on the first Saturday in each month until further notice.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co. Supt.

The Superintendent has been encouraged by meeting a number of visitors in the different schools, especially the Directors. This is another encouraging sign, that we are entering upon a new and better era, and one in which our educational interests will receive a new impetus. We hope to meet these friends often.

Teachers almost universally express a wish that parents and others interested in the school, would visit them oftener. There is no doubt that much good would be accomplished in this way. Teachers would, in this way, learn more of the wishes and expectations of the parents, and the parents would also become better acquainted with the work in the school room. They would understand better the difficulties and trials a teacher has to encounter, and with this better understanding would arise a feeling of sympathy for the teacher, and a willingness to assist him in overcoming some of these difficulties in which he most needs sympathy and assistance.

Township Institutes.

CONCORD TOWNSHIP.

The second teachers' institute of Concord township met at Spencerville January 17th, and was called to order by Mr. M. Young. On motion of Mr. Young, Mr. C. P. Houser was elected President, to serve the remainder of the winter. On motion of Mr Young, all teachers from other townships were invited to assist in the institute. The society then proceeded with the exercises according to the programme; each teacher taking the part assigned him. Common fractions by J. E. Dumot; decimal fractions by J Boyle; analysis in grammar by J. Stilling.

Afternoon session—Writing by A. P. Schurtz; a recitation in geography by a class from the Spencerville institute; school conducted, by L. Daniels; first principles of arithmetic by C. P. Howser, in which he gave the origin of the Roman and Arabic notation, also of some of our weights and measures. He then gave his method of teaching the tables in compound numbers, which is done by writing out a classification of the subjects, with each table in its appropriate place; compound proportion by W. Devilbes; a lesson on the use of Web's Word Method by C. P. Howser. Discussion—Subject—Methods of preventing whispering in school. A short time was given after each lesson for questions and criticisms.

There were ten teachers, out of twelve, present, besides quite a large attendance of visitors. Our institutes seem to be growing better. May they continue to do so.

The following programme was arranged for the next meeting, which will be held at Spencerville February 21st:

Primary reading, Mrs. Alice Deanman; theoretical arithmetic, M. Young; history, the wars, J. Boyle; geography, use of globes &c., A. P. Schurtz; discussion on the use of globes and maps; grammar—how to teach it to beginners illustrated by giving a practical recitation, L. Daniels; spelling, how to teach it, W. Abell; Physiology, digestion and circulation, E. Dumot; reading, C. P. Howser; practical arithmetic, Joseph Shilling; writing, W. Devilbes; general discussion—theory, practice and government; miscellaneous business.

Evening session—Discussion—The subject—Incentives to study. Objects of Recitation.

LUCINDA DANIELS, Secretary.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

Institute met at Jackson Center on Saturday, January 24, 1874. D. M. in the chair. Mr. Barns, being present, proceeded to assist in the institute work of that day, by first putting upon the board a tabularized statement of the verb, as taught in Harvey's grammar, giving also a full explanation of the difference betwixt regular and irregular verbs. This was followed by a general discussion in theory and practice of teaching. Among other points discussed was this: How shall we break up the habit of waiting and hesitating before answering questions in recitation? Various remedies were suggested, among others, favorable mention was made of some system of answering easy questions in concert. Subject of spelling was then discussed. Arithmetic was then taken up, and all present were reminded by a few practical examples, that the old couplet which says:

"The Rule of Three Doth puzzle me,"

will sometimes apply even in these days. The teachers were evidently pleased by the valuable suggestions made by the Superintendent on this subject, as well as that of Compound Proportion. Then followed an exemplary drill in reading, in which all took a deep interest. Next was mathematical geography, by D. M. Allen. After a discussion on school government, adjourned.

D. M. ALLEN, President.

Correct.

The 54th annual statement of the Ætna Fire Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., has been filed in the Clerk's office Net assets $5,521,049,14. John L. Davis has this day been appointed agent for Auburn, of this sterling old corporation.

They have organized a social club in Waterloo, called the Novelty Club, to cultivate, stimulate and elevate the tone of society and furnish rational, innocent and healthful recreation. An organization of this kind would not hurt our town.

We feel like congratulating the fellow that sends dispatches from here to the Chicago papers. Mr. Robert McWade, the great actor will appear in his great character of Rip Van Winkle, at Colerick's Opera House, this Thursday evening. The above will be of interest to the teachers of DeKalb coming as it does from high authority.

The performance last Friday evening by the Dramatic Company, was largely appreciated to judge from the attention and applause given. The attendance was not so large as on the opening occasion, but it was even larger than expected. All seemed well pleased with it except one or two high-toned individuals, who are jealous of success when attained by anyone else than themselves. Mr. Reynolds did well and he paid a light compliment to the troupe in being so well supported. It is to be hoped that when good weather comes the company will again appear in a good bill.

There is only one man in this wide world that we realy have a spite against and that is the fellow who invented the soap-stone griddle. We know a family in this town, that was pious, happy, serene, faultless. No cloud ever threw a shadow over its threshold. No discord entered into its keeping. Unfortunately, one day, the husband brought home a patent, non-explosive, double-back-action, soap-stone griddle, and Satan came also. Now, the old woman swears, the old man swears, and even the children whisper the most horrid oaths. It has proved worse than a sad case of mother-in-law.

Agents are wanted in every town. The proprietors offer to send steel polished post paid by mail for 50cts. Silver plated, $1. Gold plated $2. Persons desiring an agency or to obtain the tools should apply at once. The proper address is Combination Tool Co., 124 Nassau street, New York. Also the new Revolving Lightning Trap, which winds up like a clock. Kills rats, mice &c., and throws them away and sets itself as quick as the name indicates. One trap sent by express for $1.

Miss Anna Bapel, of Michigan, lectured at the M. E. Church last Saturday evening to a very small house. We expected to see a larger audience because a lady was to lecture, but it was not near so large as on Sunday evening, when it was free. More people can get into that house at a free lecture than would greet a circus. The lecture was a fair one, full of theory and advice, well studied as to language, and not very eloquently though impressively delivered. She is young yet in the lecture field and will, no doubt, with experience and practice, make a good speaker. Her theme, "The Press and the People," was a good one, giving her a wide range, of which she took advantage, making some good points. She should avoid that monotonous tone of voice, and throw a little more life and expression into the lecture.

A SUIT FOR $5,000 DAMAGES.—An important trial commenced last Monday in the Circuit Court, Judge Woods, of Goshen, presiding. W. W. Smith brought an action against Doctor J. Stough, of Waterloo, for malpractice in the treatment of Smith's daughter, who died suddenly and under mysterious circumstances last fall. The damages are laid at $5,000. The best legal ability has been employed on both sides. Messrs Morris and Ninde, of Fort Wayne and McClellan of Waterloo, for the plaintiff, and Chapin of Kendallville, and McBride & Morlan of Waterloo for the defendant. Tuesday was occupied in the examination of witnesses. The argument before the Jury was opened yesterday afternoon by Judge Morris, in an able effort, followed by McBride and Chapin for the defense. Mr. Ninde closed the argument. The Jury returned a verdict this morning in favor of the plaintiff and assessed the damages at $1000.

We have often tried to impress upon the master mind of the Press the story of throwing stones at glass houses and the following is the result of our pains.

"The editor of the Butler News is disposed to rejoice that his paper is filled with sheriff's sales. These sales are published in the paper nearest the property, and their frequent appearance in the local paper, is a rather bad showing for the financial condition of the village. It is a mere matter of taste, this bragging about the sheriff's sales."

It has been but a few weeks since the Press was overjoyed with an abundance of sheriff sales, it then being the only paper outside of the county seat. But its glorifying was cut short by the appearance of a rival who is much favored with sheriff sales and therefore chuckles with propriety that he is not to starve. There upon, it is deemed by this Press a matter of taste, these sheriff sales. Sour grapes, old boy.

SOCIAL PARTY—One of the most enjoyable parties ever assembled in Waterloo met at the residence of C. A. O. McClellan on last Wednesday evening. In spite of the inclement weather the spacious and elegant rooms of Mr. and Mrs. Mack were filled to overflowing, with their many friends. Ample preparations had been made to receive them, however, and nothing was omitted that could add to the enjoyment of the evening. The liberal host had engaged the 'bus for the accommodation of those living in the more distant parts of town. Quite a number of guests were also present from Fort Wayne, Angola, Kendallville and other places. A supper, such as might be expected by all who are acquainted with the hostess, was served up about eleven o'clock. After enjoying themselves until "the wee sma' hours about the twal" the company dispersed with many expressions of gratitude for the pleasant entertainment they had received, and feeling that "it had been good for them to be there."

Japanese Peas.

These peas yield 200 bushels to the acre Agents wanted. They have recently been brought to this country from Japan, and prove to be the finest pea known for table use or for stock. They grow in the form of a bush, from 3 to 5 feet high, and do not require sticking. They yield from 1 quart to a gallon of peas per bush. A sample package, that will produce from 5 to 10 bushels of peas, giving terms to agents, and full directions as to the time and manner of planting, will be sent post paid, to any one desiring to act as agent, on receipt of 50 cents. Address,

We hear of one or two who say the performance, last week, was vulgar. What ideas people have that's never been away from home.

Remember Vordermark's Shoe Store when purchasing such articles.

We hate to part company with some of our old subscribers, but the times are such, unless they pay up, we must. The COURIER has a very large circulation.—This is gratifying, because it shows the paper is appreciated, but a large circulation is only a detriment to publishers unless subscribers are prompt paying. The white paper is cash, and unless cash is paid the supply is cut off. Paper makers don't fool long with printers who are not up to time when bills are due. It is come down or get out. Not being in a position to get out we are compelled to come down, and to qualify ourselves for this "come down business" we must practice on some of our delinquent subscribers. We make these remarks to explain the absence of THE COURIER next week in many of the households, where it has long been a weekly visitor. We do this from no disposition to be ugly—not at all. We are simply driven to it from stern necessity.—There is scarcely a person who cannot pay the small sum due this office, but how patiently do some subscribers bear the distress and suffering of a poor printer.—To those who have responded to our call we express undivided thanks.

OUR HUB AND SPOKE FACTORY.

We visited this large establishment last Tuesday and found the machinery tearing into the wood and turning out more hubs and spokes than we thought could be made in one day. Nearly all the machinery is in position—several machines being set aside until room is made for them About twenty-five men are at work yet the factory is not running to its full capacity. We met Major Casebeer, the wheelhorse of the enterprise at the door and he escorted us through the various departments, with an unction that was as gratifying as it was becoming. The Maj. is one of these genial, big-hearted fellows that always have a smile for everybody.—He has the energy to push things through and there is no fear but that the enterprise under his guidance will meet with success. He has had large experience, knows where to hit and always strikes when the iron is hot. He is ably assisted by Mr. Wood, whose merits as a man of enterprise, liberality and fair dealing have long since been recognised by our citizens. Practical workmen are in control of each machine while others are provided to keep them supplied with stock. Each man has his particular duty to perform, and the entire working of machinery and stock is so systematized that not a moment lost while the line shaft is in motion A cut of wood large enough to make a hub is thrown upon one machine, and then passes from that to another and so on until in a moment it comes out at the other end a perfect hub, only requiring seasoning to make it fit for use. The same may be said of the spoke department and thus hundreds are made every day and so fast is the manufactured stock accumulating that sheds will have to be erected to find a place for it. There is still some capital stock subscribed that has not been paid, and with this they intend erecting these sheds. We learn from Superintendent Casebeer that they will begin to ship on orders this week, and that they have orders now that will require a year to fill.

Mr. E. E. Williams, the outside man, or contractor is kept busy in furnishing materiel for the capacious jaws of these machines, but thanks to the abundance of timber in this section of the county, he has a large amount on hand and large quantities are received daily.

We regard this establishment as a valuable acquisition to Auburn, for it gives employment even in these hard times to a goodly number of men and will greatly enlarge in this direction every year.

Such institutions are what make thriving and prosperous towns and we want to see more of them established here.

There are several other manufactories that should be added the present year, and we want to see an effort to that purpose. We forgot to state the irrepressible Ira Crow is chief engineer at this establishment, and keeps his department in good order. Ira promised to call and see us but has not yet. We suppose Ira has forgot it. Its somewhat of a habit for Ira to forget. Ira, don't forget.

Communicated.

MR. EDITOR—I was very much pleased that you noticed in your last issue the conduct of young boys on our streets at night. I am scarcely a proper person to judge of their practice for seldom am I on the streets but my ears are pained by horrid oaths—the more saddening because from boys whose lips should know nothing but the words of innocence and love. It is a dreadful thing for men to curse their Maker and swear by His holy name, but for children to do so is enough to chill our blood. It is a crime appalling in itself, and points to a future, even in this life, so dreadful that one covers his face from and refuses to think of it. I do not know who these boys are, but they belong to some of the families of this town. Parents, is he your boy? I know that parents have so much confidence in their children that they think they are all right. "My boy never would do so;" but these boys belong to some one. Is he your boy? Do not take all for granted. See to it. It is a pernicious and ruinous habit to allow boys to be on the streets at night. If they are not already bad, they cannot long be good coming in contact with the society they meet—loafers and loose characters; for others, as a general thing, find employment or other places to spend their time. Some one is responsible for this. Who is it? I would say community; because it does not frown upon this evil practice and rebuke it everywhere; but most of all the parents, and especially the mothers. Do not let your children thus be ruined by a thoughtless want of watchfulness over their lives. Train that life for nobleness which is now on the way to ruin.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE strike in the Pennsylvania coal fields has been fully inaugurated, and extends throughout the anthracite regions. The miners have passed stringent resolutions calculated to deter any of their weak-kneed fellows from returning to work at the companies' terms. They will undoubtedly make a stubborn and protracted resistance to any reduction. The mine-owners have announced their ultimatum, and having done so, are holding no further communication with the miners. They have closed their mines, and declare that they will not be reopened until the men come to work at the reduced schedule of rates. Thus the matter stands, and seems likely to stand for weeks, if not months, to come.

THE knitting mill of [illegible], of Bennington, Vt., was burned on the 20th of January, the fire being caused by the leakage of a gasoline pipe. The gas ignited from a boiler fire, and, exploding, demolished the adjoining sewing-room. Nine women at work there were instantly killed or burned to death in the fire which followed, and many others were injured, some shockingly.

THE Samana Bay Company has negotiated a loan of $5,000,000 in London....M. Gambetta has been challenged to fight a duel by M. Haentjens, a member of the French Assembly. ....The London Times publishes the substance of a note from Prince Bismarck which holds the French Government accountable for the violence of the Ultramontane press in France.

The West.

SOME time ago a man named Bob Turner was arrested in Grant county, Wis., charged with murdering his brother. It was suspected at the time that Turner had committed other murders. Recently he has made a full confession, which more than confirms these suspicions, and stamps him as one of the most atrocious wretches unhung. He delights to talk of the many persons he has killed. He gloats over the skill with which he has concealed their bodies, and declares nobody can find them but himself, and that if they were got together there would be nearly forty of them. He says that his mission on earth was to kill off the people, as there were altogether too many people crowding into this country, and exhibits a savage satisfaction in recounting his bloody exploits.

THE jewelry store of Duhme & Co., in Cincinnati, was robbed, a few days ago, of $7,000 worth of diamonds....A dispatch from Duluth, Minn., says the Indians at Vermillion Lake are dying of starvation. They have eaten six children and one man. The scarcity of game and failure of the rice crop is the cause....Ex-Senator Doolittle is President of the University of Chicago.

JOHN T. HARPER, the defaulting Revenue Collector, who fled to Canada some months ago, has returned to his home at El Paso, Ill. ....The Central Union Depot, at the foot of Lake street, Chicago, has been burned. Loss, $100,000.

GOV. BAGLEY has called an extra session of the Michigan Legislature for Wednesday, March, 3....At Shelbyville, Ind., a few days ago, a committee of ladies visited all the liquor-saloons and other places where liquors are sold, and held prayer-meeting, imploring the dealers to give up their traffic. At one or two places they were treated rudely, but were generally courteously received....Gold in limited quantities has been discovered seven miles from Des Moines, Iowa. It pans out 1¢ to the bushel of dirt. Some samples of quartz are shown containing small particles.

THE ship Panther was recently wrecked between Port Townsend and San Francisco. Twenty-three lives—all on board—were lost. ....The United States steamer Tuscarora has sailed from San Diego, Cal., for the Sandwich Islands and Japan, for the purpose of sounding en route for a location for the proposed telegraph cable between Asia and the Pacific coast of the United States....A passenger train en route from Dubuque to Chicago was thrown from the track near Rochelle, Iowa, a few days ago, rolled down an embankment, and turned bottom side upward. The passengers got a pretty lively shaking up, and scarcely one of them escaped injury. Many were severely wounded, but all will probably recover....There is a great destitution among the Indians of Minnesota, and some of them have been driven to the horrible extremity of killing and eating their own children.

The South.

CHANG and Eng, the celebrated Siamese twins, died suddenly at their home in Surrey county, N. C., on Jan. 17. Chang was partially paralyzed last fall, since which time he has been fretful, very much debilitated, and strongly addicted to drinking liquor as a means of alleviating his sufferings. He had been quite feeble for several days, so much so as to confine the brothers to their bed. On Friday night, the 16th, Chang became worse, and expired suddenly about 4 o'clock on Saturday morning, the 17th. Eng became so terribly shocked that he raved wildly for a while. This attack was followed by what seemed to be a deadly stupor, and in two hours from the death of Chang, Eng breathed his last. They were 63 years old.

Washington.

MR. MCCRARY'S bill for the appointment of a Government Board of Railroad Commissioners, and for the prohibition of unreasonable charges by inter-State railroads, has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Railroads and Canals. The committee make a long argument to establish the constitutionality and expediency of such legislation. Congress is distinctly granted power to regulate commerce between the States, and that, the committee argue, with a great deal of chop logic, covers the ground. Congress has the same power over inter-State railway traffic that individual States have over their internal traffic. The regulation of inter-State railroads by the several States is impossible. There must be a national regulation or none. The question, as they put it, is, whether these corporations shall be controlled by the Federal Government or left unbridled....The question of the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to draw on the $44,000,000 reserve has been dismissed by the Committee on Ways and Means, who have agreed to present the subject to the House and have it settled there.

THE President has approved the Salary Repeal bill....The famous speech delivered by Elliott (colored), of South Carolina, in the House of Representatives recently, turns out to be the production of Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 23d says: "The postal telegraph scheme still occupies a good portion of the time of the House Committee on Postoffices. Mr. Orton has finally concluded his argument against the scheme, and its friends will now take up the time of the committee for a week or two."

Foreign.

THE ship Minnehaha, from Callao for Dublin, has been lost off the Sicily Islands. Ten of the crew were drowned....There is again talk at Washington over a prospective change in the head of the Treasury Department.... Thirty-three workmen were killed at Toquella, Spain, a few days ago, by the falling of a railway viaduct.

IT is announced that persons passing between France and Italy no longer need passports.

NINETEEN persons were recently drowned by the sinking of a steamer in the port of Bastia, Corsica....The famine in Bengal is assuming an increased importance and engaging the earnest attention of the leading men in financial and commercial circles. At London, there seems to be no doubt that England will be called upon for large quantities of food to feed her famishing population in India....A report has reached London that the King of Ashantee has sued for peace.

A WILKESBARRE (Pa.) dispatch says the coal miners are growing turbulent and disorderly: that thousands of miners are idle throughout the Wyoming region, and if the suspension of mining continues much longer, or if a strike is precipitated, the greatest lawlessness will arise....Gov. Straw, of New Hampshire, gave a reception and levee to the printers, editors and publishers of New Hampshire, at his new chateau in Manchester, a few evenings since.

LONDON has just experienced another of those dense fogs so peculiar to that latitude. ....According to the Spanish official reports of the engagement at Los Melones 650 Government troops, under Col. Espanda, met 1,800 of the insurgents, and after a severe fight of six hours and a half the Spaniards retreated, having four officers and fifty privates wounded, Espanda having his nose shot off. Private Cuban advices say that Espanda had 1,200 men, only 260 of whom escaped death, wounds, or capture....A London dispatch announces the death of Madme. Parepa-Rosa, the celebrated cantatrice....The Acheenese continue to make desperate resistance to the occupation of their country by the Dutch.

Political.

GOV. DAVIS, of Texas, has twice asked President Grant to help him hold the Gubernatorial chair, and has twice been refused. To his last appeal the President has replied, through Attorney-General Williams, that he has already held the office longer than the law allows, and that his right to stay still longer is at least so doubtful that no Federal troops will be put at his disposal, as he requests.

THE newly-elected officials in Texas have gained full possession of the State Government....The political disturbance in Mississippi has been settled by the Supreme Court of the State, which holds the last election legal and constitutional. This puts Ames in the chair as Governor

The Grange.

C. L. KING, Deputy of the Michigan State Grange, writes: "The number of granges in the State now exceeds 200, and the applications come in thicker than ever before. The calls on the National Grange for charters exceed 100 a week."....The Georgia State Grange was in session at Atlanta last week, 275 subordinate granges being represented.... The Wisconsin State Grange met at Janesville on the 21st inst. The most of the proceedings were of a secret character. Three hundred and four granges were in working condition in the State on Oct. 1, and some 25 have been organized since. The Treasurer's report shows receipts for the year, $4,017, disbursements, $2,277, which leaves only $1,740 in the treasury. Grand Worthy Master Cochrane delivered an address, in which he represents the order to be in a flourishing condition and spreading rapidly. George Parsons and the associate officers of the Minnesota State Grange of Patrons of Husbandry have filed articles of incorporation under the laws of the State. The objects of the incorporation are to advance the agricultural and horticultural interests of its members, and the purchase and sale of agricultural and horticultural machinery, grain, produce, etc., and the establishment of agencies throughout the United States to carry out these objects....The Michigan State Grange was in session at Kalamazoo last week. Upward of 700 delegates were in attendance, and the proceedings were harmonious. The State Grange was organized last April. There are now 215 granges, with an average of sixty members to each. This is a small estimate. The organization is composed, in most cases, of the best farmers and leading men.

THE Agricultural Committee of the National House of Representatives has appointed a sub-committee to take into consideration the complaints of the Grangers. These complaints are pouring into Congress from all sections of the country, and embrace a multitude of subjects, including transportation with its rates and inconveniences; also, the great cost of manufacturing wheat into flour....The Wisconsin Grangers have resolved that the taxation of railroads should be increased to 5 per cent., and that the United States Government should provide currency enough to do away with any danger of panic....The Executive Committee of the Michigan State Grange, in their report, recommend that the delegates to the National Grange make an effort to have charter dues of subordinate granges reduced from $15 to $10, and annual dues to the State Grange to 5 cents per capita; also, to allow the conferring of two degrees at one meeting, and making fees of deputies uniform; to make provision for mileage and per diem of delegates to the National Grange; to pay delegates in orders on the subordinate grange; and that granges be not allowed to be located within five miles of each other.

General.

MR. W. C. FLAGG, President of the Illinois Farmers' Association, delivered an elaborate address before the National Cheap Transportation Convention, at Washington, in the course of which he gave his solution of the transportation problem. His plan, in brief, is to build eight grand trunk railway lines, connecting the North, West, South, and East. He thinks they could be built for $25,000 per mile, which would be about $25,000,000 for each road, or $200,000,000 for the whole—about $7,000,000 on the average, for each State through which they run, or an assessment of $6.50 per acre on each acre of land within three miles of a line, or two-thirds of 1 per cent. on the total wealth of the country, which is less than one-half the annual railroad charges of the country....A Washington dispatch says the House Committee on Railroads and Canals have agreed upon McCrary's bill to regulate commerce by railroad among the several States, and will report it to the House at the first opportunity, together with a report on the subject of the bill, which Mr. McCrary is now preparing. ....The National Crop Reporter of the 16th inst. publishes the final estimates of last year's crop of oats and hay in the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, and Wisconsin. The estimated total production of oats in the States named in 1872 was, in round numbers, 192,300,000 bushels, and the falling off from this in 1873 is placed at 10 2-10 per cent. Indiana shows the heaviest loss, being over 17 per cent., and Tennessee the largest gain, or nearly 9 per cent. The estimates of the hay crop give an average falling off in the crop of 1873 as compared with that of 1872 equal to 6¼ per cent., and makes the total yield last year in the above States nearly 10,000,000 tons.... The National Board of Trade, in session at Baltimore last week, adopted the report of the Committee on Transportation appointed at the Chicago meeting, some weeks ago, the principal features of which are as follows:

1. That legislation be adopted to prevent the delay in active shipment of grain intended for transportation in the hands of common carriers.
2. That the only true remedy for the existing evils in transportation will be secured by the development of water routes, and that it is the duty of Government neither to assist nor give aid or money to benefit any artificial route of transportation.
3. That any attempt to regulate the rate of freight by Government authority would be inexpedient and contrary to sound policy.
4. That the fast freight system is wrong and bad in its tendencies, and that railroads should be compelled to perform the business of transportation themselves alone.
5. That Government may charter any railway through any of the different States, subject to the same local taxation as is imposed by such States on railroads now in operation within their borders.

THE Cheap Transportation Convention, at Washington, adopted the report of the majority of the Committee on Railroads, which declares that relief must come from legislation, recommends a national law providing for a Bureau of Commerce and Transportation, etc.; that members of the Association shall endeavor to obtain the passage of certain laws in their respective States, including a law prohibiting all railway companies from making unjust and excessive discriminations against places which are not competing points, and a law obliging all railway companies to transport the cars of other companies, or of individuals, for a just and impartial compensation, with the same dispatch as for cars belonging exclusively to said roads. It calls for legislation making it a penal offense for a public officer to accept or use a free pass of any railway company, and prohibiting railway companies from granting passes to other than employes, and condemns granting of lands or subsidies in any form. It also recommends that railways and canals be constructed by the National Government, the manner of constructing railways to be by contract to the lowest bidder; that when constructed they should be used for the transportation of Government property; and when not required for Government use, all citizens to have the right to place cars and locomotives thereon, and to operate the same, subject to regulations to be provided by the Government, they paying a toll therefor sufficient to maintain the roadway.

A SECRET conference of representatives from every district of the northern coal fields of Pennsylvania was held at Wilkesbarre a few days ago, at which the question of a strike was thoroughly discussed. It was resolved that it would be disastrous to the miners to oppose the combination of the operators at present, as organization has not been effected sufficiently to offer a solid and compact opposition. The strike is regarded as practically over, and that the miners will either accept the $2.25 basis or signify their willingness to compromise.

CONGRESS.

House.—Hyde offered a resolution looking to the regulation of commerce on navigable rivers; to protect tug-boat and other combinations; to establish uniform rates on railroads, etc....A bill was passed providing for an appeal from Circuit Courts to the Supreme Court in cases of habeas corpus....The Naval Appropriation bill was passed.

FRIDAY, Jan. 16.—Senate.—Logan introduced a bill making retirements in the army and marine corps obligatory after a certain age. Also, a bill authorizing appointments and promotion in the medical and ordnance departments of the army, and for other purposes. Also, a bill to increase the pay department of the army....The bill was passed appropriating $2,500 for busts of the late Chief-Justices Taney and Chase for the Supreme Court room.... The debate on the finances was continued. Sherman delivered an elaborate speech, opposing any further inflation of the currency.

House.—Small asked leave to offer a resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to inquire and report how many horses are maintained by the Government in the District of Columbia; the expense and uses; who uses them, and whether they are required for public service. Also carriages and other vehicles owned by the Government and used. Butler objected, and the resolution was not received....Dawes, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill to reimburse distillers for the amounts paid by them in procuring Tice meters, by order of the Internal Revenue Bureau, but which meters were subsequently abolished by law.

SATURDAY, Jan. 17.—Senate.—Not in session.

The motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution was defeated—yeas, 135; nays, 96....Ward introduced a bill providing that the heirs of any soldier who was killed or died while in military service during the late war, whose period of enlistment was for less than one year, or who shall have since died by reason of wounds received, or disease contracted, shall be entitled to receive the same bounties as if said soldier had enlisted for three years... A bill was passed allowing coinage for foreign countries to be executed at the United States Mint.

TUESDAY, Jan. 20.—Senate.—The finances were again the topic of debate in the Senate. Brownlow and Gordon argued in favor of, and Chandler against, inflation....A number of petitions from the National Board of Trade were presented ....Oglesby made a speech on cheap transportation, stating that in his opinion it was of more importance than the finance question....Bogy spoke in favor of national legislation to open the natural water-routes from the West to the sea....The Post-Route bill was taken up and discussed....The Senate went into Executive session to consider the President's nomination for Chief-Justice. The finances were again discussed. Merrimon delivered a speech in which he advocated inflation and speedy resumption....A bill was passed ameliorating the Revenue laws. It provides that, in cases of undervaluation, confiscation shall extend only to the items undervalued, and not, as has been the practice, to the entire invoice....The Senate, in executive session, unanimously confirmed the nomination of Morrison R. Waite as Chief-Justice.

House.—A bill was passed authorizing the President to extend, in the name of the United States, a respectful and cordial invitation to the Governments of other nations to be represented and take part in the International Exposition to be held at Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Government of the United States, in the year 1876.

It declares that provisions of law existing prior to the act of April 12, 1866, are in force so as to authorize an amount of legal tender notes of the United States equal to $400,000,000 in general circulation, and that the total amount of United States notes issued or to be issued shall never exceed $400,000,000. The bill was made the special order for Thursday, Jan. 29....The House had a long discussion on the West Virginia contested election case, but adjourned without reaching a vote.

Whom Do Great Men Marry?

Women, of course. But they show the same diversity of taste that is seen in the lower ranks, and on the whole make worse mistakes. They, however, generally show the same sense in choosing wives that they show in managing other people's affairs, whether it be good or bad. John Howard, the great philanthropist, married his nurse. She was altogether beneath him in social life and intellectual capacity, and, besides this, was fifty-two years old, while he was but twenty-five. He would not take No for an answer, and they were married, and lived happily together until her death, which occurred two years afterward. Peter the Great, of Russia, married a peasant girl. She made an excellent wife and a sagacious Empress. Humboldt married a poor girl because he loved her. Of course they were happy. Shakespeare loved and wedded a farmer's daughter. She was faithful to her vow, but we can hardly say the same of the great bard himself. Like most of the great poets, he showed too little discrimination in bestowing his affection on the other sex. Byron married Miss Milbank to get her money to pay his debts. It turned out a bad shift. Robert Burns married a farm-girl, with whom he fell in love while they worked together in the plow-field. He, too, was irregular in his life, and committed the most serious mistakes in conducting his domestic affairs. Milton married the daughter of a country squire, but lived with her only a short time. He was an austere, exacting, literary recluse, while she was a rosy, romping country lass, who could not endure the restraints imposed upon her, and so they separated. Subsequently, however, she returned, and they lived tolerably happy. Queen Victoria and Prince Albert were cousins, and about the only example in the long line of English monarchs wherein the marital vows were sacredly observed and sincere affection existed. Washington married a widow with two children. It is enough to say of her that she was worthy of him, and that they lived, as married folks should, in perfect harmony. John Adams married the daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman. Her father objected on account of John being a lawyer; he had a bad opinion of the morals of the profession. General Sherman married the daughter of Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, who was a member of General Taylor's Cabinet. This alone would have been a good start in life for any young man.

A Rough Charivari.

The Bay City (Mich.) Chronicle of a recent date says:

"The ceremony known commonly by the name of "shiveree" is, fortunately, of rare occurrence among our people, and every new instance of its observance adds greatly to the general aversion to and condemnation of it. A most efficient help to its entire abolishment in this way is furnished just now by a charivari which occurred a few nights since in Beaver Township. It was probably the most outrageous affair which has disgraced a community in this section for many a year.

The charivari party went to the house of a Mr. Perry, who had lately married a widow with several small children. The visitors were armed with guns, as well as the usual implements and instruments of such expeditions. They began firing before reaching the house, and so frightened Mrs. Perry that she ran out of the house and escaped to her father's. The husband remained with the little children, and was soon beset by the ruffians. They threw stove-wood through the windows, of the house, broke up articles inside, tore bed-clothes and curtains, and set fire to the house in two places. Then they surrounded Mr. Perry, and while one of them presented a shot-gun at his breast, they demanded that he should make a contribution of $5 for the further entertainment of the gang as the price of peace. Perry refused compliance with the demand, and the outrages again began at once. The children were at last put into a closet for safety, while Perry busied himself in protecting his home from fire. The assailants emptied the hen house, threw the fowls into the dwelling through the windows. Every outrage which could be devised seems to have been perpetrated by the fellows before they left.

A complaint was yesterday made before Justice Hargadon, of this city, and a warrant was issued for a number of the attacking party. The warrant was given to Sheriff Bunnell to serve.

Proper Mode of Feeding Horses.

Let me say a word or two now in reference to feeding the horse, as bearing upon the condition of the foot. Every owner of a horse must have observed that the growth and strength and appearance of that horse's foot is materially affected by the condition of the horse himself. A half-starved horse may have a foot injured by deficient nutrition; an over-fed horse may have a foot heated into an inflamation; and so dependent is the foot upon a healthy state of the animal economy, that for the foot alone, if nothing else, the diet of the horse should be regulated with the utmost regard to his health.

I am confident that we give our horses too much grain and too little hay—especially horses under seven years of age, who will work with more endurance and courage on a good supply of hay and a moderate supply of grain—of the latter say six quarts of oats and a pint of corn daily. Older horses require and will bear more grain—but even they want more hay than is usually given. Every horse should pass a few weeks of each year without grain—either the first half or the last half of the winter, whichever is most convenient. And this mode of feeding can be adopted without suspending the animal's work.

I have one horse fourteen years old, which has had this regimen for four months of every year of his life (and I bred him), and he is as smooth, vigorous and healthy as a colt—has a sound, smooth foot—was never lame—and has always been in good driving order. He is a good specimen of what box stalls, brick floors, tar ointment, turnips and hay will do for a horse towards preserving his health and strength and soundness, and promoting his longevity.—Dr. Loring, in Massachusetts Ploughman.

Caleb Cushing.

Hon. Caleb Cushing, whose nomination for Chief Justice has been withdrawn by the President, has, for more than forty-five years, taken an active part in politics. He was born in Saulisbury, Mass., in January, 1800, and is descended from an old colonial family. He was graduated at Harvard College, studied law and commenced practice at Newburyport. He was elected to the Massachusetts Legislature in 1825, again in 1833, and to Congress from the Essex District in 1835, where he served four consecutive terms, changing from Whig to Democrat when President Tyler came into power. Failing in 1843 to be confirmed as Secretary of the Treasury, to which position he was nominated, he went as Commissioners to China, where he negotiated our first treaty with that power. He raised a regiment and entered the Mexican war as Colonel, being soon promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General. While still in Mexico, in 1847 he was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Governor of Massachusetts, but was defeated. He served in the Legislature in 1850, '57, '58 and '59; and after being two years Mayor of Newburyport and Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in 1853 he was appointed, by President Pierce, United States Attorney-General, which position he held for four years. Mr. Cushing presided over the Democratic Convention held in Charleston, S. C., in 1860, and subsequently he became a hearty supporter of the war for the Union. He approved of the policy of President Johnson, and was by him appointed Commissioner to codify the laws of Congress. During the present Administration he was appointed one of the counsel of the United States before the Geneva Tribunal of Arbitration on the Alabama claims. He has written several books them, among a work on Spain, one on the French revolution of 1830, and recently a history of the Geneva Tribunal. Mr. Cushing has long ranked as among the ablest lawyers in the country, having been employed in many important cases before the court over which he is appointed to preside.

A Californian Wonder.

The tract of country known as the Slate Range Valley is probably one of the most curious that southern California can boast of. It is there the immense deposits of borax were discovered something like a year ago, and at that time the whole lower or central part of the basin was covered with a white deposit, breaking away in some places in large soda reefs in others resembling the waves of the ocean, and in still others stretching out for miles in one unbroken level, from which the sun reflected its rays with a glare almost unendurable. But one of the most singular features in connection with this section was the absence of rain or moisture; the days were ever sunny and hot, the nights without dew and generally warm. For more than five years, it is said, by those who claim to know, there had been no rain there, until some three months since the spell was broken. Suddenly, and with scarcely any warning, rain commenced to fall, and for thirty hours came down steadily and unceasingly, unaccompanied by wind, but yet a thorough drenching rain. For two or three days it remained pleasant, when suddenly a water-spout was seen winding its way through the valley. It came in a zigzag course across the upper end of the lake, striking the range of hills on the east side, and coursing rapidly along them. The canyons and gorges were soon filled with water, which poured from them in fearful volume, and spread itself out upon the bottom. In a short time it was over, and denizens of the place now look for another dry season of five years.

Tom Corwin's Color.

A writer in Harper's Magazine for January says: "Tom Corwin's humor and sarcasm were of too delicate and subtle a nature to permit of their transfer to paper with much effect. His wit was spontaneous and unpremeditated, but wonderfully telling. When the abolition excitement was at its height he was invited to address a public meeting at Covington, opposite Cincinnati. It was apprehended that the ultra-slavery men might interrupt him, so he determined to propitiate them by an anecdote. 'Fellow-citizens,' said he, 'it is quite possible that some of you may suppose that my sympathies are with the negroes to such an extent that I would be glad to see them prosper at the expense of the superior race. I don't propose to refute this notion by argument or assertion, but I will give my bit of experience in relation to the blacks, from which you will be able to infer what my feelings toward them are likely to be. When I was quite a young man I went down the river to New Orleans on a flatboat. I remained in that rather lively city for a couple of weeks, seeing what was worth looking at, until, my money being about spent, I bethought myself of returning. But one thing I had not seen, which I was told was one of the inevitable sights of the place. I must go to a quadroon ball. So, dressed in my best clothes, I called for a ticket to the ball, and was repulsed with the declaration, "Colored folk not admitted!"' Corwin was quite as dark as a quadroon."

A Singular Prayer.

Dr. Sunderland, the Chaplain of the United States Senate, offered the following prayer in that body, at the opening of the session, the day after the passage of the Salary Repeal bill, and while the measure was pending in the House:

"Gracious and most merciful Lord God Almighty, Lord of all harmony and agreement among men, we thank Thee for the deed of yesterday done in this chamber to redeem time and to give answer to the nation that its will is done. Hasten the matter, we beseech Thee, O Lord, to its full completion, and prepare these, Thy servants, to grapple with the vast questions still pending before them. Thou canst make this Congress as the Sanhedrim to the Jew, as the Areopagus to the Greek of old times, a council in whose power and wisdom the whole land shall find a blessing and rejoice, through Christ, our Lord. Amen.

How Mrs. Prime Took Her Music-Box to Church.

Mrs. Prime, when her only son Peter went into the navy, in the hopes that there would be a war with Cuba, received as a parting gift a neat little music-box which he had purchased in New York for $10. Last Sabbath the good lady made her preparations for church, and, just as the bells struck for the last time, she ran into the parlor, snatched up her prayer-book and almost ran to the church, having a holy horror of being late. She soon arrived at her destination, and had hardly time to note precisely what the horrid Smiths were wearing, although she was certain sure they had on the same clothes they wore in the summer, when the good pastor gave out the lesson, for it was an Episcopal church. She reached in front of her for the prayer-book and made an effort to open it, but being near sighted, turned it over two or three times when it finally flew open, and as the pastor commenced on the second line something within began to play "Wait for the Wagon." The good woman had brought along the music-box instead of the prayer-book; horror of horrors! the Smiths, who sat directly in front of her, perceived her mistake immediately, and their snickering called the attention of the congregation to the poor old lady, while she, covered with shame, did not know precisely what to do. The minister stopped in the midst of his lesson, and all eyes were turned to the pew of Mrs. Prime, while the good woman thought if the earth would open up and swallow her, or that some one would halloo "fire" she would be satisfied. Her fumbling at the box only started on fresh tunes, and all the tunes represented in the box came out in rapid succession. First there would be "Old Dan Tucker," then would be heard the lively strains of "Pop goes the Weasel," followed by "Dandy Jim." There was consternation in that church you may suppose, and, do what the good lady would, she could not stop the lively instrument. She sat on it, put it under her feet, turned it upside down—but no go, still came the tunes in rapid succession, "Jim along Josey," "Lucy Long," and others. At last, when Mrs. Prime thought she should be willing to die just then and there, the sexton, seeing the evident mistake of the good woman, took it from her and passed it up the aisle, the last heard of it being the parting strains of "Home, Sweet Home."—Elizabeth Herald.

Pedagogic Barbarism.

[From the Springfield Advertiser.]

Verily the age of Pedagocic barbarism is not yet at an end. We still find teachers "keeping" school from sunrise to sunset because required to do so, and that too in our own prosperous country, from which we had hoped all such relics of other days had been eliminated. The legally prescribed time of six hours per day is sufficient for school room work and save in a few instances of advanced classes should not be departed from. Indeed we look upon the confinement of little children through so many long weary hours as little short of sin. Education is triune in its character. The hand and heart demand then due recognition with the head, too much mental labor not coupled with physical exercise is detrimental rather than beneficial. Parents, themselves when compelled to listen to too prolix a discourse, realize how irksome it is to be thus confined; how much worse is it for childhood whose frames are in that formative state which demand a large amount of activity.

There is no development of mind; no growth of bone independent of exercise, youth is preeminently the time for this. Then let them roam in joyous freedom, or put their natural activity to good use in light health giving labor. Our own opinion is that children from five to ten years of age should never be kept at study for a longer time than a half day and then should be drilled in calisthenics or permitted to enjoy recess hourly. Teachers eradicate this sin.

AUBURN COURIER

T. C. MAYS, PUBLISHER.

Telegraphy.

The annual report of the Western Union Telegraph Company for the year ending June 30th, 1873, which was published during the early part of the late panic, attracted less attention than it would have otherwise received, less than its importance demanded. Although this company is a private corporation, managed and controlled by a few large stockholders solely as a money-making affair, yet there are few matters intrusted to the General Government of greater general interest. There is necessarily intrusted to it the most important correspondence, both mercantile and financial. A large banking business is transacted by its bureau for the transfer of money.

Prices in all the principal marts of the country for all articles of merchandise are regulated by the daily reports from its commercial bureau. In connection with the Associated Press, it collects, collates, and furnishes to the daily papers all over the country their telegraphic dispatches, the most important news they publish, the first and often the only part of the paper read. It has become the educator of the people, and its influence is daily extending, until it has become essential to the success of many departments of business. It has over 150,000 miles of wire stretching along every railway and reaching every important place. Its annual receipts are nearly $10,000,000, a larger amount than the Postoffice Department received ten years ago. A corporation wielding such immense power is not a private company; but one in which every citizen has a direct and personal interest.

The average rate of messages has been reduced in six years from $1.10 to 61 cents and the business has been doubled. This great reduction in rates has been followed by a slight increase in the net income of the company. The average rate is still much higher than in any other country, and so high as to prevent the use of the telegraph by any except the rich and those compelled to use it. The report says that heretofore the competition from rival lines has been the most potent cause in operation for compelling the company to reduce its rates; but that it is now relieved from all fear from this source, as it has recently purchased nearly all the opposition lines, and at the present rates "it is impossible for any competing company to realize profits, and all are believed to be operating at a loss, and the time is not distant, therefore, when the company will be without a substantial competitor."

From this frank and public statement it appears that a change will now be made in its policy, and that the public cannot expect further reduction in rates.

Abroad the telegraph is connected with the postoffice, and the people use it freely as they do the mails. We do not believe, however, that our Government should interfere in private matters, nor that the power of the Executive should be enlarged; but the duty of transmitting correspondence was devolved upon Congress by the founders of our Republic, and, as it has wisely undertaken this business, and performed it to the satisfaction of the people, there is every reason why it should now adopt this, the latest, improvement for its rapid transmission. It is often said that corporations can perform any business cheaper than the Government. Admitting the general truth of this proposition, it yet does not apply to the telegraph, for the agencies now employed by the Postoffice Department for receiving and delivering letters would be used for the telegraphic letter. The present clerks could perform all the office business, thus greatly reducing the expenses, if the Postmaster General was authorized to contract for the transmission of telegrams, as he now contracts for the transmission of the mails, at rates fixed by Congress.

A bill for the purpose of connecting the telegraph with the Postoffice Department authorizing the Postmaster-General to contract for the transmission of telegrams, was reported by committees of the Senate and House of Representatives at the last Congress. This proposition, we presume, will come up for action the ensuing winter and we trust will become a law. The rates fixed by the bill are nearly 50 per cent. below present charges, while the length of the telegram is 80 per cent. greater. Night telegrams will be transmitted at a still greater reduction.

The charge for a telegraphic letter of 25 words sent by night 1,500 miles or less will be only 25 cents. Such low rates will make the telegraph a public blessing, bring it within the reach of all, and enable the press to establish new and independent news associations. We shall refer again to this subject.—The Independent.

The Emancipation Proclamation.

[To the Editor of the New York Times.]

In your issue of the 21st inst., you quote from Mr. Maunsell B. Field's new book, "Memories of Many Men," among other passages, one which is calculated to give an erroneous impression concerning the preparation and proclamation of President Lincoln's emancipation proclamation:

In the first place, the proclamation was no sudden and unexpected birth, and was no surprise to anybody in or out of the Cabinet, having been formally promised to the country in default of cessation of hostilities, etc., by the States and parts of States in rebellion, three months before.

In the second place, the paper, as finally published, was not in any sense the "amended result" of the joint wisdom of the Cabinet at the meeting during which it was read to them.

Mr. Nicolay brought it to me to make copies of it, immediately on the adjournment of the meeting, and the only interlineation or change that I can now recall was the one in Mr. Seward's hand, made, as I then understood, when Mr. Lincoln read it to him in private, prior to the meeting. In this respect, also, Mr. Field's recollection of his conversation with Mr. Seward must be erroneous.

The paper remained in my custody until it went to Chicago, where the great fire burned it up. It was in Mr. Lincoln's own handwriting throughout, with the single exception referred to, and there never was a man more averse than he to anything like patchwork, or less likely to "accept without discussion" the crude and hasty suggestions of others.

If my memory should be at fault at all, Mr. Nicolay, Mr. Hay, or Mr. Frank B. Carpenter can easily correct me. The latter especially has heard the minutest particulars relating to the proclamation from Mr. Lincoln's own lips again and again, while he was preparing the studies for his great painting of that memorable Cabinet meeting.

Guillotined—Expiation After Twenty Years.

On the 9th of November the people of La Chenette, in the French Department of La Gironde, witnessed the execution of Valentine Fouloir, for the murder of his sister, Annie Marie Fouloir, killed in 1852. Fouloir lived with her at La Chenette for twenty-six years. Quite wealthy, she had been envied by him, as he was of dissipated habits. One day, being under the influence of liquor, he beat her until she seemed dead, and then appropriating what money and valuables he found in the house, he ran away to South America. His victim, however, told, before expiring, who her assassin was. The assassin went to Rio Janeiro, thence to Valparaiso, where, under an assumed name, he opened a dry goods store. In 1865 he was worth several hundred thousand dollars. He married a beautiful Peruvian lady and was naturalized. In 1872 Fouloir, who then called himself Irnoix, felt a desire to revisit France. He took his young wife and child to Paris, where remained for several months. He then went to Bordeaux, where he was recognized by an old acquaintance. When Fouloir pretended not to know him him he informed the police. Fouloir was taken in chains to La Chenette, where he was identified by a large number of those who had formerly known him. His means, however, enabled him to stave off his trial until the 4th of June last. On that day he was sentenced to be guilotined. Fouloir cried like a child, and that night made an unsuccessful attempt at self-destruction. At 7 o'clock in the morning Fouloir was led out to the scaffold. Among the spectators was his young wife. Fouloir begged permission to embrace his wife a last time. "No, no," said the headsman, gruffly, "you can do nothing of the kind. You must die now. Step upon the plank." Fouloir shrieked "My poor wife! My poor wife!" The executioner cursed him aloud, and had considerable difficulty in tying him to the plank. He then turned it over, and lowered the oblique knife, which struck the neck of the doomed man with a dull thud. At the same time Fouloir's wife uttered a terrible shriek and fainted away. The tragedy was over.

Internal Revenue—What It Costs to Collect It.

Concealed Weapons.

"There is no knowing what may turn up," especially in a horse-hair sofa. In a small attic, says a Vienna journal, lived the family of a tailor who had died some weeks since in the greatest poverty and misery. The widow could not earn enough to support herself and her children, and was obliged to sell her fur. In her garret stood an old sofa, which had been given to her at her marriage by a relation long since dead. At length even this valued heirloom had to go to the brokers. Two porters accordingly attempted to remove the sofa, but were unable to do so. The broker, who naturally feared that his bargain was stuffed with stone instead of horse-hair, insisted on immediate investigation. To the surprise of all persons, the removal of a thick coating of the latter material brought to light about forty muskets, of the existence of which the owner of the sofa had no idea. Each musket was wrapped in a poster containing an invitation to join in the students' legion, and bearing date "October 14, 1848." An animated controversy is now in progress between the broker and the tailor's widow regarding the ownership of the property thus unexpectedly discovered.

Atlantic-Pacific.

Capt. Jones of the smaller Yellowstone expedition, while at Two Ocean pass, a short distance south of Yellowstone lake, confirmed a most important discovery. It had been reported a small stream of water which, close to the pass, was split in two by a small peninsula, one branch following the Yellowstone and Missouri to the Gulf, the other making its way into the Snake river, and thence to the Pacific.

Useful Suggestions.

FILTER FOR CISTERN WATER.—Perforate the bottom of a wooden box with a number of small holes; place inside a piece of flannel, cover with coarsely-powdered charcoal, over this coarse river sand, and on this small pieces of sandstone.

HARDENING WOOD FOR PULLEYS.—After a wooden pulley is turned and rubbed smooth, boil it for about eight minutes in olive oil; then allow it to dry, after which it will ultimately become almost as hard as copper.

IT is not generally known that the leaves of geranium are an excellent application for cuts where the skin is rubbed off, and other wounds of that kind. One or two leaves must be bruised and applied to the part, and the wound will be cicatrized in a short time.

FOR chapped hands use freely of glycerine and good olive oil in the proportion of two parts of the former to four of the latter; after this has been well rubbed into the hands and allowed to remain for a little time, and the hands subsequently washed with castile soap and tepid water, we recommend the belladonna and collodian flexible to be painted, and the protective film allowed permanently to remain.

DR. SIMON, a physician of Lorraine, gives a new cure for boils, by treating them with camphorated alcohol. As soon as the culminating point of a boil makes its appearance he puts a little of the liquid in a saucer, and dipping the ends of his little fingers with it, rubs the inflamed surface, especially the central part, repeating the operation eight or ten times for about half a minute. He then allows the surface to dry, placing over it a slight coating of camphorated olive oil. He says that four such applications will, in almost all cases, cause boils to dry up and disappear. The application should be made morning, noon, and evening.

AMMONIA is excellent for cleaning paint, silver and glass; a teaspoonful put into water produces a wonderful effect. Wherever there is grease to remove, ammonia is efficacious. Consequently it is excellent for cleaning hair brushes. Indeed, it is an almost indispensible toilet article. A teaspoonful in a basin of water makes a refreshing bath, which removes all disagreeable odors. Plants flourish luxuriantly under the administration of doses of ammonia. A few drops added to a pint of water is a harmless stimulant to their growth, when not repeated oftener than once a week. Ammonia should always be kept in a bottle with a glass stopper, and the concentrated spirits should be used with care.

A HEARTH AND HOME correspondent says linen that is placed immediately after being ironed near the stove or in the hot sun is stiffer when dry than if it is permitted to dry slowly. It is a good plan to lay collars and small articles on a waiter, and then set them on a kettle or other support on the stove till they are quite dry. Sometimes the iron will stick in a manner perfectly unaccountable; if it is rubbed on a board on which fine salt has been sprinkled, and then passed over a brown paper with wax in its folds, the sticking propensities will be checked. A bowl of clear water and a clean old linen is useful to remove any specks the linen may acquire before or while being ironed.

PERPETUAL PASTE.—Dissolve a teaspoonful of alum in a quart of water. When cold, stir in as much flour as will give it the consistency of thick cream, being particular to beat up all the lumps; stir in as much powdered resin as will lay on a dime, and throw in half a dozen cloves to give it a pleasant odor. Have on the fire a teacup of boiling water, pour the flour mixture into it, stirring well at the time. In a few minutes it will be of the consistency of mush. Pour it into an earthen or china vessel; let it cool; lay a cover on, and put in a cool place. When needed for use, take out a portion and soften it with warmwater. Paste thus made will last twelve months. It is better than gum, as it does not gloss the paper, and can be written on.

Cushing's Wit.

Caleb Cushing, the new Minister to Spain, has wit as well as wisdom. Once upon a time—it must have been many years ago—Miss Hannah F. Gould wrote and sent him the following epitaph:

> Lie aside, all ye dead,
> For in the next bed
> Reposes the body of Cushing,
> Who elbowed his way
> Through the world, as they say,
> And perhaps, now he's dead,
> He'll be pushing.

Mr. Cushing, who is a poet as well as a lawyer, reported as follows:

> Here lies one whose wit,
> Without wounding, could hit,
> May the turf lie lightly above her;
> She has sent every beau
> To the regions below,
> And gone down herself for a lover.

A NASHVILLE printer recently had some very bad manuscript copy to set up. Every word needed close study before its meaning could be guessed at, but at length two or three words came in succession, which it was quite impossible to decipher. All hands in the office tried and failed, until at length the printer, in despair, set up "copy books ten cents each," and continued the work, afterward sending the proof to the author for correction. The hint was taken, and the author employed an amanuensis.

RAT POISON.—The following method of preparing poison for rats is said to be more effectual than moistening grain with a solution of strychnine: Make a clear solution of arsenite of potash, by boiling in a large iron kettle one part of white arsenic, one of carbonate of potash, and 25 of water, stirring the whole well together; add 25 parts of water, and introduce, while warm, 50 parts of barley, wheat, or oats, stirring frequently during 24 to 36 hours; then take the grain and stir it with a paddle until it appears dry externally. For use in the house it may be advisable to color the grain by adding 1-500 part of liquid fuchsin. Clean the kettle after use by scouring with lime. In most cities, however, the arsenite of potash can be obtained ready made, and thus the trouble and danger of preparation is saved.

CORN-FED BILL.

Dicktated to all der Grangers.

BY CARL PRETZEL.

Der mid-day sun for fifty years had played der dece mit old Bill's face,
Und turned der tint from red to brown, till no white meat vast left a trace.
His hands vas brown, und der great big lines, vat plowed deep in der shkin,
Vas told der years of toil und work, where all his life had been.

His frame dond vas vat it yoost to bin, tall, and straight und shtout,
But had shlowfully doubled itself intoo, while der seasons vas playin out.
His kneeses too, vas gittin weak, und his legs could hardly walk,
Und his jaws vas loosen all his tooths, und he gummed it in his talk.

But of the outside in of his manly breast, some varm impulses grow,
Und dhey vas bloom, und shprout, und shmell, vherefer he vas go.
Der nerfy herfe, mitin his heart, vas shtrong and steady shtill,
Nix grief, nix care, could tumble down der soul of Corn-fed Bill.

It vas pooty tuff to shtifle grief, ven he lookt out mit his eyes
Und saw from efery hilly top, some odder moundain rise,
Und all dhroo life dose hills vas dhere, to plock der old man's vay,
Und no sooner qwick he climb der one, der odder befront him lay.

But you see dem acres of farmin land; vell, for efery herb dhey shprout,
More as sexty trops of vasser shweat from old Bill's brow come out.
You vas saw der proofs in der golden corn, in der meddow of der field,
You vas saw der proofs in der orchard lot und in der fruit dhey yield.

Old Bill vas a farmer mans for sure, honest, shqware und true,
Und would ask of you yoost vat vas recht, und expect der same of you.
But make him aggravation once, by tam(he dond shtood dot,
He knock you down so higher a kite, while you shtand upon der shpot.

He vas lifed to been a green old age, und had shouldered troubles sore,
He vas shtruggled hard to fite der wolf und keep him out his door.
But der more he worked, them wolfses yelled, mit mouts all open wide,
To shtuff dheir insife of dheir outside in, mit der farmer's beef und hide.

Aldough dem animals vas der fattest kind, shtill dheir shdomachs dond get full,
Dhey keeb expanding as dhey eat, und on der Granger pull.
Dhey eat der meats of der bodadoe, corn, der barley, und der oat,
Und only leaf der husbandman vat he wouldn'd gif a shoat.

Dot made old Bill git some dander ub; so he shwore a heafy shwore,
Und allowed he wouldn't plant annodder seed, or grow him notting more,
Der old farm might go to grass, und he'd shiarf for a load of wood
Before he'd shwet him a single hair for odder feller's good.

Now dis vas dose vat old Bill preach, und practice, too, neat year,
Und on his farm dhere vas notting raised—not efen a dishturbance dhere.
He wouldn't allow old mudder earth to grow out a single seed—
Not efen enuff for der brindle cow, nor his odder chicken reed.

Vell, der wolfses comed, as dhey had done a goot many times before,
To shdeal der fruits of der farmer's land, und rob him of his shdore.
But dose vat shdruck for old Bill's farm—vell, der shdory vas easy said,
Dhey only found some old post-holes und wagon-tracks instead.

MORALE.

Dose wolfses vas dem monobolies vat shdeal der farmer's shduff,
To fill ub bloated arishtocrats, vot nefer could got enuff;
But corn-fed Bill vas make em sing a song dot made 'em tanz,
Und deached 'em some new deories bout railroads und der banks.
Und ofer dhey don'd look pooty gwick out, der Grangers git ub dheir backs,
Und only feed 'em mit old post-holes und empdy wagon-tracks.

IOWA GRANGERS.

Their Probable Influence in Legislation—The Question of Regulating Railroad Tariffs—Grange Reading-Rooms and Co-Operative Stores—Etc., Etc.

[From Our Regular Correspondent.]

DES MOINES, IOWA, Jan. 20.—Without doubt the uprising of the agricultural masses throughout the State will to a large extent direct legislation upon many subjects during the present session of the Legislature. Already suggestions in large numbers begin to find their way to the Assembly, and Granges and County Councils are expressing themselves as to what special topic they wish taken up.

In Jasper county, for instance, the County Council recently adopted a series of resolutions, some of which are excellent. The Legislature, of course, will be glad to have their attention thus called to matters that they otherwise might overlook. One of the resolutions was a request to their Senators and Representatives in the Assembly to use their influence and exertions to have a law enacted that will provide under suitable penalties for the simultaneous destruction of the pocket-gopher in all parts of the State.

This is a small matter for legislation perhaps, and yet it is of the highest importance. The gopher annually destroys a large number of fruit-trees and vineyards, spoils lawns, meadows and growing crops, and is in general such a nuisance that to get rid of the little pest would be a godsend to the farming community. Another of the same resolutions urges upon the Legislature the importance of passing a law requiring all State and county officers to let to the lowest responsible bidder all printing necessary to be done in fulfillment of law and in the transaction of public business. As to the expediency or wisdom of this measure, the writer does not profess to know. It will undoubtedly be brought up this winter. But there will be no disagreement in any party with the aforesaid Council when they request their Senator and Representative to use their influence, votes and all possible and reasonable exertions to press upon both houses of the General Assembly the propriety and absolute necessity of reform and retrenchment in the transaction of the people's business in all of its departments, and the absolute necessity of diminishing and materially lessening taxation.

The question of regulating railroad traffic stands prominently above all other subjects. Just what direction it will take, or shape it will assume, can not now be conjectured with any certainty. The most of the Patrons with whom your correspondent has had any conversation are quite moderate in their demands and yet very firm that something must be done. The subject of railroad legislation is one that is attended with very grave difficulties, a fact that Patrons are well aware of. No Patron or farmer desires the passage of a railroad tariff too low to warrant a railroad company in keeping up their line in good order, because no one knows better than do they, what elements of prosperity railroads are to a community or State. And yet there is a very settled feeling among the Patrons of Iowa that these corporations have grown too burdensome to be longer endured without legislative enactments to restrain their charges. It may, perhaps, be safely predicted that a maximum freight and passenger tariff will be enacted and other regulations passed specially defining their rights and responsibilities.

Co-operative stores and associations at the present time seem to be spreading among the Patrons throughout the State with a great deal of favor.

Union county has just established an association at Afton for the transaction of business. They have engaged a competent storekeeper, who is busily engaged in merchandising for the Patrons and in shipping their products to market. The prospects of success, under the cash system, are truly flattering. Farm implements may be sold on commission by order of the Council.

Another has been established at Ames, in Story county, for two months. At their last monthly meeting the report of the Examining Committee showed a remarkable state of prosperity in all the affairs of the association. The sales of the store during the first month amounted to one-eighth more than the capital stock. A strict cash business, both in buying and selling, has been done. The report shows that every dollar's worth of goods in the store had been paid for, and that there was $114 in cash on hand.

It was unanimously voted that a Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance Company should be formed, and $7,500 of stock was subscribed on the spot, and much more pledged.

At Ames the Grange has established a literary society reading-room open to the public. The society meets weekly for debate, essays, etc. The reading-room is open daily, and has on file seven dailies, nineteen weeklies, and twelve monthlies. The Patrons' hall is supplied with pictures, organ, anteroom, etc. The social influences of such appendages to Granges whenever it is possible can scarcely be overestimated.

PLOW BOY.

The Wisconsin Reformers.

The entree of the new Independent administration in Wisconsin, and the harmonious organization of the Legislature, have, so far, disappointed a good many prophets of evil.

Instead of giving encouragement to the sinister hopes of the professional politicians that have sought to foment dissensions among them, the Wisconsin Independents appear to realize fully the great responsibility which the situation imposes on them. "Permit me to impress it upon you that the position we occupy is a position of great responsibility," said Speaker Bouck, on taking the chair in the popular assembly. "Let me impress on your minds that we and we alone are responsible for the legislation of this body." Still more significant are the grand words which Governor Taylor addresses to the representatives of the Independent party, to whose hands are now, for the first time, committed the well-being of the commonwealth. "The influences of your action and example," he says, "are not wholly limited to your immediate constituency, but in an important degree possess a national aspect. It is for us to determine whether the purposes of government are superior to the purposes of party; whether honesty and intelligence or personal avarice and importunity constitute qualifications for office; whether Legislatures shall intelligently reflect the popular will or become the instruments of the impertinent, the importunate, the mercenary, and the corrupt political organizations. It is true that political organizations are necessary to the triumph of right over wrong, but let us also remember that development and progress are ordained by the law of God; that all parties that are blind to this decree must decay and die; that a political partisanship which renders the public good subservient to the success of party, or which requires electors, under any circumstances, to elevate vice and ignorance to public station as a party obligation, is to be deplored and condemned; and that the greatest reward of political service is the consciousness of having faithfully discharged a public duty. No political party which fails to recognize these principles of action is worthy of toleration."

The utterance of our public men from the foundation of the republic to the present time give expression to no sentiments more lofty, or more worthy to be taken as the guide of our political activities. They are sentiments which place William R. Taylor by the side of Newton Booth, as among the new men most worthy to be standard bearers in the onward march of the Independent power. The Wisconsin Independents are to be congratulated for having found such a leader, and for having placed at the front other citizens whose convictions and sympathies are in like manner wholly and unreservedly given to the Indpendent cause.—Chicago Times.

Farmers Storing Their Own Grain.

The following letter written by a farmer is taken from the Western Farm Journal:

We've heard of several instances of the Patrons of Husbandry combining together and building warehouses for their grain upon railroad tracks, each farmer owning his own bin, instead of building grain bins on their farms. There is a house of this kind at Blairstown, Benton county, Iowa, which has one hundred stockholders, in successful operation; and the system gives good satisfaction to all parties. There is another house of this kind in process of erection at Bonaparte, Van Buren county, Iowa, and quite a number in Illinois—all modeled after a house built on a cheap plan, in Peoria, Ill., by Chase & Co., of that city. The advantages accruing to the farmer in this system are:

1. The bins, built in large structures together, are much cheaper than those built singly on the farm.

2. The farmers can haul their grain at their leisure when they have good roads, and are not rushed in a busy season, and bad roads, to market their grain.

3. The grain can be hauled directly from the thrashing machine and thrown into the bin in the warehouse, and cleaned by horse-power with improved cleaners, both for grain and grass seeds, at a much less expense than when it is cleaned in the common fanning mill by hand.

4. The grain is much safer stored in the warehouses, and is less liable to damage by dampness or heating.

5. The farmer is not compelled to sell his grain till he gets a good price for it, but can deliver his grain to the elevator and get an elevator receipt for it, and use his receipt as collateral to raise money at the banks. These receipts are a favorite collateral with all bankers, and will command money over all other securities.

The Farmers and the Pork-Packers.

[From the Industrial Age.]

The last Rural World has the following article about the effect of the resolutions at the Farmers' Convention, in this city, last fall, in relation to selling pork at less than $5 per hundred weight. Some of the faint-hearted newspaper friends of the farmers, and all of their enemies, were much distressed for them—they feared the farmers were going to ruin themselves. There are a few prominent newspapers, which, whenever the farmers meet, or pass resolutions without their consent, seem intensely apprehensive they are going to run away with themselves, and smash up things generally. Thus far the farmers have made but few mistakes; and their proceedings have resulted much at variance with the apprehensions of timid friends or open enemies:

"ONE THING THE GRANGERS HAVE DONE.—They have broken the power and combinations of the pork-packers. They started out the past fall as they did the fall before, to buy pork at about three dollars—expecting again to get double the price when they sold it as they did last year. But the Grangers were too sharp for them this time. They said, rather than sell at these low figures we will pack our own pork. So all over the West the Grangers combined, determined to pack unless they could get what their pork was honestly worth. Pork came in slow, not fast enough to meet the demands of the packers. The Grangers went to putting up their own pork. The packers became alarmed and thought they had better make smaller profits, and so commenced offering higher prices. The Grangers were firm, resolute, and insisted on fair prices, and the packers were compelled to pay them. The result is, pork to-day is worth from $4.25 to $5.75 per hundred, instead of $3.

"The farmers have triumphed over the combinations to wrong them. Millions more of dollars have been saved to them than otherwise would have been. They needed the money and have got it. They were entitled to it, and have got only what was their due. The farmers can combine on a larger and grander scale than any other class, when it becomes necessary."

Tom Scott's Latest Request.

Tom Scott says that all he asks the Government at Washington to do for him is to guarantee the payment of the interest on the bonds of the Texas Pacific railway swindle! What more could any reasonable spendthrift ask his "governor" to do for him than to guarantee the payment of interest on all his gambling, swindling, horse-racing, drinking, carousing, and loose-female liabilities? Why should the Washington Government guarantee Tom Scott's liabilities any more than any other man's liabilities? Probably there are ten thousand farmers in Illinois whose farms are under mortgage. If Tom Scott may ask the Washington Government to guarantee the payment of interest on his debts, why may not these Illinois farmers ask the Washington Government to guarantee the payment of interest on their debts? Who is Tom Scott that he may get his paper indorsed by the Washington Government, while other people cannot get the Washington Government for indorser? Do the people own this country, or does Tom Scott own it? Let us have a direct answer to a plain question.—Chicago Times.

THE cry for a new party in South Carolina gathers strength. Its platform will be built of two planks; Old party ties, race and color ought to be disregarded; the State ought to be governed honestly. It is proposed to organize "granges" open to all honest men; to pledge the members not to accept office for two years, in order that demagogues may be kept away; to raise a fund by contribution from each person in proportion to his State tax; and to employ the best legal talent in the prosecution of all dishonest State officials. That such a programme can be hopefully proposed in South Carolina shows the strength of the national discontent with the survivor of the two old parties. The Anti-Monopoly party is forming precisely as the Whigs and Republicans did—by the spontaneous and independent movement of the people of the different States. Like them, it will some day control the country. Like them, when its work is done, it will die.—Chicago Tribune.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.—The New Haven Union well says:

"The truth is just here: there is not an intelligent man living that believes labor is properly adjusted. Every man knows in his heart that a system of social or political economy which puts the wealth of the country into the hands of a few, and allows that few to rob labor and create paupers, is contrary to the teachings of divine law and the genius of our Government. Every human being endowed with a conscience is aware that something is wrong."

AUBURN LIVERY

SALE STABLE!
F. D. RYAN Pro

Having on hand everything in the line of Carriages, Buggies, Wagons, etc
together with a number of first-class Livery horses respectfully solicits the patronage of the public promising to use my best endeavors to give general satisfaction.

WRONGFULLY ACCUSED.

It has been many long days since then, yet I remember it all, just as though it had occurred yesterday.

I was a carpenter, the foreman of a large establishment, and as such possessed the entire confidence of my employer, who, by the way, had been an old school mate of mine.

One day he called me into his office to look at some rare coins he had just purchased.

"Here," said he, placing in my hand a heavy gold piece, tis one which is worth more than all the rest put together. It is a great curiosity. I paid $200 for it, and consider it cheap at that. I could easily double my money in selling it; and so you see, Harvey, it is a good investment.

'No doubt it is,' said I, 'though it seems a large sum to have lie idle.'

I breathed an involuntary sigh as I laid the coin down on the desk, for $200 would have seemed a fortune to me just then.

The severe illness of my wife and one of my children, and the death of another, made serious inroads on my purse, and it had required the utmost economy to keep myself free from debt; nay, I had been obliged to draw from the bank the small sums, which besides my salary, was all I possessed of worldly treasurers. Thinking of this, I laid the coin down with a sigh, and turned away to attend to my duties.

The next morning I was again summoned into the office, but this time I met with no friendly greeting as usual.

'Harvey,' said my employer, abruptly; 'that coin we were looking at has disappeared. I have made a thorough search, but it is not to be found. It has been carried away by some one. You alone saw or knew of it, and—'

He paused and looked significantly into my face. I finished the sentence for him, the hot blood dying my cheek and brow as I spoke.

'You mean, therefore, that I took it—!'

'What else can I think? The coin was here; you alone saw it. I cannot recall having seen it since it was in your hands. You are in need of money; you have told me that yourself. It was a great temptation, and I forgive you because of our old friendship, but I cannot retain you in my employ. Here is the salary due you.'

'Very well,' said I, with forced calmness, 'so be it. Since you have so poor an opinion of me after years of faithful service, I shall not stop to defend myself.'

Then I took the money he had laid upon the desk, and went out from his presence a well nigh broken-hearted man.

But for the tender love of my wife, I doubt not but that I would have burried my sorrrws in the grave of a suicide.

Supported by that love, however, and the consciousness of my own innocence, I took fresh courage, and sat resolutely to work to find a new employer.

But powerful is the breath of slander; turn which way I might, I ever found that the story of my dismissal for theft had preceeded me, and my application for employment uniformly met with a refusal.

Time went on; piece by piece of our furniture and every spare article of clothing found its way to the pawnbrokers, until at length even this poor resource failed us, and my children cried in vain for food.

Yet I did not sit down in despair; I could not afford to do so; the life or death of all I loved on earth depended on my exertions—and so turning away from my home with a heavy heart, I once more set out on the weary search for work.

All in vain! Refusal after refusal met my entreaties for employment, and I was turning home with a listless step when passing an immense church I was attracted by a group of men at the base.

Impelled by some strange impulse, I approached and mingled with them. A workman was standing near by, looking up at the great steeple, which towered aloft some 250 feet above them, while a gentleman, evidently an architect, was addressing him in earnest language, and at the same time pointing to the golden cross at the summit of the spire.

'I tell you,' he exclaimed, as I drew near, 'it must and can be done. The cross must be taken down, or the first heavy gale will send it down into the street and lives will be lost. Coward, is this the way you back out of a job after engaging to do it?'

'I didn't know the spire was so high up there. Do it yourself if you want it done.'

'I would if I were able,' said the architect. 'But go if you will, let it be. My honor is pledged to have it done at any price—and I can find a braver man than you to do it.'

The carpenter walked away with a dogged, slouching step, and the gentleman was about to move away also, when I stepped forward.

'What is it you want done, sir?' I asked. 'I am a carpenter; perhaps I can do it.'

He turned eagerly towards me.

'I will make it worth your while. Take down that cross and I will pay you a hundred dollars. You will have to ascend those ornamental blocks, and I tell you candidly they are not to be depended on; they must be weak and rotten for they have been there for years.'

I looked at the spire, it was square at the base and tapered to a sharp point, while along each angle were nailed small gilded blocks of wood.

'It's a dangerous place to work,' I said, 'and there will be even more peril in descending than ascending. Suppose I succeed in moving the cross and then—'

'If any accident happens to you, my brave fellow, the money shall be paid to your family. I promise you that. Give me your address.'

'Here it is,' I said, 'and as you value your soul keep your word with me. My wife and children are starving, or I would not attempt this work. If I die they can live on the hundred dollars for awhile until my sick wife recovers her strength.'

'I'll make it a hundred and fifty!' exclaimed the architect, 'and may God protect you! If I had the skill necessary to ascend that steeple, I would ask no man to risk his life there. But come and keep a steady hand and eye.'

I followed him into the church, then up into the spire, until we paused before a narrow window. This was the point from which I must start on the perilous feat I had undertaken.

Casting a single glance at the people in the street below—mere specks in the distance—I reached out from the window, and grasping one of the ornamental blocks, swung myself out upon the spire.

For an instant my courage faltered, but the remembrance of my starving family came to my aid, and with a silent prayer for protection and success, I placed my hand upon the next block above my head and clambered up.

From block to block I went, steadily and cautiously, try each one ere I trusted my weight upon it.

Two-thirds of the space had been passed, when suddenly the block that supported me moved—gave way. Oh heavens! Never, though I should live to see a hundred years, shall I cease to shudder at the recollection of that terrible moment. Yet even in the midst of my agony, as I felt myself slipping backward, I did not for one second lose my presence of mind.

It seemed to me that never before had my senses been so preternaturally acute as then, when a horrible death seemed inevitable.

Down, down I slipped, grasping at each block as I passed it by, until at length my fearful course was arrested, and then, while my head reeled with the sudden reaction, a great shout came from the people below.

'Come down, come down!' called the architect from the window; half the sum shall be yours for the risk you have run. Don't try again. Come down.'

But no! more than ever was I determined to succeed. I was not one to give up after having undertaken a difficult task.

Coolly, but cautiously, I commenced the ascent once more, first seeking in vain to reach across to the next row of blocks, for I did not care to trust myself again on that which had proved so treacherous. This I was compelled to do, however, until the space between the angles became sufficiently small to allow me to swing across. Accomplishing my purpose at length, I went up more rapidly, carefully testing each block as I proceeded.

Ere long I reached the cross, and there I paused to rest, looking down from the dizzy height with a coolness that even then astonished me.

A few strokes with a light hatchet that the architect had hung at my back and piece by piece the rotten cross fell to the ground.

My work was done, and as the last fragment disappeared I found a sad pleasure in the thought that should I never reach the ground alive, my dear ones would have ample means to supply their wants until my wife could obtain employment.

Steadily and cautiously I lowered myself from block to block, and at length reached the spire window amid the cheers of those assembled in the street.

Inside the steeple the architect placed a roll of bank notes in my hand.

'You have well earned the money,' he said. 'It does me good to see a man with so much nerve—but—bless me! what is the matter with your hair? It was black before you made the ascent, now it is grey.'

And so it was. That moment of intense agony, while slipping helplessly downward, had blanched my hair until it appeared like that of an old man. The work of years had been done in an instant.

Entering the bare, cheerless room, which was now all I called my home, I found a visitor awaiting me—my late employer.

'Harvey,' said he, extending his hand, 'I have done you a great wrong. It cost me a terrible pang to believe in your guilt, but circumstances were so strongly against you that I was forced to believe it. I have found the coin, Harvey; it slipped under the secret drawer in my desk. Can you forgive me, my dear old friend?'

My heart was too full to speak, I silently pressed his hand.

I will undo the wrong I have done. All the world shall know that I have accused you unjustly, not only through my words, but through my actions, too. You must be my partner, Harvey. If you refuse I shall feel that you have not forgiven me.

I did not refuse. Indeed I thankfully accepted the offer which my friend so generously made, knowing that no surer method could have been devised to silence forever the tongue of slander, and free my name from the unmerited reproach which had of late rested on it.

Unmerited prosperity has attended my steps ever since that eventful day, but neither prosperity nor wealth can efface its memory from my heart, nor restore my withered locks to their own raven hue.

The Washington Tammany.

The reports concerning the doings of the Washington Tammany Ring are becoming worse and worse, and there is little doubt in the minds of the careful and prudent part of the community there that the final exposure will prove fully as criminal conduct as that of the New York Ring, whose leader is now expiating his crimes in the penitentiary.

The published reports of the Board of Public Works show that all the paving, guttering and sewering which has been done under the auspices of the Board, are of the most worthless kind. One-fifth of the proposed work has been done at a cost of forty millions of dollars and is already in such a dilapidated condition as to require renewal. The whole cost of the improvements is put down at two hundred milion dollars.

Such profligacy, corruption and stealing as is going on under the management of the Washington Ring would not be endured a day longer, but for the support it receives from the head center of the "great Republican party," which we are told, possesses all the education and wealth of the country, and is founded on a great moral idea!

Nothing but an entire change of the official list in Washington, from Grant to scavenger, will effect reform, and the sooner the people accomplish it the better it will be for all the parties concerned.

The number of convicts in the Northern Indiana Prison who can read and write is 266; who can read only, 62; who can neither read nor write, 31. The number of temperate habits, 121; of moderate habits, 68; of intemperate habits, 179. The number who are single is 216; who are married, 128; who are widowers, 24.

The names of counties where prisoners were convicted and the number from each are as follows: Adams, 2; Allen, 38; Benton, 2; Blackford, 2; Boon, 9; Carroll, 4; Cass, 5; Clay, 1; Clinton, 6; Delaware, 5; DeKalb, 3; Elkhart, 10; Fountain, 9; Fulton, 4; Grant, 11; Hamilton, 6; Howard, 1; Jasper, 1; Jay, 1; Kosciusko, 5; Lagrange, 4; Laporte, 14; Madison, 4; Marion, 149; Marshall, 2; Miami, 1; Montgomery, 4; Noble, 2; Porter, 2; Pulaski, 1; Randolph, 8; St. Joseph, 9; Steuben, 3; Tippecanoe, 22; Tipton, 2; U. S. C. Court, 1; Wabash, 5; Warren, 1; Whitley, 1. Total 368.

CICELY.

Alkali Station.

BY BRET HARTE.

Cicely says you're a poet! maybe; I ain't much on rhyme:
I reckon you'd give me a hundred, and beat me every time.
Poetry!—that's the way some chaps put up an idea,
But I takes mine "straight without sugar," and that's what's the matter with me.

Poetry!—just look round you—alkali, rock and sage;
Sage-brush, rock and alkali; ain't it a pretty page?
Sun in the East at morning, sun in the West at night,
And the shadow of this yer station the on'y thing moves in sight.

Poetry! Well, no, Polly! Polly, run to your mam!
Run right away, my pooty! By-bye! Aint she a lamb?
Poetry! That reminds me o' suthin' right in that suit;
Jest shet that door, thar, will yer! for Cicely's ears is cute.

Ye noted Polly, the baby? A month afore she was born,
Cicely (Our old woman) was moody-like and forlorn;
Out of her head and crazy, and talked of flowers and trees;
Family man yourself, sir? Well, you know what a woman be's.

Narvous she was and restless—said that she couldn't stay,
Stay—and the nearest woman seventeen miles away.
But I fixed it up with the doctor, and he said he would be on hand;
And I kinder stuck by the shanty, and fenced in that bit o' land.

One night—one tenth of October—I woke with a chill and a fright,
For the door it was standing open, and Cicely warnt in sight;
But a note was pinned on the blanket, which it said that she "couldn't stay,"
But had gone to visit her neighbor—seventeen miles away!

When and how she stampeded, I didn't wait for to see,
For out in the road, next minit, I started as wild as she;
Running first this way and that way, like a hound that is off the scent,
For there warnt no track in the darkness to tell me the way she went.

I've had some mighty mean moments afore I kem to this spot—
Lost on the plains in '50, drownded almost, and shot;
But out on this alkali desert, a hunting a crazy wife,
Was ra'ly as onsatisfactory as anything in my life.

"Cicely! Cicely! Cicely!" I called and I held my breath;
And "Cicely!" came from the canyon—and all was still as death.
And "Cicely! Cicely! Cicely!" came from the rocks below;
And jest but a whisper of "Cicely!" down from them peaks of snow.

I aint what you call religious; but I jest looked up to the sky,
And—this yer's to what I'm comin', and maybe yo think I lie,
But up away to the east'ard, yaller and big and far,
I saw of a suddint rising, the singlerest kind of star.

Big and yaller and dancing, it seemed to beckon to me;
Yaller and big and dancing, such as you never see;
Big and yaller and dancing, I never saw such a star;
And I thought of them harps in the Bible, and I went for it then and thar.

Over the brush and bowlders I stumbled and pushed ahead;
Keeping the star afore me, I went wherever it led.
I might hev been for an hour, when suddent and peart and nigh,
Out of the yearth afore me thar riz up a baby's cry.

Listen! thar's the same music; but they are stronger now
Than the day I packed her and her mother—I'm durned if I jest know how,
But the doctor kem the next minnit; and the joke 'o the whole thing is
That Cis never knew what happened from that very night to this!

But Cicely says you're a poet and maybe you might some day,
Just sling her a rhyme 'bout a baby that was born in a curious way.
And see what she says; and, old fellow, when you speak of the star, don't tell
As how 'twas the doctor's lantern—for maybe 'twont sound so well.

A LONDON LEGEND.

Some years ago, a gentleman, whom we will call Col. Somerville, was desirous of buying a house in the west end of London, and passing one day through a well-known square, he observed a house to be sold which seemed to him, as far as outside appearances and situations were concerned, to be the very thing he wanted. The printed bill referred him to a firm of estate agents, in the city, and to them he at once went, though he could not help entertaining a misgiving that the price would be exorbitantly high and beyond his means. No harm, however, could be done, by simple inquiry. He was agreeably astonished to find that the sum demanded was only four thousand pounds. Not being a commercial man, he could not help expressing his astonishment at the small sum demanded, and naively inquired if the mansion was very much out of repair. The representative of the firm replied unhesitatingly that the house was in very good repair, and would not require more than the usual outlay upon decoration. The Colonel pressed his inquiries, and as he seemed to be a likely and desirable purchaser, he was soon informed of the circumstances under which the house in question was to be sold. It belonged to a queer old gentleman, who lived in Clerkenwell, and who had died intestate, and the sale was ordered by his next of kin, who had been found with some difficulty. The old gentleman had died, strangely enough, in the very act of drawing up his will. He had just penned the words "and I desire that my house in —— square should be ——" when some kind of a fit seized him, and he was discovered the next morning by his housekeeper, dead in his chair. Now, the next of kin was found in Australia or some remote colony, and was anxious to realize the property as quickly as possible. The house in —— square had been uninhabited for years. There was not a scrap of furniture in it; but it had been scrupulously cared for and kept clean by an elderly deaf woman, who did not live in it, but used to go to it every morning and spend almost all day there, and preserved it in such a condition that the owner might have furnished it at any time, and came to live there without any sense of discomfort which would ordinarily arise from residing in a house which had not been inhabited for a long time. It was well known, I may add, that the elderly care-taker never slept there. The Colonel went to view the house. He found that he had not been deceived by external appearances, or by the description of the accommodation detailed by the agent; it was, in short, just such a house as he and his wife wanted for a town residence, and in due course the purchase was completed. As he was in no particular hurry to enter, and as Mrs. Somerville happened to be unwell at this particular time, and unable to come to London to superintend the furnishing, he contented himself with preparing a bedroom for his own use on the first floor, and another for his valet on the floor above. He retained the services of the elderly deaf woman, who appeared to be grateful for his consideration, as she alleged that the pay she received for her trouble was almost all that she had to live on. The house became the property of the Colonel at midsummer, 185–. Toward the end of July the rooms mentioned were furnished in a temporary manner for the accommodation of the Colonel, who at that time was frequently called to town on business, but it was not till the first week in August that Col. Somerville, accompanied by a valet who had been in his service about two years, actually entered as a resident. But in that house he only remained one night, and he never slept there again.

He arrived in town about midday on the Wednesday in the first week in August. The day was oppressively gloomy and dull in the country, and all London seemed to be seething in a sullen heat. He went with his valet straight to his house in —— square. The cabman took the fare offered to him without grumbling, observing (as he glanced somewhat suspiciously at the house), "This is the first time as ever I drove a gentleman, nor a lady neither, to this here 'ouse," and he went away as quickly as he could.

Col. Somerville took no notice of the remark at the time, though it came vividly to his recollection afterwards.

Having deposited his luggage and seen that his room looked tolerably comfortable, he told his servant that he intended to dine at his club and should be home about eleven. The elderly deaf woman, I should say, was in attendance.

Well, the Colonel transacted his business, dined at his club with a friend, and returned to his house shortly after 11 o'clock. His servant, a smart, active young fellow, opened the door for him, showed him to his room, asked for his orders for the morning, and, having received them, retired to his room above.

It was not in the streets as Col. Somerville drove home; hotter still in his bedroom; yet he felt scarcely any inclination to sleep. Another cigar, he thought, would soothe him into somnolency, so he accordingly lit one, and tried to amuse himself by considering how he should furnish his new house, having due regard to the exigencies of London gas and atmosphere. His cigar finished, he undressed leisurely and got into bed; the wind, such as there was, came from the south, and he heard the great clock of Westminster strike 12. By and by he heard the quarter, and then the half hour, and then he fell off into a doze, from which he was awakened by repeated knocks at his door. He called out, "Who's there?" but the answer was unintelligible, though he heard a voice in reply. He hastily lit the candle and opende the door. In the passage he found the servant half dressed, looking frightfully pale, and shivering violently from head to foot.

"Why, Warren, what on earth is the matter?" he exclaimed; "are you ill?"

"I don't quite know what is the matter," was the reply. "Please, sir, may I come in?"

"Certainly," said the Colonel, who was one of the kindest of human beings. "Come in, Warren; you must be ill."

The man entered, shaking as if an ague had seized him, and the Colonel hastily took his flask from his dressing-bag and gave him strong brandy and water. This seemed to do Warren good, and then his master asked him again what was the matter.

"I don't rightly know, sir," he answered. "I went to bed all right, and went sound asleep. But I had a bad dream. I thought a pale-faced man came into my room, although I knew I had locked the door, and he stood beside my bed, looking for all the world, sir, as if he should like to eat me; and then the air in the room became so oppressive that it seemed to weigh upon my face and head, and then this terrible shivering came over me as if I was lying out of doors in a bitter frost, though I knew at the same time how hot it was."

"Incipient fever," said the Colonel; let me feel your pulse."

The man held out his wrist, and his master felt the pulse.

"Strange," he muttered after a minute or two, "Have you ever had a malaria fever, intermittent, or that sort of thing?"

"No, sir; never that I am aware of."

"But yet you must be ill. Shall I go and fetch a doctor?"

"Oh, no, thank you sir. I feel so much better now."

Well, then, Warren, I think you had better go back to bed again."

The man became pale again instantly, and another attack of shivering seized him, and he exclaimed, almost in agony:

"Oh, no, sir—not to that room! I feel certain that I should see that white-faced man again, and feel that weight upon my face and head. Oh, sir, do let me lie here upon the floor."

The Colonel looked gravely at Warren. He had in India seen a good deal of delirium tremens, and he entertained a very strong suspicion that this was the real cause of Warren's strange behavior; and yet the man had been in his service some time, and he had never any reason to suppose that he was not thoroughly temperate and sober. So he said: "Well, you can take this blanket and lie down upon the floor, or sit up in a chair as you please. I expect you will be heartily ashamed of yourself to-morrow morning, Warren."

"I think not, sir; I shall only be most grateful to you."

So Warren rolled himself in the blanket, and Col. Somerville put out the candle and got into bed again and tried to go to sleep.

His efforts were in vain. He knew himself to be provokingly wide awake, and though he counted numberless sheep going through a gate, and resorted to all those devices which are popularly supposed to encourage sleep, he remained as wide awake as ever he had been in his life.

Everybody knows how preternaturally acute the senses are when after midnight they positively refuse to be lulled to slumber; and the Colonel felt as terribly on the alert as he had felt sometimes in the Indian mutiny. Warren had quite got over his bad dreams and indisposition, and snored in the most comfortable manner.

Suddenly some noise within the house made the Colonel start up in his bed and listen attentively. Yes—there could be no doubt about it; there was a sound of a stealthy footfall upon the stairs. He hastily lit his candle again and his gaze was turned towards the door, which he had locked after it was settled that Warren should remain. He saw the handle move.

In a flash of thought he asked himself what this could be? London thieves would never dream of running the risk of entering a house in which there was absolutely nothing to steal. To physical fear Col. Somerville was a stranger, and so he at once snatched up the short heavy poker from the fireplace, and without waiting to arouse his servant, whom he saw was sleeping heavily, he went quietly to the door, unlocked and opened it suddenly, prepared to capture the intruder. But the passage outside was vacant and silent.

Being a man of more than ordinary strength, and thoroughly accustomed to danger, he did not hesitate about continuing the search. There were only two other rooms upon this floor; these he entered, and, as they were destitute of furniture, a glance was sufficient to show him that there was no one there. Then he went up stairs, carefully examined Warren's room; then he went down stairs, walked through the drawing-room, dining-room, and study, then into the offices, but he encountered nobody. Then he proceeded to examine the doors and windows of the basement, and satisfied himself that nobody could have entered there. His examination of the lower part of the house occupied him about a quarter of an hour, and then he arrived at the conclusion that he had been the victim of his own imagination. Then he yawned and began to think that he felt really sleepy, so he ascended from the offices, thinking that he should get a few hours' rest at last. Just as he put his foot upon the first step of the stairs leading from the hall, something glittered from the floor. He stooped down to see what it was, and he picked up what appeared to be a needle of about four times the ordinary length, with a tiny steel button at one end. He examined it curiously, for he did not remember ever to have seen such an implement before. The point, he remarked, appeared to be slightly tarnished. With this, the sole result of his search, he returned to his bed-room. He entered and locked the door after him, and was about to throw off his dressing-gown, when to his intense astonishment, he found that Warren, whom he had left sleeping soundly, was gone.

He opened the door again and called loudly. No answer. He hurried up stairs to his servant's room; no trace of him there; indeed no trace of him anywhere, and Col. Somerville never saw or heard of James Warren again. He had no reason to suppose that there was any motive for his mysterious disappearance, for he had not robbed or defrauded his master in any way whatever. The next day the police examined the house thoroughly, but nothing of importance transpired. Need I add that Col. Somerville's new house was up for sale again immediately.

Three facts remain to be recorded: First, the strange-looking needle which the Colonel found was subjected to chemical inspection, and the tarnishes upon the point were pronounced to be human blood. Secondly, when the house had been for sale for about six weeks, Col. Somerville received a letter from the agents, announcing that the house was sold for the same amount that he gave for it. The Colonel being a man of strict honor, thought himself in duty bound to make the purchaser aware of all that had occurred, and hurried up to town to the agents for the purpose of procuring the name and address of this person. All that the agents could inform him was that the purchaser was a gentleman named Williams and appeared to be an American. He gave a check upon a well-known bank for the amount and it was duly honored. The only peculiarity about Mr. Williams was that he had a remarkably pale face. Thirdly, the house has never since been put up for sale, but it remains, to all appearance, untenanted, though I understand that the deaf old woman is still the care-taker.

To the lovers of mystery, I commend this story.—London Society.

A New Lincoln Anecdote.

Col. Lewis D. Campbell, under the skillful playing of a reporter's fingers, gave forth the following anecdote. He called upon President Lincoln during the war, and was kindly received with the question, "What can I do for you, Lew.?" Informing him of my wish to go with McLean to Fort Lafayette, I said I desired him to give me a permit to do so. "Is that all?—most certainly will I;" and picking up a blank card, he wrote on it in pencil:

"Allow Col. Lew. D. Campbell to enter Fort Lafayette.

"A. LINCOLN."

I read it, and thanking him said, "All right, Mr. President, as far as it goes; but I would much prefer to have you add one thing more." Taking the card again and reading it aloud, he inquired, "What more do you think necessary?" "Please add the words, 'also to come out!" Catching the idea, he stretched out his long legs, and leaning back in his chair he again laughed loud enough to be heard all over the mansion. After adding the words, which he said were very important in those days, he inquired, "Lew., why did you not remain in the army?—you ought to be there." I replied, "My health failed, and I could not have lived until now in the service; but why do you think I should have remained?" "Because," said he, "you seem to have the natural elements for successful military service. While you are disposed to push forward, you have at the same time the prudence to guard the rear and provide for a safe retreat if necessary."

THE Russian nation is the one which speaks the most languages and which speaks them the best. One may go through Germany and not hear a word of French spoken, but he will be sure to hear it when he reaches the frontier of Russia. The Russian schools and gymnasia for girls are of the highest excellence, and in some of the girls' schools in Moscow the dresses are all brown, to prevent the bad feelings which might arise from a comparison of dresses and toilets.

FARM, FIELD, AND GARDEN.

THE FARM.

The farmer's chief of the nation
The oldest of nobles is he;
How blessed beyond others his station,
From want and from envy how free!
His patent was granted in Eden,
Long ages and ages ago;
Oh, the Farmer, the Farmer forever—
Three cheers for the spade, plow, and hoe

THE Popular Science Monthly says whale oil was poured on a piece of a horse's stomach that was covered with bot-worms, and it made them let go their hold and die immediately.

THE Rural Sun recommends suspending the sheep-killing dog from the top of a pen, so that his fore-feet will be about four inches from the floor, and then letting the oldest buck in the flock exercise his bucking propensities on him. It is said to be an effectual cure.

Now that many farmers have better arrangements for wintering milch cows, they should arrange for having more fresh ones for winter. A plenty of milk, cream, and butter for winter is a luxury no good farmer should do without. A family that toils through the drudgery of the summer should have something during the winter a little better than common folks.

AN English scientist has discovered a fact important to farmers. It is that sulphite of lime appears to exercise decided influence in arresting the spread of decay in potatoes affected by the potato disease. In one experiment the salt was dusted over some tubers, partly decayed from this cause, when they were stowed away. Some months afterward the potatoes were found to have suffered no further injury.

I HAVE known persons on market-day to go out and kill twelve or fifteen fowls, and to bring them into a room where there would be half a dozen women and boys pulling a few feathers at a time, between thumb and forefinger to prevent tearing them. Now, for the benefit of such, I give our plan: Hang the fowl by the feet by a small cord; then with a small knife give one cut across the upper jaw, opposite the corners of the mouth; after the blood has stopped running a stream, place the point of the knife in the groove in the upper part of the mouth, run the blade up into the back part of the head, which will cause a quivering and twitching of the muscles. Now is your time, for every feather yields as if by magic, and there is no danger of tearing the most tender chick. Before he attempts to flap, you can have him as bare as the day he came out of the egg.—Journal of Horticulture.

COMPARISON OF BREEDS OF POULTRY.—Isaac Lynde, of Ohio, writing to the Poultry World, describes an experiment tried by him last season. At the 1st of September he took ten pullets, each of five breeds, each within a week of being six months old, and placed them in a yard forty feet square, with comfortable houses. For the next six months he kept an account of their food and egg production, with the following result:

The Dark Brahmas ate 369¼ quarts of corn, oats, and wheat screenings, laid 605 eggs, and weighed 70 pounds.

The Buff Cochins ate 406 quarts, laid 591 eggs, and weighed 73 pounds.

The Gray Dorkings ate 309¼ quarts, laid 524 eggs, and weighed 59½ pounds.

The Houdans ate 214½ quarts, laid 783 eggs, and weighed 45½ pounds.

The Leghorns ate 231½ quarts, laid 807 eggs, and weighed 36½ pounds.

It will be seen by the above comparison that the Leghorns laid the greatest number of eggs with the smallest weight.

HOGS AND CORN.—The Commercial Review publishes a table from correspondents in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Ohio, and Indiana, in regard to the number of hogs likely to be sent to market, the present condition, probable time of marketing and condition of corn crop. Of 97 points in Illinois 58 report a less number of hogs than last year, 27 about the same number, and 12 report more. The corn crop is universally reported short in Illinois from one-third to one-half. Of 58 places in Iowa 27 report fewer hogs than last year, 20 about the same and 11 more. The condition of the corn crop is about the same as in Illinois. Of 21 points in Indiana 11 report fewer hogs, 7 about the same number, and 3 more. The corn crop is better in several localities, but generally short. In Missouri 12 points report fewer hogs, 8 about the same number, and 3 more. The corn crop is short one-third to one-half. Ohio makes the best showing, 4 points reporting an increase in hogs, 15 about the same number, and 8 a decrease. The report of the corn crop shows equal to last year, except in Illinois. The condition of hogs appears about the same as at the same time last year, but many points in Illinois report them not so far advanced.

PARLOR AND KITCHEN.

PICKLE FOR HAMS.—For one hundred pounds of ham take six gallons of water, nine pounds of salt, one quart of molasses, three ounces of saltpeter, and one ounce of saleratus. When ready to smoke they can be soaked and freshened to taste, if too salt.

SPONGE CAKE.—One cup of sugar, one cup of flour, sifted, four large of five small eggs. Beat the sugar and yolks nicely together. Beat the whites to a stiff froth, add to the sugar and yolks; then stir in the flour. One teaspoonful of essence of lemon. Bake in a quick oven.

TO MAKE SHIRT-BOSOMS GLOSSY.—Dissolve three ounces of clean, powdered, white gum Arabic in one pint of water. When thoroughly dissolved, strain it through a piece of cotton cloth, and bottle for use. One tablespoonful of this gum water, added to a pint of starch, will give a beautiful smooth gloss to cotton or linen fabrics.

WASHING POWDERS.—Dissolve two pounds of soap in five and a half gallons of nearly boiling water, and to this add three large tablespoonfuls of ammonia, and one of spirits of turpentine. In this the linen is to be soaked for three hours, when it is readily cleansed, requiring but little rubbing. Ammonia does not affect linen fiber as soda does.

RICE PUDDING.—One quart of new milk, one cupful of seeded raisins, two-thirds of a cupful of rice. Keep it hot in a saucepan on the back part of the stove for two hours, or until the rice is soft enough. Then add one quart of milk, one cupful of sugar, and when cool enough, two eggs (the yolkes and whites beaten separately until they are frothy), a piece of butter the size of a walnut, and a very little salt. Mix carefully, so as not to break the rice, and bake about half or three-quarters of an hour.

CURE FOR EARACHE.—Children are sometimes afflicted with earache to an alarming extent, and there is sometimes a difficulty in obtaining an effectual remedy for the disorder. A writer in the Household says that she takes a piece of salt pork an inch or more long, and half an inch square; cut down one end to fit the ear, and insert it, taking care to have the piece too large to slip in. Tie a handkerchief to keep it in place, if the child will allow it. She also used pork for sore throat, croup and lung colds. Cut slices half an inch thick, dip in warm water, sprinkle on a little pepper, and sew on a flannel. She has used pork for earache especially, and always found it to give instant relief.

CARE OF CANARY BIRDS.—Hang the cage where the drafts do not strike the bird. Give canary and rape seed, plenty of fresh water, cuttle fish bone, and clean gravel on the bottom of the cage often. Also, give the birds fresh water to bathe in every day. After they have bathed, remove the dish, which should be shallow. The room should not be over-heated. Do not give them cake or sugar. When moulting, feed them on rape seed slightly moistened. Hard-boiled egg and crackers grated are excellent. Bed seed will kill birds. Cabbage and sweet apples are good for them, and now and then a fig. Plantain seed is also wholesome food for them, and they are extravagantly fond of it, often eating that when they reject most other kinds of food. When you go out for a walk, be sure to gather a sprig for your pet, and before frost gather and dry some for winter use. With moderate care the little songstress will repay your attention with sweet notes of joy.

THE two negro girls whose bodies are naturally united at the hips, and who were, until lately, shown in this country, are now on exhibition in Paris. They are called the Two-Headed Nightingale, and their Manager, Franconi, is getting rich with them. He brooks no artificial rivalry, and has sued the proprietor of a concert saloon who shows two girls whose jointure is effected by fastening them together tightly in a single boddice. The complaint is that the bogus curiosity injures the business of the genuine.

Old Hickory.

A correspondent of the Jackson (Miss.) News tells how Gen. Jackson got his title of Old Hickory. He says he got the story from Capt. William Allen, a near neighbor of the General, and who messed with him during the Creek war. During the campaign the soldiers were moving rapidly to surprise the Indians, and were without tents. A cold March rain came on, mingled with sleet, which lasted for several days. Gen. Jackson got a severe cold, but did not complain as he tried to sleep in a muddy bottom among his half-frozen soldiers. Capt. Allen and his brother John cut down a stout hickory tree, peeled off the bark, and made a covering for the General, who was with difficulty persuaded to crawl into it. The next morning a drunken citizen entered the camp, and seeing the tent, kicked it over. As Jackson crawled from the ruins, the toper cried, "Hello, Old Hickory! come out of your bark and jine us in a drink."

"PADDY'S VERSION OF EXCELSIOR."

'Twas growing dark so terrible fasht,
Whin through a town up the mountain there pushed
A broth of a boy, to his neck in the snow;
As he walked, his shillelah he swung to and fro,
Saying, it's till the top I am bound for to go,
Be jabers!

He looked mortal sad, and his eyes were as bright
As a fire of turf on a cowld winter night,
And divil a word that he said could ye tell
As he opened his mouth and let out a yell,
It's up to the top of the mountain I'll go,
Unless covered up wid this bothersome shnow,
Be jabers!

Through the windows he saw, as he traveled along,
The light of the candles and fires so warm;
But a big chunk of ice fell over his head;
Wid a snivel and groan, by St. Patrick, he said,
It's up till the very tip-top I will rush,
And then if it fall it's not meself it'll crush,
Be jabers!

Whist a bit, said an old man, whose head was as white
As the snow that fell down on the miserable night;
Shure, ye'll fall in the wather, me bit of a lad,
For the night is so dark and the walkin' so bad.
Bedad! he'd not light to a word that was said,
But he'd go till the top if he went on his head,
Be jabers!

A bright, buxom young girl, such as like to be kissed,
Axed him wudn't he shtop, and how could he resist:
So snapping his fingers and winking his eye,
While shmiling upon her, made his reply—
Faith I meant to kape on till I got to the top,
But as yer swate self has axed me, I may as well shtop,
Be jabers!

He shtopped all night and he shtopped all day,
And ye mustn't be axin when he did go away,
For wouldn't he be a bastely gossoon
To be lavin' his darlint in the shwate honeymoon!
Whin the old man has praties enough and to spare,
Shure he moight as well shtay if he's comfortable there,
Be jabers!

Thirty Years in Bed.

A case for the curious and speculative is to be found in this county, five or six miles southwest of this city, at the residence of Mr. John Collins. Miss Sallie Collins, his sister, who is supposed to be no less than forty years of age, has lain in bed for a period of thirty years, and, strange to say, during that time she has enjoyed good general health. We conversed with physicians who attended her fifteen years ago, one of them for a period of eight years regularly. When about ten or twelve years of age, she was first taken to her bed, and except on two occasions, has never left it. The family lived for a number of years in a log house, and after Miss Collins had lain in bed about ten years, all of the family were on one occasion absent from her room, and Miss Collins observed a house snake leisurely winding his way on the joist immediately over her head. Terror seized her, and before she knew it she was occupying a bed in the opposite side of the room. In 1859 her brother, John Collins, built a new house on the plantation, to which, with other members of the family, she was removed. With these two exceptions she has steadfastly kept her place of repose. It is certainly a remarkable case, and baffles the skill of the physicians who have attempted to treat it. It is supposed to be one of the various manifestations of hysteria. She is reported to be happy and contented with her lot, and her condition is a subject rarely mentioned in her neighborhood.—Moberly (Mo.) Monitor.

GEORGE BANCROFT wants to retire from the German mission. He is 73, but vigorous. He has not yet completed the tenth volume of his History of the United States. The work was commenced in 1834, and the ninth volume published in 1866.

The Grand Duke's Book on America.

The St. Petersburg correspondence of the Baltic Gazette has seen advance-sheets of the first volume of the Grand Duke Alexis' account of his voyage around the world. The first volume is exclusively devoted to a description of the Grand Duke's adventures in the United States. The above mentioned correspondent writes as follows about it:

"This is certainly a very curious work. To judge from what I have read of it—whether his imperial highness wrote it himself, or whether an abler pen did it for him—the book is intensely interesting. The Grand Duke says that his reception in New York almost stupefied him. Up to the last moment he had not thought that so brilliant an ovation would be tendered in republican America to the son of a monarch. He was very weak when he landed in New York, and during his progress up Broadway frequently felt like fainting. But everybody was so kind to him that he tried hard to look pleased, as he was in his heart of hearts. Broadway, he says, in his opinion, is the finest thoroughfare in the world, because everything there, houses, shops, and the people look not monotonous, but gay, lively and bright. What amused him more perhaps than anything else was that the bands, upon catching sight of him, struck up, not the regular Russian anthem, but the so-called 'Dirge of St. Catherine,' which is played in Russia only at the funeral of a member of the imperial family. The cheers of the people were more deafening than any he had heard in Europe; from which he playfully concludes that lung diseases cannot be very prevalent in the New World. As to the soldiery, the variety of uniforms struck him as extremely odd. He says he saw peacefully, side by side, helmeted Prussians and 'kepied' Frenchmen, red-coated Englishmen and Irish troops bearing the banner of the Green Isle.

"The Grand Duke cannot praise too highly American hotels. American fare, he thinks, however, is too rich. 'There is at their tables,' he exclaims naively, 'always too much of a good thing. I asked for the peculiar dishes of America, and at the hotel they could not give me any. Their cooks were Italians and French. The landlord shrugged his shoulders when I asked him about it. Out West, however, my desire was at once gratified. I dined one day on baked pork and beans, a very palatable dish, which would bear transplanting to Russia.'

"American manners, the Grand Duke thinks, are a little awkward and angular, but decidedly pleasant on account of everybody's frankness. For General Custar and his subordinate officers the Grand Duke has words of the warmest gratitude. General Custar's photograph is published in the volume, which is most sumptuously printed and profusely illustrated. Only a few hundred copies of the book will be issued."

CHAPPED HANDS.—A lady sends the Cincinnati Gazette the following remedy for chapped hands: I send herewith the best and cheapest that I ever found. I have used it successfully upward of 40 years. Get good river sand (for the white sandstone is the best); pound it up fine; get your washing water ready as usual, warm or cold. Dip your hands in the water, then use good soap freely; now take a small lump of white lead, sufficient to cover your hands, and with this a large teaspoonful of the sand; rub well with only sufficient on your hands to raise good lather; after a good rubbing wash off the lead and sand, then repeat the operations one or two times more. The next day give them another such treatment. In this way you will have good, clean, soft hands.

MEDICAL ADVERTISING.—The medical profession are outspoken in their denunciation of the system of medical advertising, and declare that any medicine that is advertised is a fraud. How thoroughly inconsistent and unfair is such an argument. The men who are so loud in their criticism are those who advertise themselves as medical savans by ostentatious display; splendid residences with massive doorplates; fast horses and costly carriages. DR. J. WALKER, of California, an old practitioner, respected alike for his kill and conscientious independence, dares to differ; and having discovered in his VINEGAR BITTERS a purely herbablistic medicine, free from all spirituous poisons—a wonderful specific for numerous disorders, advertises the same for the relief of his fellow man, and is borne out in his declarations of its many virtues by thousands of invalids, who are being cured of disease by its use. 27

Treating the Wrong Disease

Many times women call upon their family physicians, one with dyspepsia, another with palpitation, another with trouble of the breast, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent doctors, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all symptoms caused by some uterine disorder: and while they are thus only able perhaps to palliate for a time, they are ignorant of the cause, and encourage their practice until large bills are made, when the suffering patients are no better in the end, but probably worse for the delay, treatment, and other complications made, and which a proper medicine directed to the cause would have entirely removed, thereby instituting health and comfort instead of prolonged misery.

From Miss LORINDA E. ST. CLAIR, Shade, Athens county, O., Oct. 14, 1872:

"DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Your Favorite Prescription is working almost like a miracle on me. I am better already than I have been for over two years."

From ELLA A. SCHAFER, Zanesville, Ind., Aug. 3, 1872:

"DR. PIERCE: I received the medicine you sent me and began using it immediately. As a result of the treatment I feel better than I have for three years."

From Mrs. JOHN K HAMILIN, Odell, Ill., March 19, 1872:

"DR. PIERCE: The Favorite Prescription has done me good, which I am very thankful for."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

HOPE

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

MASON & HAMLIN Cabinet Organs

"The universal opinion of the Musical Profession."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Nearly every Organist and Pianist of Note."—New York World.

"Singular Unanimity."—New York Christian Advocate and Journal.

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO. have printed in a TESTIMONY CIRCULAR (which will be sent free to any address) an amount and weight of testimony to the unequaled merits of their Cabinet Organs which is entirely unapproached by that ever presented in favor of any other musical instrument whatever, either as regards the competence and number of the witnesses, or the character of the testimony. Here are specimen opinions:

J. STAINER, Mus. Doc., Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, says: Their tone is remarkably pure and free from reediness, and their touch all that could be desired.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT, the eminent Composer and Conductor, London, says: I ENTERTAIN the highest opinion of Mason & Hamlin's Cabinet Organs.

CH. GOUNOD, London, Composer of Faust, etc., says: EXPRESS my very favorable opinion on the charm of this instrument.

[PRINCE] PONIATOWSKI, London, the distinguished Composer, says: MARVELOUS in the quality and purity of their tone.

JOHANN STRAUSS, Vienna, the well-known Composer and Director, says: I know of no similar instruments anywhere at all comparable to them.

RUDOLPH WILLMERS, Court Pianist, Composer and Director, says: The sweetness of tone and the power of tone are quite surprising, and I recommend them to all true lovers of music.

OTTOMAR SMOLIK, Musical Director in Prague; JOH. PROMBERGER, Professor at Imperial Chapel, St. Petersburg; AL. SCHIMACSEK, Leader of Orchestra at Funfkirchen Theater, Hungary; JOHANN CRAPIK, Organist and Music Teacher, Siegedin, Hungary; DR. KARL NAWRATIL, Organist of the Church of the Dominicans, Vienna; ANTONIO WUTSCHER, Maestro of Music in Trieste; ANT. SCHWARZ, Counsel at the Imperial Court of Justice, say: The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the best instruments of their class of which we have any knowledge.

MINNA PESCHKA-LEUTNER, the eminent Artist, says: I have never seen any reed-instruments equal to your Cabinet Organs.

THEODORE THOMAS, of Thomas' Orchestra, New York, says: Musicians generally regard the Mason & Hamlin Organs as unequaled.

OLE BULL says:
Excel all instruments of the class I have ever seen.

S. B. MILLS, New York, says:
Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action, and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instruments of the class.

GEORGE WASHBOURNE MORGAN, New York, says: In every respect far superior to everything I have seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.

MAX MARETZEK, Conductor, etc., New York, says: The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far [illegible] Organist, Southampton, England, says: The tone of the Mason & Hamlin Organ spoils the ear for anything less pure than itself.

GEO. WILLIAM WARREN, New York, says: Your instruments, in workmanship and quality of tone, are unsurpassed.

A. GOUROULT, Paris, France, says:
I regard them as unequaled.

EUGENE THAYER, Boston, says:
I consider your Cabinet Organs superior, in all respects, to any I have ever seen.

[REV.] A. TAYLOR, Sec. American Sunday-School Union, Phila., Pa., says: At the numerous Sunday-school conventions and institutes which I attend, I generally find some portable reed instrument, good or bad, old or new. The Mason & Hamlin are the sweetest toned, the most manageable and even when they bear the marks of age, the most reliable and least likely to get out of order.

EDWARD F. RIMBAULT, London, says:
For sacred music at home, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organ is desirable, and in many respects, that could easily be pointed out, it possesses great advantages over the small-priced pipe organs.

CHARLES F. DAVIES, Organist, etc., London, says: For sweetness of tone and variety of effects, I consider these instruments unequaled.

THEODORE WACHTEL, AD. NUENDORFF, CARL ROSA, C. STANLEY, of Opera Troupe, New York, say: The best instruments of the class made. They have more power and greater smoothness and fullness of tone, with equality and uniform character throughout their registers.

J. L. HATTON, London, England, says:
I have always entertained the opinion that Mason & Hamlin's Cabinet Organs are of the very best class of that description of instrument.

S. C. HIRST, Dundee, Scotland, says:
The finest reed instruments extant.

EUSTACE HINTON JONES, Southampton, England, says: I have exercised my organ at all sorts and styles of music, from the Requiem Mass down to polkas and Irish jigs. It will do almost any mortal thing between these two extremes.

CHRISTINA NILSSON, ANNA LOUISE CARY, MARIE LEON DUVAL, VICTOR CAPOUL, P. BRIGNOLI, etc., etc., say:
We take pleasure in recommending the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organ as a very beautiful instrument, and consider it the best now in use.

HENRY STRAUSS, of Vienna, says:
Not only unexcelled, but unequaled by any I have before seen.

See Testimony Circular, sent free, with similar opinions of one thousand Musicians.

At Vienna, 1873, Paris, 1867, in America Always, the Mason & Hamlin Organs have been awarded Highest Medals. New Styles and Prices reduced this month. Catalogue and price-lists free.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Sun.

NEW YORK, 1873-4, WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible, and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party, and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies, and the markets for the men, especially the cattle markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have THE WEEKLY SUN at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six Columns. Only $1.00 a year, no discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun, $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to Clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four page newspaper of twenty-eight Columns. Daily Circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6 a year. To Clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

Address, "THE SUN," New York City.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, February 5, 1874.

The mother of Governor Hendricks died last Friday at about 80 years of age.

The last defaulter is Mr. Rowland, of Richland county, Ohio. He is short only $111,000. He was a church member and a prominent leader in the Radical party.

A scrutinizing examination of the speeches of Carpenter and Morton upon affairs in Louisiana forces the conclusion that upon the tropical State serenity's smiles are smothered.

While Gov. Hendricks and his party were in Washington recentlp arrangements were perfected whereby Indiana will speedily get $160,000 due on unsettled war claims which the State held against the general government.

Down in Butler county, Ohio, the Auditor, ex-Sheriff and ex-Recorder have been indicted for embezzlement. These men are Democrats, elected in a Democratic county, and if proven guilty should be punished to the full extent of the law.

One Cowles, a brother-in-law of Colfax, has been arrested for robbing the mails, and has confessed his guilt. Cowles was a special mail agent on the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad. These brothers-in-law are inconvenient things to have, as Colfax and Grant can testify.

Mr. Nigger Pinchback takes a sensible view of one thing. While admitting that he obtained his election to the United States Senate through fraud, he can't see why he should be shelved, and his corrupt white brethren admitted without debate. 'Tis too bad, and our sincere sympathies are with Pinchy.

Although the President's mansion was quite recently renovated and put in complete order, the sum of $25,000 more is now asked for. It takes money to keep up a house fit for a $50,000 President to live in. Is it any wonder that times are hard, with all this grabbing and stealing that now disgrace and curse the nation?

The pertinent inquiry now is: "How much of the national debt is Grant paying off monthly?" It campaign times he used to reduce the amount of the "National blessing," as Jay Cooke would say, at the rate of ten or fifteen millions a month. At least the Radical papers used to say so, and they of course couldn't lie. But how is it now?

There is a probability that the West and South will unite in Congress and together they can carry any financial measures which they desire. If these representatives get in the habit of working together they will soon learn that the salvation of the country does not depend upon the prosperity of New England at the expense of the other sections.

The dead lock in the Iowa Legislature was brought to a close after the 142 ballot. A compromise was brought about by giving the Republicans the Speaker and the Anti-Monopolists took the majority of all the prominent committees. It is thought that the opposition got the best of the bargain and the Anti-Monopolists will so manage things as to entirely defeat the Republicans at the next election.

The New York Sun very truly and justly observes: "Isn't it worth while to tax every poor man's tea, coffee and tobacco, in order to pay General Grant fifty thousand dollars a year instead of twenty-five thousand dollars, the sum which he agreed to serve for?" and this in addition to $77,000, otherwise expended for the White House.

The old-time Democratic ideas of Gov. Dix, of New York, seem to be cropping out in his official conduct. He is strongly against all kinds of corruption and monopolies and uses the veto power with great caution. In speaking of a debate in the Legislature wherein the conduct of the Governor was the chief matter of discussion, the Tribune says: "Mr. Alvord was left alone in his championship of the Governor, not a single Republican on the floor volunteering to say a word complimentary or otherwise for the Executive of his party. Indeed, they seem to be in doubt as to which party their Governor belongs."

The women of various localities throughout the State of Ohio have organized for a temperance campaign of remarkable vigor. They usually proceed to a saloon where they hold an impromptu prayer meeting and exhort the dealer to quit the business. Occasionally they change the programme by emptying all the beer and whisky on the ground. The cheerful work goes on uninterruptedly and the excitement is getting up to fever heat.

The Cleveland Herald, an organ of the deep and thick sort, commenting on the republicans in the Ohio legislature refusing to censure the President for his share in the grab, says with amusing frankness:

We have done our best to excuse the President for signing that iniquitous bill on the grounds stated above, but never made the attempt but at the end of our argument we felt our opinions giving away. The President was not blameless, and our republicans in the legislature should have had the sense either to keep mum or to go the whole figure, and include in the same category Congress and the President.

A movement is on foot to have the day for the inauguration of the President changed from the 4th of March to the second Wednesday in May, and also to have the Presidential election held in October instead of November. The following petition is being circulated and signed throughout the country:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States, convened:

We, the subscribing citizens of the United States, do, for various good and sufficient reasons, ask to have the term of the Short session of Congress extended into the month of May; and that the "Inauguration Day" of President of the United States shall hereafter be on the second Wednesday of May, instead of the 4th day of March; and also that the general election be held early in the month of October, and we desire that all appropriations and necessary legislation be had to carry out the object of this petition.

The following from the LaPorte Argus, is given for the benefit of our Auburn cotemporary, as we publish very little of the county printing: "A gentleman who is the head of a firm that has grown immensely wealthy by doing blank printing for various county officers throughout the State, was in the city last Monday. The manner of his doing business may be illustrated by saying that he frequently sells lead pencils for $2 a dozen, when they can be bought at retail at from 20 to 30 cents a dozen. He manages to manipulate a great many county officers, and somehow he has grown rich. Have we a little Credit Mobilier in the State, or how is it that the old thing works so nicely?" We do not know how deeply the system, complained of above, has taken root in this county, but we have heard it more than intimated that very high priced pencils are whittled up about the county offices.—Press.

When Morton and Carpenter fight the Republican party is divided against itself. Morton and Carpenter have fought—about Louisiana. The speeches of Carpenter and Morton on consecutive days in the Senate do not indicate a pleasing state of affairs down in Louisiana. Carpenter says that they break the law on one side, and Morton says that they murder on the other. We suspect that they both tell the truth. Morton's bloody speech in the Senate, however, will not receive the unanimous indorsement even of his own party. Carpenter is of the opinion that the Republican party must get rid of the Louisiana corruption or it will lose the next Presidential election. Perhaps Carpenter will agree with us in thinking that that party must get rid of some other things or the same catastrophe will fall upon the country.

Township Institutes.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

The second session of the Franklin township institute or model school was held at the center school house on Saturday, January 17th, 1874, pursuant to adjournment. The meeting was called to order by the chairman, J. S. Jackman, with Josie Gillett Secretary, at 10 o'clock a. m. After consultation, it was decided that the officers of the first meeting be continued, and requested to officiate at this meeting; said officers being those above named, with R. C. Baxter Vice President and critic.

All the teachers were present, with one exception. Also quite a number of spectators were present.

The exercises of the day were commenced by C H. Thurston with a class in elocution, occupying twenty minutes; followed by John McCurdy, in arithmetic; George Hoopengarner in grammar and R. C. Baxter in spelling. After which a noon recess of one hour was taken.

Afternoon session—At the commencement of the afternoon session, James McCurdy elucidated his system of teaching geography; followed by Wm. Dirrim, who explained map-drawing, with practical illustrations. The teaching of history was then taken up by Reuben Sawvel, who explained his plan of teaching that branch, after which physiology was taken up and explained by John Young.

The subject of school government was then brought before the institute, upon which sprung up quite an animated discussion, with considerable of a diversity of opinion, which only goes to verify the old adage, that "doctors disagree." The subject was ably handled by Messrs C. H. Thurston, R. Sawvel, R. C. Baxter, J. S. Jackman, Wm. Dirrim and J. M. Naragon.

To a question as to how to remedy or prevent tardiness, Mr. R. C. Baxter emphatically answered, "make your first recitation interesting."

After the reading of the Critic's report, and the Secretary's minutes of the preceeding meeting, the institute adjourned to meet on Saturday, February 7th, 1874, punctually at 9½ o'clock, a. m.

J. S. JACKMAN, President.
JOSIE GILLETT, Secretary.

FAIRFIELD TOWNSHIP.

The teachers of Fairfield township met according to previous adjournment at the center school house on the 17th of January, 1874. The meeting was called to order by G. W. Downs, trustee. Mr D. Chilcoat was appointed President, J. Farrington Vice President and Sarah Hornsby Secretary.

The exercises were opened by Mr. Huffman on orthography, the recitation was conducted by asking questions on the subject. The subject of reading was then taken up by J. Farrington, followed by a general discussion of the same. Recess of one hour.

Afternoon session—At 1 o'clock the meeting was again called to order and the subject of arithmetic was called up; F. Glasgow, to whom it had been assigned, not being present, the teachers entered into a general discussion of the same.

The exercise in grammar was conducted by A. Reinoehl, a sentence was taken and the subject of diagraming was explained and discussed. Astronomical geography was next in order, by Mr. D. Allen, in which he explained why the tropics and polar circles were placed where they are. Penmanship, by A. Baird. History, by Mr. Hughs, it being late, he made only a few remarks on the subject. The following teachers were assigned topics for the next meeting: Mr. Huffman, the greatest common divisor; A. Baird, orthography; I. Ringler, boundaries of townships, counties &c.; Mr. Hughs, case; Mr. Miller, the circulating system; J. Farrington, the causes which led to the revolution; Mr. Slaybaugh, classes and modifications; Mr. Waters, the bones and their uses; F. Glasgow, penmanship; D. Chilcoat, notation ond numeration.

The critic's report, by A. Reinoehl, was then read and received in a friendly manner by all. The institute adjourned to meet at the same place on the third Saturday of February, 1874. An evening session was held.

SARAH HORNSBY, Secretary.

The Auburn Club Dance will give its next hop in Ensley's new hall on Thursday evening, February 12. We hope for a general turn out, as a good time is anticipated.

Remember the Bell Ringers

We heard a fellow inquiring for a key to Ray's Arithmetic the other day. He's "bracing up" for a country school no doubt.

The horrible condition of the roads during last week interferred materially with the fond expectations of merchants in this place.

Vordermark's are receiving new goods nearly every day, and are always supplied in any article you can wish for in the boot and shoe line.

We have just received a new lot of the latest styles of job type. Those wanting work done should give us a call, and get good styles and firstclass work.

The 'Bus team, while left alone, became frightened, one day last week, and made an effort to "get up and dust." they were stopped, however, before any damage was done.

Smithfield township is to organize a grange on next Tuesday evening. A full complement of twenty men and ten women, all that can be in at the organization, are on hand.

The Press says we desire to "quit it." It is certainly mistaken. We expect to correct it from time to time, and if possible make a decent paper out of it. The interests of our neighboring town demand it.

A gentleman was in town yesterday having in mind the project of taking a colony of ladies to the far, far west. He says thousands of men there are pining for wives. Here's a chance for ancient maidens—wadding or no wadding | teeth or no teeth. Whilst the lamp holds out to burn and so forth.

We are in receipt of the Defiance Democrat, one of the best papers in Northern Ohio. Since the new firm, Messrs. White & Blymyer have taken charge it has been enlarged and vastly improved, although ably conducted under Judge Greene. We are glad to see our friends take the lead.

The American Bell Ringers are coming. A full troupe will give a grand entertainment at Ensly's hall, on Tuesday, Feb. 10, 1874. There are over thirty performers in this company and all are well versed in their parts. Our citizens may expect a good entertainment, and we would like to see a crowded house. Tickets can be had at the Postoffice.

The poet was wrong when he said, 'Nobody cares for a moneyless man.' Just before an election there is the greatest interest in the world manifested in a fellow if he hasn't got a second shirt to his back Poets are like other mortals, rather than miss a good rhyme, they will sometimes tell a whopper. We were a poet once ourself, and know all about it.

We are glad to learn that our enterprising townsman J. W. Shaffer, Esq., is doing a good business in his wagon shops and is now pressed with orders for vehicles of most all kinds. Orders for wagons and buggies are coming in from the southern part of the State, as well as at home He will ship a number to the south in a few days. This may be regarded as an evidence of the superiority of his work, and we hope to see our citizens at home patronize one so well worthy of their encouragement. Don't send abroad for an article that you can purchase at home.

The following is a list of those who have not had the courage to say no, and to whom Clerk Lanning has granted permission to enter upon the duties, trials and tribulations of married life during the month of January:

Our home musical talent, assisted by several fine signers from abroad, will give a grand concert, Friday evening, Feb. 13, at the M. E. Church. Save your dimes until that time if you want to hear good music.

The celebrated ground-hog celebrated his existence by making his traditional appearance last Tuesday, and there was a rush. He was crowded in his hole and pulled the whole in after him, so that winter will be with us yet awhile.

Our Artists, Gordon & Roth, are getting out a very neatly printed photograph reward card for school teachers, very cheap. Those wishing a present that their scholars will appreciate, should call early and sit for their negatives that the artists may have a chance to get their cards ready on time.

Musical Entertainment.

The Auburn Glee and Chorus Class, under the direction of Prof. Bennett, propose giving a concert at the M. E. Church on Friday evening, Feb. 13th, when will be presented one of the choicest programmes ever appeared to the people of Auburn.—The class are now on their second term—making altogether twenty-four rehearsels, and they feel confident of being able to give an entertainment that will reflect credit upon themselves and their friends. Let all lovers of music bear this in mind and show their appreciation of the efforts of our singers by giving them a full house For farther particulars see programmes next week.

Examine Your Title.

The new card of Rose & Hartman, attorneys at law, will be found on first page of to-day's paper. These gentlemen have at great expense and labor prepared an abstract of the title to all the real estate in the county, Many of the records of title were made before the organization of the county and are not in the records of this county. All such records have been abstracted and appear in their books. The titles to real estate, are in many instances complicated, and no man should invest in land without knowing, for himself that the title is clear. A few dollars expended in the examination may save a long and expensive litigation.

We paid a brief visit to Toledo Tuesday and found the city quite busy. We met many of our old friends, and new ones.—We take occasion to say that we were not drunk, in advance of any assertion to the contrary by our nighbor at Waterloo.—Business is lively in the city. A locomotive had just killed a man as we arrived, and the next day another fell from an elevator only about a hundred feet high.—They found enough after be fell to make a corpse. Our live friend R. J. Lent, is having a good run at the Theater Comique.—Reub. can be found at the box office at all hours when not otherwise engaged.—He means business.

W. G. Alexander, of the firm of J. R. Stone & Co., Auction Commission Merchants, dishes up a lively job in his business. So one fellow thought about three miles out of the night we left, no doubt. In fact Toledo is a great place and a great many people live there.

An article intended for the educational column, appeared in the Courier a short time since, in which it was stated on what was supposed to be correct authority that Butler and Waterloo had made no changes in text books for the purpose of conforming to the action of the County Board. This was, in part, a mistake.—Butler was already using the readers and geographies adopted by the Board, and has since introduced the grammar, thus making a complete uniformity, at least as far as ordered by the Board. Waterloo was already using McGuffey's readers and Harvey's grammar, but has taken no action, as yet, looking to the adoption and use of the geography selected by the County Board. So this one text book is all that is left to "regret" as mentioned in the article referred to. This statement of the matter is made to do justice to all concenred, and to say that all matter in the educational column is published for information only, and not to provoke a controversy with any one.

"O give me back my childhood's years, and let me live them o'er." This is the favorite prayer of a poet, a request to powers divine— heartfelt, eager, desiring a fulfilment. Now this fact is unreasonable, almost as unreasonable as "Betsey and I are Out," or as terribly imaginary as Bret Harte's "Heathen Chinee." 'Give me back my childhood's years." A crazy man would know better than to ask for a return of childhood's years. It can't be did. It ain't in the business. Now if this poet had pleaded for quail on toast, or zwi glass lager, there would be some sense in his imploration, some human desire in his feeling. But to ask for a return of childhood's years with its sunshine of pleasure and aches abdominal, is too much at one dose. It is simply out of the question. He can have all on the bill of fair, from an old maid to a poodle; from a well flavored Havana to a fresh widow. He can acquire the art of stealing, swindling and grabbing by an association with Washington politicians, but he must'nt ask for a return of childhood's years, and expect to be rated among the philosophers and sages of the nineteenth century. Our opinion of the above poet is that he needs a dose of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup.

Miss Harriet Brown Wife of Mr Harrison Brown, 5 miles west of Fort Wayne.

Fort Wayne, Sep. 17, 1872.—For the benefit of those who think consumption incurable, I will make a statement of my cure: On the 12th of last March I was taken with the Lung Fever, or as the doctor called it, Pleuro-Pneumonia. I was attended by one of whom I considered the most eminent physicians of this city 3½ months, during which time he employed 5 other physicians as council. For 3 weeks I thought I was getting better, when an abscess began to form in my left lung, and the physicians pronounced it quick consumption, from this time I failed rapidly, and raised from a pint to a quart of phlegm and matter each day, and had night sweats; by the 26th of June I had got so weak I could not lift a glass of water to my mouth, and was confined to bed. At this time some ladies in the neighborhood persuaded my wife to employ Dr. Todd, and I am free to say I improved steadily from the time I began taking his medicines, and in 10 weeks I was able to walk 2 miles, and felt as well as I ever did, now I walk from 3 to 4 miles each day, and neither cough nor spit. I have no pain and think my lung is healed perfectly.

A novel claim has been presented to Congress by one Dr. Zacharie, a chiropodist, who alleges that he removed $46,000 worth of corns from the aching feet of Union soldiers during the late war. Foreign.

The Duke of Edinburgh, Queen Victoria's second son, was married to the Grand Duchess Maria, daughter of the Czar, at St. Petersburgh, on the 23d of January. The event was the occasion of much rejoicing in England and Russia, the festivities lasting several days....Another of the Pacific Mail Company's steamers has been lost—the Relief, en route from Yokohama to Shanghai....A Spanish gunboat boarded the American brig Margaret on Jan. 10, ten miles out from Havana, and attempted to search her. The Captain refused to open his hatches, and upon his arrival at Havana reported the circumstance to our Consul. United States Admiral Scott was informed of it, and extorted an apology from the Spanish Admiral for the outrage....Mr. Whalley, M. P., the champion of the Tichborne claimant, has been sent to prison by Lord Chief-Justice Cockburn for contempt of court....The English Parliament has been dissolved by the Queen, and a new election ordered. Gladstone, in an address to his constituents announcing his candidacy for re-election, gives as the reason for this measure, that since the defeat of the Government upon the Irish higher education question, by concurrent efforts of the leader of the opposition and Catholic prelacy in Ireland, the Government has not been possessed of sufficient authority to carry out the great legislative measures....The Pope is again reported ill.

Advices from Spain confirm the reported capture by the Carlists of Santander and Portugalete....Adam Black, the well-known Edinburgh publisher, died Jan. 25, aged 87.

The chief stronghold of the Acheenese has been captured by the Dutch....The political situation in Great Britain is growing decidedly interesting. Disraeli has issued an address to his constituents in Buckinghamshire, asking for re-election to Parliament. The Queen held a council at Osborne on the 26th, and issued a proclamation ordering the dissolution of the present Parliament. Writs of election for the new House of Commons were promulgated, and orders were also sent to Edinburgh for the election of the sixteen Peers representing Scotland in the Upper House. Mr. Lowe has issued an address to his constituents, in which he upholds the existing Education act, and replies categorically to Disraeli's criticisms. He shows how what was characterized as an "unenergetic administration" had carried the country through the crisis of European war without compromising its dignity, or giving offense to either party....Intelligence has been received in London of the death of Dr. Livingstone in the interior of Africa. He died of dysentery while traveling from Lake Bembe to Unianjembe in June last. His body has been embalmed, and is being conveyed to England by way of Zanzibar.

There is much speculation in England in regard to the reasons which caused the Government to decide upon the dissolution of Parliament. Some declare it was brought about by a dissension in the Cabinet; others, that Gladstone has been summoned before the Court of Queen's Bench for not standing for re-election after accepting the office, in March last. The utmost interest is manifested over the elections, and much activity is displayed in preparation. Both parties are confident of success. The betting, says a London dispatch, is in favor of the Liberals....A terrible railroad accident is reported from Scotland. While the express passenger train from Edinburgh for Glasgow was running at great speed, it came in collision with another express train. Sixteen persons were killed, and a number were severely injured....The British Government has received an official dispatch from Zanzibar confirming the previous report of the death of Dr. Livingstone, the African explorer. His death was caused by exposure in crossing some marshes, in which he was up to his waist in water for hours. Ten of his men died from the same cause. His remains are on their way to Zanzibar. The date of the great traveler's death is still uncertain, but the sad event probably happened some time during the month of August last.

The Parliamentary canvass in England grows more exciting as it progresses. Gladstone opened the campaign, at Blackheath, in a speech in which he admitted that Parliament had been dissolved because the Government felt that their power was ebbing. He sharply attacked Disraeli for seeking to divert the attention of the people from domestic to foreign politics. He spoke for an hour, and, at the end, received a vote of confidence. The address of Mr. John Bright to his constituents is published. It fully concurs in the policy announced by Gladstone. Mr. Arch has been invited to stand for Parliament in Birmingham. Daniel Grant has been nominated for Parliament by the Liberals, in Marylebone....The reputed capture of Santander by the Spanish Carlists is contradicted.

Lieut. Gen. Henry J. French, of the British army, and Lord St. John, of Bletsoe, are dead....A report comes from Torrès, Spain, that 20 volunteers sought refuge in a tower which the Carlists burned, causing the death of the whole number....The excitement over the Parliamentary election in England is unabated. Meetings have been broken up and dispersed and candidates mobbed in a number of towns. Gen. S. B. Maxey has been elected to the United States Senate from Texas.

The Grange.

The Grangers of Michigan, at their recent State Convention, adopted the report of the Committee on Transportation. It declares that railroads are amenable to State regulation as much as plank and gravel-road companies. The Legislature has as much right to regulate their charges as to fix turnpike tolls or the charges of millers for grinding grain. Accompanying this assertion of right is an appeal to the railroad companies to remember that their interests are identical with those of the farmer, and not to kill, by exorbitant rates, the agricultural goose that lays the golden egg.

The Grangers of Colorado assembled at Denver last week and effected the organization of a Territorial Grange. Over forty subordinate lodges were represented, and the best of feeling prevailed. Granges are being formed all over the Territory....A Washington dispatch says: "The Illinois delegation have not agreed to take any united action with regard to the answers which they shall make to the letters addressed to them by the Executive Committee of the Illinois State Grange. One of the members has already sent a formidable answer, making a small volume."

The Committee of Ways and Means of the National House of Representatives have finally come to a conclusion on the financial question. They have discarded all the schemes presented, and have adopted a measure of their own. It embraces most of the features of the bill presented early in the session by Mr. Merriam, of New York, and provides, practically for free banking, allowing banks to be organized at any place; requiring them only to hold five per cent. of their circulation in greenbacks or bonds; all notes of the bank to be redeemable at New York in Government currency.

House.—A bill was passed providing for the establishment of life-saving stations on the coast....The House, in Committee of the Whole, spent several hours considering the Army Appropriation bill....Cox offered a substitute for the bill introduced in the House by the Committee on Ways and Means fixing the status of the over-issue of United States notes, which was referred. The substitute declares that United States notes issued in excess of $356,000,000 were issued without authority of law, and are not legal-tender.

Thursday, Jan. 29.—Senate.—Ferry (Mich.) presented a petition from citizens of Illinois, asking that legal-tenders be substituted for national bank notes....Ramsey presented a petition from citizens of Montana, asking for a division of that Territory....A resolution was adopted ordering an investigation as to the amount of gas consumed and paid for by the Federal Government Washington....The Committee on Contingent Expenses was instructed to investigate as to the amount of stationery furnished reporters, and whether the practice should not be discontinued....Carpenter addressed the Senate at length on Louisiana affairs. He took direct issue with Morton as to the legality of the recent election, contended that Pinchback had no claim to a seat in the Senate, and denounced the conduct of Judge Durell as without a parallel in judicial annals.

House.—Maynard, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill to amend the several acts relating to the national currency, and to establish free banking. The bill was sent to the Committee of the Whole....Maynard also reported a bill limiting the amount of United States notes in circulation to $400,000,000, and allowing their exchange into 3.65 bonds. It provides that hereafter the banks shall determine the amount of their reserves by their deposits, and not by their circulation and deposits, as heretofore. Every bank must deposit 5 per cent. of its circulation with the Treasury, to be used for the redemption of its notes. Holders of notes of any bank may have them exchanged for United States notes on application to the Treasury. The bank must then return to the Treasury an equal amount of United States notes, in return for which it gets back its old notes, or new ones if they were too worn for use. No bank is to be allowed, as formerly, to keep its reserves elsewhere than in its own vaults, or to redeem its notes except over its own counters. The bill limits the United States notes to $400,000,000, and to make them as good as gold, provides that, after next July, $2,000,000 of notes, payable in gold in two years, shall be issued every month in exchange for greenbacks. Gold to pay these notes is to be accumulated by hoarding in the Treasury all gold that remains after paying the interest on the public debt, and meeting any deficit in the revenues....Maynard also reported adversely upon the bill to establish and maintain a National Savings Depository as a branch of the Postoffice Department.

Grace Greenwood on Matt. Carpenter.

There is something remarkably engaging and devil-may-care and cut-spoken in this jolly Mr. Worldly-Wiseman of the Senate. There is even a certain magnetism of good humor and good living, genius and geniality about him. He is a Webster with the dignity and decorum left out. He reminds one of Sheridan and Rochester and the Marquis of Donegal and other splendid old spendthrifts and goodfellows, of whom this penurious puritanic age and country are not worthy. We are a little shocked at some sentiments he utters, but we rather like him for speaking them out, and not concealing them or glossing them over. We know just where to find him, every time. His moral epidermis does seem to be a little thickened by law and politics and Washington associations; he is so comfortably unconscious of the damage he may be doing himself by his ingenuous admissions, and cheerful recklessness of statement. He never knows when and where he is hurt. He reminds me of one of Gov. Hunt's little camp stories. He—that is the Governor—described a poor white family of Missouri, careless, shiftless, and intolerably lazy, the daughters of which were accustomed to go barefoot till the soles of their feet became hard like unto horn. One of these young ladies, on coming home one day after a long tramp in the rain after the cows, was standing on the hearth drying her clothes, when her old mother drawled out: "Sal, thar's—a—live—coal—under—yer—foot." The girl slightly turned her head, and drawled back: "Which—foot, mammy?"

Rights of Settlers.

Congressman McDill, of Iowa, has introduced in the House of Representatives a bill which sets forth that when a contest arises between a railway company and a settler, and the land office decide the case adversely to the settler, the title to such lands shall be, and is thereby, confirmed to the settler, provided the settler shows his settlement to have been made in good faith. The railway company may have land-scrip to make up its loss, but it cannot have the land. The settler is held, however, to the strictest letter of the land laws, and must, in good faith, comply with them to avail himself of the benefits of this bill.

Daring Stage Robbery—Dick Turpin Eclipsed.

[From the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette.]

From Mr. G. R. Crump, who arrived from Hot Springs last night, and who was on Thursday's stage, going to the Springs, at the time of the robbery referred to in Friday's Gazette, we learn the particulars of the affair. There was one stage and two light road-wagons, or ambulances, the stage being in front and the other two vehicles immediately in the rear. At the Gaines place, five miles this side of Hot Springs, the stages were stopped to water the stock. While watering, five men rode up, coming from toward Hot Springs, and passed on by. Each man wore a heavy blue army overcoat, but none of them were masked. Nothing was thought of the matter, and the vehicles moved on. After going about half a mile, the men who had passed at the Gaines place rode up from behind, and the first thing that Mr. Crump—who was in the front stage—heard, was an order to the driver to stop, or his head would be blown off. The stage was stopped, and on throwing up the curtain he saw a pistol pointed at him and others in the stage, telling them to get out quick, accompanied by an oath. They got out, and, as they did so, were ordered to throw up their hands. Three men were in front of them with cocked pistols and another with a shot-gun, while on the other side of the stage was still another, all pointing their weapons toward the passengers and the driver. After getting the passengers out, they made them form in a kind of circle, so that all of them could be covered by the pistols and gun. The leader then "went through" each passenger, taking all the watches, jewelry, and money that could conveniently be found that were of special value. From ex-Gov. Burbank, of Dakota, they obtained $840 in money, a diamond pin, and gold watch. A gentleman named Taylor, frow Lowell, Mass., went up for $650 in money.

After getting through with the passengers, they tore open several mail sacks in search of registered letters, but did not get any. While the main party was engaged in this work, another took out the best horse in the coach, saddled him, rode up and down the road about fifty yards two or three times, and remarked that "he would do."

After all this, the "Captain" went to each passenger in turn and questioned him as to where he was from, and inquired if there were any Southern men along. Mr. Crump spoke up, as did one or two others, that they were Southern men. They then asked if there were any who had served in the Confederate army during the war. Mr. Crump answered that he did. They questioned him as to what command, and remarking that he looked like an honest fellow, one who was telling the truth, handed him back his watch and money, saying they did not want to rob Confederate soldiers, that the Northern men had driven them into outlawry, and they intended to make them pay for it.

Coming to Mr. Taylor, of Lowell, they asked where he was from.

"St. Louis," he responded.

The "Captain" eyed him closely. "Yes, and you are a newspaper reporter for the St. Louis Democrat, the vilest paper in the West. Go to Hot Springs and send the Democrat a telegram about this affair, and give them my compliments."

Gov. Burbank asked them to return his papers, saying they could be of no benefit to them. The "Captain" squatted down on his knees and commenced examing them. Turning round to his followers he said, "Boys, I believe he is a detective—shoot him!" and forthwith he was covered with three pistols. "Stop," said the chief, looking further. "I guess it's all right," and handed the Governor his papers. Coming to the gentleman from Syracuse, N. Y., who was going to the Springs for health, he asked them to give him back $5 so that he could telegraph home. Eyeing him closely, the chief responded that if he had no friends or money he had better go and die—that he would be little loss any way. The fellow with the shot-gun kept pointing it at the St. Louis Democrat man, as they termed him, making such cheerful remarks as these: "I'll bet I can shoot his hat off without touching his head."

All of them seemed to be jolly fellows, and enjoyed the fun very much.

Labor and Capital.

Hon. George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, has introduced a bill in Congress to provide for the appointment of a Commission on the subject of the wages and hours of labor and the division of profits between labor and capital in the United States. It provides: "That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Commission of three persons from the Civil Service, who shall hold office for the period of two years from the date of their appointment, unless their duties shall have been sooner accomplished, who shall investigate the subject of the wages and hours of labor, and of the division of the joint profits of labor and capital between the laborer and the capitalist, and the social, educational, and sanitary condition of the laboring classes of the United States, and how the same are affected by existing laws regulating commerce, finance, and currency." These Commissioners are to be paid a salary of $5,000 each per annum, and are to be authorized to employ a clerk. They are to report to the President, who presents the results of their labors to Congress.

Of the Chief Justices of the United States, John Jay was 44 at the time of his first appointment in 1789, and 55 at his second in 1800. William Cushing, appointed in 1795, was 56. Oliver Ellsworth was 61. Rutledge, appointed in 1759, but not confirmed, was 56. Marshall was 46. Mr. Taney was 56. Mr. Chase was 55. Mr. Cushing, nominated, but not confirmed, is 74.

One of the singular coincidences connected with the status of the members of the Iowa House of Representatives this winter, is the fact that there are thirty-five Grangers among the Republicans, and thirty-five among the Anti-Monopolists. The extraordinary division, therefore, is wholly outside and independent of the grange element of either side.

Inter-State Commerce—Mr. Hurlbut's Project.

The following are the main features of the bill introduced in Congress by Representative Hurlbut for chartering a double-track railway company with authority to construct and operate a line between the Atlantic seaboard and the Mississippi river:

The purpose and object of the corporation are declared to be to locate a track, and build and operate a railroad for freight only, with two tracks, from any convenient point on the Hudson river or the Bay of New York, to Council Bluffs, Iowa, or to such other convenient point on the east bank of Missouri river, in Iowa, as shall offer the best connection with the system of railroads west of the Missouri river.

The construction of the road shall be commenced within one year from the passage of this act, and the main line completed within three years thereafter. The capital stock of the company shall not exceed 1,000,000 shares of $100 each.

It is required that the road shall be laid with steel rails, or solid-headed steel rails of not less than 68 pounds weight to the linear yard, and the entire road to be constructed and operated in the best manner. Besides branches to St. Louis and Chicago, the corporation is authorized to contsruct such other branches as in the judgment of the directors may answer its purpose, but not more than two branches shall be made on the same side of the main line in any one State.

The maximum rates of freight allowed to be received by the company shall be at the rate of 5 mills per ton per mile for all distances exceeding 750 miles, and at the rate of 6 mills for distances less than 750 miles, and not exceeding 600 miles, and at the rate of 7 mills per ton for distances less than 600 and more than 400 miles, and at the rate of 8 mills per ton per mile for distances of less than 400 and not exceeding 300 miles, and at 9 mills per ton per mile for distances less than 300 and not exceeding 150 miles, and at 1 cent per mile for distances less than 150 miles; provided, that in the winter months said corporation shall be entitled to add 1 mill per ton to all rates, and to all other rates not included in the term bulk freight, at such maximum rates as shall be fixed by a Commission to be appointed.

A commission of five persons is to be established, three of whom are to be appointed by the President, and two by the company, who shall have full power and authority to classify freight and fix maximum charges on each class of freight and on each article other than those specified.

The United States, in consideration of the requirements of the bill, guarantee an interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly, upon a portion of the cost of construction of the main line of the road. The bonds so guaranteed shall not be sold or disposed of by the company except for cash, and at not less than 95 per cent. of their par value, and shall be payable at the city of New York, both principal and interest. A sinking fund is to be created to reimburse the United States, etc. This charter, and all privileges therein contained, are declared to be subject to the control of Congress as to the modification, alteration, or repeal of the same.

A Law Examination.

The following racy examination of candidates for admission to the bar is taken from the Western Law Journal. The examination commenced with:

"Do you smoke?"

"I do, sir."

"Have you a spare cigar?"

"I have, sir." [Extends a short six.]

"Now, sir, what is the first duty of a lawyer?"

"Collect fees, sir."

"Right. What is the second?"

"To increase the number of clients."

"When does the position toward clients change?"

"When making out a bill of costs."

"Explain."

"We then occupy the antagonistic position. I become the plaintiff and he becomes the defendant."

"Suit decided, how do you stand with the lawyer on the other side?"

"Cheek by jowl."

"Enough, sir. You promise to be an ornament to your profession, and I wish you success. Now, are you aware of the duty you owe me?"

"Perfectly."

"Describe it."

"It is to invite you to drink."

"But suppose I decline?"

Candidate scratches his head.

"There is no instance of the kind on record in the books. I cannot answer the question."

"You are right. And the confidence with which you make the assertion shows conclusively that you read the law attentively. Let's take a drink, and I will sign your certificate at once."

Castelar and Grant.

Before surrendering their functions, the Castelar Government of Spain sent to President Grant, as a present, a finely-finished sword, a superb blade of Toledo workmanship. On one side is a list of the battles in which General Grant fought during the rebellion, and on the other the words "Let us have peace." The sword has an elaborately-carved basket-hilt and a plain polished steel scabbard. Under the Constitution the President cannot accept the offering without permission from Congress. It is probable that an act will be passed making him its lawful possessor.

A Motley Audience.—The Des Moines Register, in speaking of the motley crowd which greeted Victoria Woodhull, on her second appearance in that city recently, says it "was as numerous as the capacity of the hall would allow, and as promiscuous as the quality of humanity could well admit of. From boy to gray hairs, from churchman to lawbreaker, from vile to pure and from vicious to polished—not a class but was represented by the masculine element of Des Moines, sparsely intermingled with perhaps one hundred ladies or more, from the wealthy dame to the nymph du pave. It was a motley and strange assembly, and such an one as perhaps has never been congregated in this city before."

AUBURN COURIER

T. C. MAYS, PUBLISHER.

Editors in Congress.

[Washington Cor. Chicago Times.]

It is a bit curious to run the eye over both branches of the present Congress and pick out the men who are, or have been, journalists. The number is increasing yearly. In the good old times men who hoped to do the State some service in the way of legislation usually took the legal road. The political seat was then generally reached by scrambling over the bar and bench. Sometimes, in the kindness of the popular heart, the successful militia hero, or the man who had attained eminence in commercial pursuits, was allowed to do the national chores. But old Father Antic, the law, saw to it that his own children were awarded the majority of the present political plums.

By and by a strange face of nervous, pushing fellows, around whose jackets hung a faint odor of printer's ink, began to creep into the comfortable chairs of General Assemblies and Congress. Very useful chaps they had been to help make public officers of the lawyers and others, but was it not a little audacious when they commenced making public officers of themselves? More alarming than all was the fact that when this leaven of press delegates began to work in the Congressional loaf it was discovered that the new element was so efficacious that it could never again be slighted. So it remained and waxed powerful. To-day there are few of the head-working political men in Senate or House who have not, at some period, driven the burning quill and fashioned the potent leader in a newspaper office.

Let me pick them out. In the Senate are Schurz, Sargent, of California, and Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, ex-Vice-President. Kansas honors herself by sending two editors to the Senate, Ingalls who engineered the Atchison Champion for several years, and Crozier, once published the Leavenworth Daily Times. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, was also an editor, and so were Brownlow, of Tennessee, and Sener, of Virginia. Sumner and Stockton may also be counted in, for, while they have never owned newspapers, they have written for them, and have each compiled valuable books, which is almost as creditable as to be an editor.

In the House, Speaker Blaine raps turbulent spouters to order as lustily as he may have hammered down the type in the forms of the Portland newspaper office in his younger days. The Portland Advertiser and Kenebec Journal have been under his control.

Gen. Joe. Hawley, of Connecticut, is principal owner and editor of the Hartford Courant, one of the best provincial sheets in the country. Carles Dudley Warner is associated with him in the paper, but, unhapily for Connecticut, not in Congress.

The shriveled Alexander H. Stephens, Vice-President of the ex-Confederacy, and one of the strangest morsels of talent that ever hung for years between this and another world, took to the sanctum after his incipient nation went to splinters. His editorials were never less than half a furlong in extent, but he was eager to prove, as usual, that the only small thing about him was his poor shrunken little body.

Among the remaining editors in the House are Wolf, of Indiana, Phillips, of Kansas, Smith, of Louisiana, Willard, of Michigan, Lamar, of Mississippi, Havens, of Missouri, Mellish, Cox and Roberts, of New York, Waddell, of North Carolina, Sherwood and Lawrence, of Ohio, Kelley and Magee, of Pennsylvanja, and Dawes, of Massachusetts.

The Territorial Delegates come out particularly strong in editorial experience, the men] from Arizona, Dakota, Montana, Wyoming and Utah all having served time at the head of newspapers.

Alas for Illinois, she has not an editor in her entire delegation.

A Hindoo Story.

A tiger prowling in a forest was attracted by a bleating calf. It proved to be a bait, and the tiger found himself trapped in a spring cage. There he lay for two days, when a Brahmin happened to pass that way. "O Brahmin!" piteously cried the beast, "have mercy on me; let me out of this cage." "Ah! but you will eat me." "Eat you! devour my benefactor? Never could I be guilty of such a deed," responded the tiger. The Brahmin, being benevolently inclined, was moved by these entreaties, and opened the door of the cage. The tiger walked up to him, wagged his tail, and said: "Brahmin, prepare to die; I shall now eat you." "Oh, how ungrateful! how wicked! am I not your savior?" protested the trembling priest. "True," said the tiger, "very true; but it is the custom of my race to eat a man when we get a chance, and I can not afford to let you go." "Let us submit the case to an arbitrator," said the Brahmin. "Here comes a fox. The fox is wise; let us abide by his decision." "Very well," replied the tiger. The fox, assuming a judicial aspect, sat on his haunches with all the dignity he could muster, and looking at the disputants, he said: "Good friends, I am somewhat confused at the different accounts which you give of this matter; my mind is not clear enough to render equitable judgment, but if you will be kind enough to act the whole transaction before my eyes, I shall attain unto a more definite conception of the case. Do you, Mr. Tiger, show me just how you approached and entered the cage, and then you, Mr. Brahmin, show me how you liberated him, and I shall be able to render a proper decision." They assented, for the fox was solemn and oracular. The tiger walked into the cage, and the spring door fell and shut him in. He was a prisoner. The judicial expression faded from the fox's countenance, and turning to the Brahmin, he said: "I advise you to go home as fast as you can, and abstain, in future, from doing favors to rascally tigers. Good morning, Brahmin; good morning, tiger."

UMBRELLAS of navy blue silk tipped with gilt, and with gilt handle and cup, are shown to entrap the fashionable girl of the period.

A Dignified Man.

The human heart, in all its expansive, limitless capacity for enjoyment, takes greater pleasure in nothing more than witnessing a portly, solemn-visaged man, the embodiment of natural dignity, and importance in clothes, administer a seathing rebuke to some "smart" petty official. One morning lately just such a personification of innate dignity loomed up at the stamp window of a postoffice, and glared in gloomy and majestic displeasure at the busy clerk registering a letter, before he sprang to the window and asked the stately customer what he wished. The great man did not answer for several moments. He gazed steadily and impressively over the clerk's head, and then asked, in ponderous tones:

"Is there any one here-r-re—who attends to business?"

The embarrassed clerk blushed, faltered for a moment, then, recovering himself, said, with characteristic and national cheerfulness becoming an official of the republic:

"I will see, sir."

And he disappeared. He went into another department, tortured a carrier with an original conundrum and heard a good story in the mailing-room, and came back.

"Yes, sir," he said to the great one; there are, in addition to myself, three clerks in the letter department, one in the mailing-room, four carriers, three route agents, the mail-driver and a janitor."

"Ah-h-h! I am glad there are so many. I may, in all that number, find one who is at his post."

And then he looked as impressive as a Special Agent, and was silent for three minutes, while the impassive clerk awaited his orders, and impatient men behind fidgeted and grumbled. Finally the great man said, with deep solemnity:

"I wish one three-cent stamp."

The clerk tore off the stamp and held it, waiting for the consideration. The great man made a somewhat longer pause than usual; he felt in his various vest pockets; he gradually lost his look of impressive rebuke, his chest caved in, and he assumed the aspect of an ordinary frail mortal, and he said:

"Ah—the fact is—I'm sure—ah—in short, I find that I have carelessly left my purse at home. Can you kindly—"

The passive clerk, with the faintest suggestion of triumph in his eye, waved the great man aside with:

"Sorry for you, sir, but the clerk who sells on credit is not in. What does the next man want?"

And we felt so good to see how that clerk was taken down by the dignified man that he went away and laughed for a week.—Exchange.

An Operatic Troupe in High Feather.

An extraordinary public entertainment has been produced in Lima, Peru, by an Italian named Contarini, who proposes to carry his exhibition to Europe. He has taught and trained, by dint of great patience and perseverance, an opera company, made up of thirty parrots and paroquets, who perform two of Bellini's operas, "Norma" and "Sonnambula," on a miniature stage, with full chorus and recitative. The director and manager accompanies the artists on a piano-harmonium, and the perfection with which each bird sings his part and the excellence of the chorus are prodigious. The debut of this lyrico-ornithological company in "Norma" was attended by the wealth and fashion of Lima. When the parrot that sang the contralto finished the allegro in the "Salutation to the Moon," such was the enthusiasm, the shouting, and the applause at hearing a bird sing the "Casta Diva" that the bird company, affrighted, took flight and sought refuge among the side-scenes. This interrupted the performance for fully a quarter of an hour, and Signor Contarini had to tranquilize the "artists" by giving them bread soaked in wine. Thenceforth the expressions of approbation were moderated, in order not to spoil the play. It aprears that the bird artists have now become accustomed to the applause. The correctness and propriety with which they give certain parts of the opera are wonderful. The primo tenore possesses all the airs and graces of the school of Mario, and the ladies of Lima have named the prima donna Patti.

Cushing's Vitality.

"Caleb Cushing, vitally considered," says the Louisville Courier-Journal, "is a cast-iron edition of Leslie Combs, and everybody in Kentucky knows that Leslie Combs doesn't mean to die at all. Why, Caleb Cushing is not more than half as old as Dr. Graham, and Dr. Graham walks ten miles and works ten hours a day, and is younger than half the young rascals in Louisville who waste their sweetness upon the desert air of ball-rooms, billiard-rooms and lager-beer saloons. Leslie Combs will never die. Dr. Graham will never die. Caleb Cushing will never die. They are sprung from the same generic stratum, which is eternal. The Republican majority in the Senate need entertain no apprehensions in that direction. Caleb Cushing will live to write an obituary notice of his old friend Ben Butler, and to pronounce a superb eulogium over the remains of Gen. Grant. He will live, as John Bell once facetiously said of himself, a perpetual legacy to the American people, surviving the ravages of time."

About Hydrophobia.

In his late work on the "Influence of the Mind upon the Body," Dr. Luke supports the hypothesis that hydrophobic symptoms are often developed without previous inoculation. In illustration, he relates a notable instance of a physician of Lyons, who, having assisted in the dissection of several victims of the disorder, imagined that he himself had become inoculated. On attempting to drink, he was seized with spasm of the pharynx, and in this condition roamed about the streets for three days. At length his friends succeeded in convincing him of the groundlessness of his apprehension, and he at once recovered. Dr. Marx, a German physician, writing to the Clinic, regards hydrophobia as a morbid affection of the imagination induced by fear, and, in support of his opinion, cites some interesting cases which persons unaware of the superstition have escaped the spasm.

THE YEOMANRY.

Progress of the Grange in the Northwestern States.

Growth of the Order in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan and Kansas
—What Has Been Done
and is Being Done.

WISCONSIN.

Origin and Progress of the Patrons—Address of Grand Master Cochrane.

OSHKOSH, WIS., Jan. 27.—The organization known as the Patrons of Husbandry is rapidly spreading among the rural classes of the country; its subordinate granges are daily being instituted in States and Territories where a twelvemonth ago, even the name of the order was scarcely known to a score of yeomen. Hundreds of thousands are to-day joining in its rallying watchword of "Down with monopoly," and glory in the honest titles of Patrons and the Grange.

In many a rural district where church facilities were few, and neighborly communion was frequently a term unknown, where naught but the district election brought each rustic from his self-imposed hermitage, and the women were drudged week in and year out, with but little to cheer beyond the unenlivening "chat" of their "better" halves, the grange to-day has wrought a miracle. Now, upon the common floor of the grange hall, where the cheery terms of "brother" and "sister" are the only greetings, the stern labors of daily life are forgotten for the nonce; local prejudices and common jealousies are dispelled; men and women learn that there are others in the world besides themselves, and fully as deserving of the Creator's blessings, and their sympathies. The result is, that nearly a million of men and women are better and truer for the advent of the grange; and, as a consequence, the world is better for the order having existed, even were it to die to-morrow.

But, looking beyond this great and enobling feature of the order, we find the influence and power of the movement almost without limit, needing only strong minds and ready hands at the wheel to guide its course in the proper channel. We are informed by statisticians that about three-fifths of the population of the United States are engaged in rural pursuits; yet, notwithstanding the great preponderance of the farming class, it has ever been held down, politically and financially, by the minority. The reasons are simple. The yeomen, like a broken horse, knew not their strength, and were unorganized, while, on the other hand, the minority, being organized, was the stronger element of the two. The order of Patrons affords a means for a hitherto incongruous mass to unite under a well and truly-organized system.

Although one of the latest of the Western States to strike hands with its sisters in the movement, Wisconsin claims and is awarded a prominent place in the councils of the order. It might be well, at this point, before enlarging on its work in our State, to give a short sketch of the history of the grange in Wisconsin.

As early as the latter part of 1870, a Dr. Burnham was commissioned by the National Grange to organize subordinate granges in the State of Wisconsin. The order was then comparatively unknown to the people of the country, and then only through some semi-occasional straw in the weekly press. Hence the work of organization progresses slowly indeed. Deputy Burnham managed, however, to organize a few—scarcely a dozen—subordinate granges; most of them in the sandy wastes of Waushara and Portage counties. In the summer of 1871, a meeting was held at Plainfield, Waushara county, at which a State grange was organized; or rather partly organized, for the system then in vogue seemed to be imperfect in the extreme. Dissensions then arose among the State officials; the deputies proved incompetent, and failing to see good in the organization, the work was voluntarily suspended. In July, 1872, General Deputy J. C. Abbott, of Iowa, was sent to resuscitate the order in Wisconsin, if possible, because we would have quit the work disheartened had not one soliatry grange (Forward, No. 5, of this city) volunteered to reorganize, which it did in the following month. Although but three of its original thirteen members were sufficiently interested to take hold of the matter, the deputy was encouraged, and from that nucleus the work spread until to-day, 18 months from that time, the subordinate granges in the State number 310, with a total membership of nearly 19,000 souls.

Grand Master Cochrane, in his address to the State Grange, says:

"On the 19th day of October, 1872, the State Grange of Wisconsin was organized in Portage City. At that time there were twenty-six granges in the State.

"A subsequent meeting was held on the 10th day of December following, at Ripon, when the by-laws were adopted, which provide for the annual meetings being held on the third Tuesday of January. At this, the second session of the State Grange, there are, perhaps, 325 subordinate granges in the State, with a membership of not less than from 15,000 to 20,000, being an increase of nearly 300 granges since our organization, a period of scarcely fifteen months. With a view to the probable increase next year, I would call your attention to the necessity of making a change in the basis of representation of the State Grange, by reducing it to a reasonable limit, experience, in other States, having proved the present liberal representation to be not only very expensive, but unwieldy.

"On the 23d of July last, an unauthorized call having been issued to the Grange of the State to take part in a convention designed for political action, I deemed it my duty to warn the order against being committed to partisan political action, and subsequently called the Masters of the subordinate granges to meet with the Executive Committee at Watertown to prevent serious consequences and declare the position of the order in respect to such action. We have reason to think that the meeting resulted to the benefit of the order. It is quite clear, however, that the liberty taken by individual members of subordinate granges to constitute themselves a council to call conventions of a political tendency is contrary to the spirit of Article 12 of the Constitution, and if permitted would demoralize the order. And there would seem to be a necessity for some action of the National Grange at its next session, which would not only define the restrictions within which the order should be confined, by amending Article 12, but also provide for enforcing discipline in this respect."

Some time ago a petition was addressed by the Wisconsin Grangers to Congress, setting forth that increased facilities for transportation had become a national necessity, and asking that the Federal Government undertake the improvement of the great water routes of the country. It was expressly stated that the petitioners did not desire to urge anything upon Congress that it had not full authority to do. The express demands were the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers and the mouth of the Mississippi, besides the completion of the public works already begun at other points on that river. This petition was supplemented by a circular, addressed to all the Wisconsin Congressmen by the Executive Committee of the State Grange, asking them what course they would adopt in regard to these demands. Responses have been received from Senators Carpenter and Howe and Representative Rusk, giving a general acquiescence to the proposed improvements, and a promise of co-operation. The other Wisconsin Representatives have been silent. In the meantime, Congress has taken no action, nor have the Wisconsin Congressmen, looking to the consummation of the farmers' demands. After pointing out these facts, Mr. Cochrane concludes:

"There is but one conclusion to be arrived at from this want of attention to our request, and that conclusion is one that is now generally accepted as correct all over the country. That so far as regards the people themselves, and their representatives, the connection is broken from the date of election.

"The representatives are masters of the situation, and assume an arrogant irresponsibility well indicated in the neglect alluded to.

"There is a seriousness of aspect about this state of things which calls for earnest action, and I particularly call your attention to it.

"The necessity which obliged the present universal demand for cheap transportation has not been without its lesson, nor should the examples afforded by the municipal corruptions of the country be without their warning.

"There is an important bearing upon our interests connected with the subject. In my judgment there is no other that demands, at this time, a more decided expression from this order.

"It is seen that power delegated by the people to their representatives is made to react against themselves, and they are obliged to battle with the creatures of their own creation for their rights.

"It is not alone the question of cheap transportation that should absorb our interest. We should look deeper into causes and effects. Our material interests are dependent, in a greater or less degree, upon the action of our Representatives in Congress. We must not lose sight of the fact that although the people at large might not object to the expenditure of public treasure for purposes of utility that when such expenditures are managed so as to accrue to private benefit, the intent is perverted, the people insulted and robbed.

"The privileges which the people have granted to railroad corporations have become instruments of oppression. By the law of self-preservation the producers of the country are compelled to look for a remedy. All they demand is simple justice; an equal chance. But they cannot longer consent to be taxed at will by soulless corporations. The law has given these creatures of the people this power. We now appeal for relief from their avaricious grasp. Railroad property has also been relieved from bearing its just share of the expenses of the Government. Equal taxation demands that this property be assessed and taxed at the same rate that other property is assessed and taxed. The law is made to sanction rates of interest for the use of money in this State at least twice as large as the whole business of the people can be made to pay. Why should capital be invested by law with those extraordinary privileges and advantages over commerce and labor? These abuses are of long standing. They have gradually crept into the body politic. To suggest remedies require careful, intelligent, patient thought and deliberation. While we firmly refuse to submit to a continued invasion of our rights, let us commend our cause to the best judgment of the people of the State by respecting the rights of others."

MINNESOTA.

Growth of the Order—The State Agency and the Purchasing System—What Has Been Accomplished.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 26.—Although to Minnesota belongs the honor of leading off in the grange movement, it was not until last year that the influence of the order began to be felt, and a systematic effort was made to reap some of the benefits that it was designed to confer upon the producing class. At a meeting of the Executive Committee that year, J. S. Denman, of Winona, was appointed State Agent for the purchase of agricultural machinery and such other supplies as might be desired by members of the order. That gentleman at once opened a correspondence with manufacturers throughout the country, and took other steps to establish a purchasing system from first hands. Unfortunately opposition to the action of the Executive Committee in making the appointment arose in the order, but happily this was removed by the full State Grange indorsing both the office and appointee. Mr. Denman has now made his headquarters at Winona, where he has a warehouse and yards covering an entire block of ground. He is paid 2 per cent. on all purchases, not to exceed $1,500 per annum, all received over that amount to be turned over to the treasury of the State Grange. For a faithful discharge of the duties of his office he has given bonds in the sum of $25,000. The plan of purchases embraces local agents appointed by the County Councils. These local agents solicit orders in their respective counties for machinery, dry goods, groceries, etc., being allowed a commission of 5 per cent. They are also allowed to take orders for parties outside the order, charging them an additional 5 per cent. These local agents have arrangements for purchasing dry goods, groceries, etc., at wholesale prices. There are also grange stores in most of the chief county towns, elected by the County Council, at which members can purchase at a reduction from regular prices. Orders for machinery are sent to the State Agent, through whom all such purchases are to be made. He has already contracted for furnishing all kinds of farm machinery at an average discount from the ruling prices of last season of 33⅓ per cent. In this arrangement is not included, the Marsh and Elward Harvesters, the McCormack and Champion Reapers, and a number of Illinois manufactured plows, heretofore largely used in the State, but it is claimed that equally good machines will be furnished at this reduction. On sewing machines a still larger reduction has been secured, machines that retailed last year at $65 being supplied through the agency at $30. Last year it is estimated there was paid out in this State, for farm machinery alone, in the neighborhood of $4,000,000. All this purchased through the agency, at the discount stated, and we have a saving to the purchasers, the producing class, of over $1,000,000.

While the plans for purchasing machinery and supplies seem to have been arranged so as to produce the best results to the purchaser, but little has as yet been done to enable the producer to get by the warehousemen and station agents in getting his produce to market. Some few warehouses have been erected, and still a few others leased by Grangers, who operate them through one of their number, but this plan of operations has neither been in operation long enough, or become general enough, to judge intelligently of its results. One of these agents reports a gain to those operating through him of from 3 to 5 cents a bushel on wheat, made by selling direct to the Milwaukee and Chicago operators, and shipping direct in through cars. This, however, may be an exceptional case, and, therefore, it is hardly just to judge of future results by the experiment in this direction. The matter of manufactories is also attracting much attention in grange circles, though as yet but little has been done in this direction. On the Streight river near Faribault, Rice county, an eight-run flouring mill was built last season by an incorporated company of Patrons. There are also two or three smaller grange mills in other localities, and still others are contemplated another season. Of the workings of these mills no reports have been made. The benefit to accrue to the Grangers, however, is easily deducible, it being a well-established fact that our millers, while paying from 3 to 5 cents more per bushel for wheat than agents for Eastern purchasers, are uniformly prosperous. With both the profits, that of the miller, and the increased price realized for his wheat, the Granger must reap a good return from his investment. The subject of starting an agricultural machine manufactory in the State has been under consideration among leading members of the order, and it is not improbable that the initiative of such a movement will soon be taken.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

The order in this State was never in a more flourishing condition than now. Reports show that new granges are being organized at the rate of about two per week, and many new members are being added to old ones. Much of this success is due to Secretary Paist, elected Secretary on the organization of the State Grange, and continually up to the present time he has, by his prompt response to those desiring information, and his zeal in promoting the interests of the order, and in forming new granges, exerted a powerful influence for good.

MICHIGAN.

Spread of the Farmers' Movement in the Wolverine State.

SCHOOLCRAFT, Mich., Jan. 27.—There are in the State of Michigan at present about 9,000 members of the order of Patrons of Husbandry, divided into about 200 local granges, the average membership of each being 45. The order is comparatively new in the State, but has made rapid progress since its first organization. There are two State Deputies engaged in the organization of local granges, who are working in the eastern part of the State, organizing from ten to a dozen granges weekly.

As yet the grange has not been felt in politics. Of course politics are foreign to the purposes of the organization, but of course there are questions of public policy on which the Grangers will have a common interest, such as the regulation of rates of transportation on railroads and other kindred matters. On these the Grangers will probably unite.

Arrangements are now in process of perfection by which the State Agent will open warehouses for the accommodation of members. He will be authorized to sell produce left with him, and after deducting a small commission, will be able to return a larger price to the producer than could be obtained from the middlemen. He is also to purchase agricultural and domestic machinery from the manufacturers, from whom a considerable reduction is expected. The Patrons will thus receive their implements at wholesale rates, effecting a saving on some articles of from 20 to 33 per cent. There is also some talk of establishing a number of grist mills and agricultural implement manufactories in the State, to be under the watch and care of the Patrons.

Altogether the Patrons are making considerable progress, and at no distant day they will be a power in the land.

The address of Worthy Master Brown before the State Grange was a very able effort, full of good thoughts, encouragement, and sound advice. He alluded in glowing terms to the growth of the order, which he gave in detail. He dwelt upon the advantages of associated labor. He said there must have been some recognized necessity for this movement, which has made its growth so rapid, so unprecedented. The spread of the principles of the order amounted to an uprising of the people—the agricultural people—who recognized in the movement a want which had long been felt but unexpressed. He alluded to the transportation and other questions. He said that here in Michigan the farmers had, perhaps, little to complain of, but our sister States of the West had been under the domination of monopolies; and he believed it was our duty to aid our brother, everywhere. He believed that the created should not be greater than the creator; that the source of all laws were the people, and they are the ones to make regulations in respect to commerce, etc. He recommended that the delegate elected to the National Grange be instructed to do all in his power to bring about certain-named changes in the constitution of the National Grange, and recommended a variety of changes in the by-laws of the State Grange.

KANSAS.

How the Grangers are Purifying the State.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 26.—In no State have the results of this movement been more surprising; in none, certainly, has there been a more crying need of reform. In proportion to population and resources, no State exceeds Kansas in the power of its monopolies, and in the political influence of its great corporations. Nowhere has this power been more effectively and unscrupulously employed for the control of legislation. In the light of past developments, it is scarcely necessary to add that we may fairly claim precedence in political corruption, as in many other respects.

There has long been a wide-spread feeling that some check must be put upon these corporate influences; that the undoubted right of the State to control them must be exercised in the interest of its citizens; and that their facilities for shaping and thwarting legislation must be curtailed. This prevalent sentiment has hitherto failed of its purpose through the want of organized and united action. Indeed, "Anti-Railroad" majorities have frequently been chosen to the Legislature; but they have generally turned out to be the most abject servitors of the railroads. Whenever any restraining legislation has been perfected, it has signally failed of execution, and has remained a dead letter on the statute-books. A law of the State at this hour fixes the rate of fare at a certain maximum figure, and makes it a misdemeanor for any railway officer to receive any sum in excess. Yet that statute has been entirely desregarded. More than that, legislation has been shaped especially to encourage railroad companies to resist and delay the payment of taxes.

More offensive, if not more injurious, consequences have followed the open and shameless interference in our elections, great and small, popular and legislative. To the active interposition of the railway-strikers our municipalities owe much of the burden of bonded indebtedness which is crushing them, amounting in the aggregate to $13,000,000, or $4,000,000 more than all the roads of the State are valued at under our infamous Railroad-Assessment law.

How to correct these and other glaring evils has long been the conundrum with which our people have wrestled. It has been solved. The Grangers have furnished the remedy. The State Grange was organized only last year, and already its ramifications extend through every section of the State. Nearly 1,000 subordinate Granges are in operation. In the canvass of last fall, quietly, without the blowing of trumpets, and in the face of the ridicule of the entire party-press, the Grangers organized their forces, marched to the polls, and elected the Legislature, if not an absolute anti-Republican majority, at least so nearly so as to assure the accomplishment of much beneficial legislation. If this anticipation shall prove illusory, there will be no room for doubt as to the composition of the next Legislature.

Fashion Notes.

EMBROIDERED waist belts are becoming fashionable.

DRESS so that none will remember what you wear.

BONNETS are undergoing a decided change, and a change for the better.

GUIPURE lace squares for the neck are a pretty finish to house dresses.

FASHIONABLE modistes predict that the polonaise is "booked" for another season.

TARLETANS is no longer used for evening toilettes. Nobody appears to be sorry.

A TEMPORARY fashion was that of discarding corsets. Very few ladies had the courage to conform to it, we think.

IT is a subject of frequent comment that New York ladies wear less jewelry this season than for many years past.

LEATHER muffs have been introduced this winter, and to some extent are fashionable among would-be-conspicuous young ladies.

IT is quite the correct thing among the ultra fashionable ladies to wear miniature bows of bright colored ribbon in the hair.

THE new Grecian head bands are of jet or ivory, cut something in the battlement style, and are intended to surmount the coronet braid.

THE beautiful and expensive silver fox fur is now so cleverly imitated in every way that even experts are puzzled to detect the genuine.

THE enormous fans used early in the season for dress occasions has been superseded by the "Pompadour," taking its shape from the name.

SCANT skirts prevail for the streets. This fashion does well enough for a time with ladies of good figure, but an old or passe woman in the garb looks absolutely disgusting.

A WREATH of small buds forms the sole face trimming of the bonnets most recently imported from Paris. The color of the buds should correspond with the complexion of the wearer.

VELVET picture frames—which have long been in use abroad—are coming into use here. Artists assert that they detract from the beauty of a painting, and are only suitable to frame portraits.

A Contented Farmer.

Once upon a time, Frederick, King of Prussia, surnamed "Old Fritz," took a ride, and espied an old farmer plowing his acre by the wayside, and cheerily singing his melody.

"You are well off, old man," said the king. "Does this acre belong to you, on which you so industriously labor?"

"No, sir," replied the farmer, who knew not that it was the king; I am not so rich as that, I plow for wages."

"How much do you get a day?" inquired the king.

"Eight groschen," (about twenty cents,) said the farmer.

"That is not much," replied the king; "can you get along with this?"

"Get along, and have something left."

"How is that?"

The farmer smiled, and said—

"Well, if I must tell you, two groschen are for myself and wife; with two I pay my old debts; two I lend away; and two I give away for the Lord's sake."

"This is a mystery which I cannot solve," replied the king.

"Then I will solve it for you," said the farmer.

"I have two old parents at home who kept me when I was weak and needed help; and now that they are weak and need help I keep them. This is my debt toward which I pay two groschen a day. The third pair of groschen, which I lend away, I spend for my children, that they may receive Christian instruction. This will come handy to me and wife when we get old. With the last two groschen I maintain two sick sisters, whom I would not be compelled to keep; this I give for the Lord's sake."

The king, well pleased with his answer, said,—

"Bravely spoken, old man. Now I will also give you something to guess.

"Have you ever seen me before?"

"Never," said the farmer.

"In less than five minutes you shall see fifty times and carry in your pocket fifty of my likenesses."

"This is a riddle which I cannot unravel," said the farmer.

"Then I will do it for you," replied the king.

Thrusting his hand into his pocket, and counting him fifty brand-new gold pieces into his hand, stamped with his royal likeness, he said to the astonished farmer, who knew not what was coming,—

"The coin is genuine, for it also comes from our Lord God, and I am his paymaster. I bid you adieu."

THE JUDGE'S STORY.

"I don't see how I could have done more for him than I did; but still the man should not have been punished—he should have been acquitted."

With these words the Judge awoke to the consciousness of having a fellow-traveler: and then, as if some explanation of his remark would be in order, he went on:

"We had a very interesting trial in Austin last week. Tom Carberry—Irish Tom, he is called—was tried for murder. I defended him, and never struggled harder for a client in my life. For a week before, and throughout the trial, I worked night and day to look up testimony, and to present the case to the Jury in the best possible light. I consulted with all the attorneys not engaged for the prosecution. We got him off with three years in the penitentiary; but he ought not to have been punished—he should have been acquitted."

The fellow-passenger querried as to the circumstances attending the alleged murder, and the Judge answered:

"They were very peculiar, and that is the reason why the trial was so very interesting. A woman up in Montana, who never saw Tom Carberry, thought that he had done her a great wrong; and so, when she was asked, as the phrase is, to take up with a new man, she named her terms:—'Kill Tom Carberry, of Austin, Nevada.'"

"But I never saw nor heard of the man," said the Montana aspirant.

"Nevertheless," said she, "kill Tom Carberry."

"It is the depth of winter," was objected, "and we are hundreds of miles from Austin. The journey cannot now be made."

"Kill him in the spring," said the unrelenting woman.

"Yes," said he, and the contract was sealed.

"With the opening of travel in the spring there arrived at Salt Lake City by the Montana Stage, an individual who freely announced that he was on his way to kill Carberry. Salt Lake City is a long way from Austin, but the friendships of border men span much greater distances. Tom was quickly advised of the approach of his visitor, but he took no steps either to get out of his way or to be especially prepared to see company. He was then employed at the Keystone Mill, nine miles from town, and he stayed there nearly a whole week after he knew this Montana chap was in Austin. You see, Tom is a peaceable man, and he didn't want any difficulty. Most men would have come, and got the affair off their hands."

The listener entertained doubts at this point, but saying nothing, the Judge proceeded:

"Saturday evening, just as usual with him, Tom came to the city, and after getting shaved and fixed up for his holiday, he went around to the saloons, where many of the people of mining towns spend their leisure, to meet his friends. It wasn't long before he encountered the Montana fellow, who began at once, in Tom's hearing, to make insulting remarks."

Here the listener interrupted with: "Why did he make insulting remarks? If he had made a long journey solely for the purpose of killing Tom, why didn't he shoot him off-hand?"

"Because," said the Judge, "that would have been murder, and he would have been dangling from an awning beam in less than fifteen minutes. Killing is a very difficult matter. When two men get into a fight, and all is fair between them, and one kills the other, community don't ordinarily seem to feel much concerned on the subject. Under such circumstances, the only way for Montana, was to provoke Tom to a quarrel, and lead up to a fight. But Tom wasn't disposed to gratify him—he wouldn't take any notice—didn't seem to hear; but repeatedly left one saloon to go to another, just to keep out of the way. Montana followed him up, until, at last, standing right before Tom, he jumped up about two feet from the floor, and came down with a heavy jar, and said, 'I'm Chief!' Even this Tom didn't resent—he only put his hands over his face and wept! Fact, sir; the tears actually flowed, until his best friends thought he was an arrant coward; and when he got up and went away to his room to bed, there wasn't one of them to say a good word for him.

"Montana enjoyed a season of glory. He had said, 'I'm Chief!' in a public place, and no man had dared to accept the challenge.

"The next morning Tom was standing on the sidewalk, when Montana came along and they met face to face. Tom spoke to him in a very quaint, low tone, saying:

"Stranger, you used me pretty rough last night, but I don't bear malace. Jest say that you'd been drinkin' and didn't mean it, and we'll say no more about it."

Montana answered: "No apologies in mine."

"Well," said Tom, "you needn't apologise. Come into the saloon and chink glasses with me, and we'll let the matter drop."

Then Montana said: "Tom Carberry, either you're generous, or, else you're a coward. I don't think you are cowardly, an' if I'd known you at the start, it's most likely I wouldn't ha' waded in. But the matter can't be let drop, for there's hundreds o' people in my section an' between here who know that I came here to kill you; so there's but two ways—we must fight, or you must run. If you'll run, it'll be just as good to me as to fight.'

"Tom's almost suppliant bearing disappeared on the instant, and he said: 'Stranger I ain't much in the habit o' runnin', an' if we're to fight, we may as well have it out now as any time. Are you heeled?'

"Tom asked this question because we have a law against carrying concealed weapons, which is regarded at such hours as people think they will have no use for their arms, and disregarded at all others

The answer was: "No; I left my revolver with the bar-keeper o' the Exchange."

"Get it," said Tom, "I'll wait for you here."

"The Exchange was in a corner building across a street which came in at right angles to the sidewalk where they were standing. Montana went in at the front door, and came out at the side on the cross street, hoping to steal up and 'get the drop' on Tom, but this was not so easy Tom was wide awake—he had crossed the main street to guard against surprise; so when Montana poked his pistol round the corner and followed it with just enough of his head to take sight, Carberry was not in range. In a moment their eyes met, and the shooting began. Tom curled down close to the road-bed, to present the smallest possible area as a mark, and because it is comparatively difficult to hit an object lying on the ground. Montana sheltered himself somewhat behind a low row of sacks of potatoes lying on the edge of the sidewalk, and partly behind a small awning post. This was a fatal error, for with a tall post for a mark it is the easiest thing in the world to make a line-shot.

"I am making a long story of the shooting, which in reality was soon over. They fired three shots apiece in as many seconds. Tom's third ball passed through Montana's heart, and he was dead before his head rebounded on the brick pavement. Carberry surrendered himself at once, and was kept in jail until his trial came off, although bail to any amount was offered."

After a pause, the Judge added: "I don't see how I could have done more for him than I did; but the man should not have been punished—he should have been acquitted; and he would have been but for one circumstance, which prejudiced the court and jury against him."

"What was the circumstance so prejudicial?" questioned the listener.

"The Montana chap was the fourth man Tom had killed in Austin," answered the Judge innocently.

The Snake-Bitten Dutchman.

ANON.

Some years ago, near the town of Reading, Berks county, Pennsylvania, there lived a cozy old farmer, named Sweighoffer—of German descent, and accent too, as his speech will indicate. Old man Sweighoffer had once served as a member in the legislature, and was therefore "no fool;" and as he long commanded a volunteer corps of rustic militia, he should hardly be supposed inclined to cowardice. His son Peter was his only son, a strapping lad of seventeen; and upon old Peter and young Peter devolved the principal cares and toils of the old gentleman's farm, now and then assisted by the old lady and her two bouncing daughters—for it is very common in that State to see the women and girls at work in the fields—and upon extra occasions by some hired hands

Well, one warm day in haying time, old Peter and young Peter were hard at it in the meadow, when the old man drops his scythe and bawls out—

"O, mine Gott, Peter!"

"What's de matter, fader?" answers the son, straightening up and looking at his sire,

"Oh, mine Gott, Peter!" again cried the old fellow.

"Donder," echoes young Peter, hurrying up to the old man.

"O mine Gott, der shnake bite mine leg!"

If any thing in particular was capable of frightening young Peter, it was snakes; for once he had nearly crippled himself for life by trampling upon a crooked stick, which cramped his ankle, and so horrified the young man he liked to have fallen through himself.

At the word snake, young Peter fell back, nimbly as a wire-drawer, and bawled out in turn—

"Where is der shnake?"

"Up my trowsis, Peter—O, mine Gott!"

"O, mine Gott!" echoed Peter, junior, "kill him, fader, kill him."

"No-a, no-a, he kill me, Peter; come—come quick—get off my trowsis!"

But Peter the younger's cowardice overcame his filial affection, while his fear lent strength to his legs, and he started like a scared locomotive to call the old burly Dutchman, who was in a distant part of the field, to give his father a lift with the snake.

Old Jake, the farmer's assistant, came bounding along as soon as he heard the news, and passing along the fence whereon Peter and his boy had hung their "linsey woolsey" vests, Jake grabbed one of the garments, and hurried to the old man Peter who still managed to keep on his pins, although he was quaking and trembling like an aspen leaf in a June gale of wind.

"O, mine Gott! Come, come quick, Yacob. He bite me all to pieces—here up mine leg."

Old Jake was not particularly sensitive to fear, but few people, young or old, are dead to alarm when a "pizenous" reptile is about. Gathering up the stiff, dry stalks of a stalwart weed, old Jake told the boss to stand steady, and he would at least stun the snake by a rap or two, if he did not kill her stone dead; and the old man Peter, less loth to have legs broken than to be bitten to death by a snake, designated the spot to strike, and old Jake let him have it. The first blow broke the weed and knocked old Sweighoffer off his pegs and into a hay-cock—cobim.

"Oh!" roared old Peter, "you broke mine leg and de shnake's gone!"

"Vere? vere?" cried old Jake, moving briskly about, and scanning very narrowly the ground he stood upon.

"Never mind him, Yacob; help me up. I'll go home."

"Put on your vhest, den; here it is," said the old crout-eater, gathering up his boss and trying to get the garment upon his lumpy back. The moment old Peter made this effort, he grew livid in the face—his hair stood on end, "like the quills upon the frightful porcupine," as Mrs. Partington observes—he shivered—he shook—his teeth chattered—and his knees they knocked a staccato accompaniment.

"Oh, Yacob, carry me home! I'm dead as nits!"

"Vat! Ish nodder shnake in your troushers?"

"No-a—look, I'm swelt all up! Mine vhest won't go on my back. O, O, mine Gott!"

"Donder and blixen!" cried old Jake as he took the same conclusion, and with might and main the old man, scared into a most wonderful feat of physical activity and strength, lugged and carried the boss some quarter or half a mile to the house.

Young Peter had shinned it home at the earliest stage of the dire proceedings, and so alarmed the girls that they were in high state when they saw the approach of the good old dad and his assistant.

Old Peter was carried in, and began to die as natural as life, when in comes the old lady, in a great bustle, and wanted to know what was going on. Old Peter, in the last gasp of agony and weakness, opened his eyes and feebly pointed to his leg. The old woman ripped up the pantaloons, and out fell a small thistle top, and at the same time considerable of a scratch was made visable.

"Call dis a shnake! Bah!" says the old woman.

"O, but I'm pizened to death, Molly! See, I'm all pishen—mine vhest—O dear, mine vhest not come over mine body!"

"Haw, haw, haw!" roared the old woman, "Vat a fool! You got Peter's vhest on—haw, haw, haw!"

"Bosh!" roars old Peter, shaking off death's icy fetters at one surge, and jumping up. "Bosh, Yacob, vat an old fool you musht be, to say I vash shnakebite? Go 'bout your bishness, gals. Peter bring me some beer."

The old woman saved Peter's life.

"When I think of the bummers that left Boston in 1849 to find their fortunes in California, and then hear Bret Harte call 'em Argonauts," said a gentleman after the lecture, "I must award to Bret Harte the credit of refinin' whatever he teches."

THE OLD CLOCK IN THE CORNER.

The leafless trees are brown and bare;
The [illegible] through the frosty air,

With the wintry wind they sport and play,
As it wearily whistles the night away.

The time-worn clock in the corner stands,
With faded dial and rusted hands.

With ceaseless motion its pendulum swings,
And this is the doleful song it sings:

Tick—tick—tick! There are smiles and tears
In the mournful tale of a hundred years.

The voice of Memory, soft and low,
Whispers to-night of the long ago.

There are friends you loved, there are hopes most dear,
That are dead and gone with the old, old year.

Spiders have woven their silken thread
In the dingy corner overhead.

'Mid the endless dust of the busy day
That hands now pulseless have swept away.

Thoughts and dreams of the old and new
Pass before me in fond review.

I have watched the play of a rosy child;
And the tender gaze of a youth that smiled

In raptures over a picture fair
And a tiny curl of golden hair.

I have seen him look with manly pride
On the fair, sweet face of his new-made bride.

I have heard an infant's plaintive cry;
And a careworn mother's weary sigh;

And an aged father, old and grey,
Talking of years that had gone away.

I have seen the shadowy pall and bier,
The lifeless form, and the mourner's tear;

And have heard these words, so often said,
Tenderly, over the dear ones dead:

Ashes to ashes and dust to dust—
Life is fleeting, and God is just.

O Memory, fond Memory! thou phantom of our woe!
Thou sweet reminder of the hopes and dreams of long ago!
Thou living shadow of the soul, that ever comes at will,
When human lips have ceased to speak, and human hearts are still.

JOHN OGDEN'S LAST BET.

John Ogden had contracted a very bad habit—a dangerous and a sinful habit. Had any one suggested to him a game of cards to be played for money, he would not have listened; and yet he was growing to be a gambler, notwithstanding. His sin was that of betting, and it had so grown upon him that he would bet upon the result of things most trivial or most grave. He was a young man, not more than eight-and-twenty, with a wife and two children—a wife true and loving, and children bright and good. And John was a good, kind husband, and an even-tempered, indulgent father. He was book-keeper in a mercantile house, upon a salary more than sufficient for all his proper wants.

John Ogden's betting had come to be a matter of emphasis and determination. The habit had so fastened itself upon him that he could bet off-hand, and pay a loss, or take a winning, as a matter of course.

"Susan," he said, one evening, with radiant face, "I have won fifty dollars to-day."

"How?" asked the wife, with a shadow upon her face.

"I bet fifty dollars that Popkins would be elected over Shumway, and Popkins was elected handsomely."

"Whom did you bet with, John?"

"With Charles Ashcroft."

"And you took his fifty dollars?"

"Certainly—why shouldn't I? He fairly lost."

"And you, I suppose, fairly won?"

"Of course I did."

"And do you think Charles Ashcroft was able to bear the loss?"

"That isn't my look-out."

"I am sorry, John. I wish you would put away that habit. Only evil can come of it."

"Pshaw!"

"Evil has already come, John. Your heart is growing callous and hard. Time was when you could not have taken fifty dollars from a poor and needy family without a feeling of shame and compunction."

"Hold on, Susan! I don't want another lecture. I know what I am up to. You don't know so much of the world as I do."

And with this, John Ogden took his hat and went out—went out like a coward, knowing that if he entered into argument with his wife, she would twist him into a labyrinth from which he could only escape by an angry bolt.

Half an hour later Peter Cartwright came in. He was a year or two older than John, and was Susan's cousin—only a cousin by blood, but as they had been brought up from early childhood together, they were like brother and sister in life and love. Peter sat down and chatted awhile, and found his cousin not so cheerful as usual.

"You are not well, Susan?"

"I'm well in body, Peter," but sore at heart."

"What is it?"

"I fear not to speak with you freely. I am worrying about John. His habit of betting is taking deeper and deeper root. To-day he has won fifty dollars from Charles Ashcroft on the result of an election. Last week he won forty dollars on the race-course. I know his temperament. He is headstrong and impulsive. Can you not see the danger?"

"Yes, Susan, I have seen it this long time, but have not dared to speak of it. If John were cold-blooded and calculating, he might occasionally bet with danger only of doing wrong to those from whom he won money, but as it is, with his impulsive, mercurial temperament, there is other danger."

"I wish you could influence him, Peter."

"I wish I could; but I fear he would not listen."

Cartwright took out his watch, and said he must be going. He had left a friend at the Ashton House, and must go back to him.

"I came down," he added, "to get John to call up with me. You remember Frank Powers?"

"Certainly," said Susan, with a brightening eye. "I was reading of him in the paper last night. He has been made a Colonel."

"Yes," returned Peter, "and has come home minus an arm, lost at Antietam."

"I should like to see him."

"He shall call. He will be glad, I know."

Peter had arisen and got as far as the door, when he stopped and turned.

"Susan," he said, "I have an idea. Isn't John saving up money with which to pay off the mortgage on his house?"

"Yes. He has almost enough. That mortgage is eleven hundred and fifty dollars, and he has a thousand of it in bank."

"Don't say anything to him that I have been here, and say nothing about Col. Powers."

"But—Pete—"

"Trust me, Susan. I think I see a way to give him a lesson. Hold your peace, and await the result."

On the following day Peter Cartwright met John Ogden in the store, and informed of the arrival of Col. Powers.

"And he wants to see you, old fellow. Will you go up with me this evening?"

"Certainly I will," replied John, gladly. "How is he?"

"Comfortable, considering. He has had a hard time of it, though. You knew he had lost an arm?"

"I heard of his being wounded at Antietam. And so the arm had to come off?"

"Yes."

"Which—"

"Excuse me John. I have an appointment to keep at the bank. I will call for you this evening.

"All right. I'll be ready."

And in the evening Peter called, and together the two went to the hotel. They found Col. Powers in his private room, seated in a big easy-chair, and looking somewhat pale and worn.

"Frank, my dear fellow, how are you?" cried John, advancing.

"John, old boy, I am glad to see you. You'll excuse my not rising. I am pretty well, but not so strong as I have been."

"Keep your seat, Frank. I'm glad to see you back alive; and I'm sure you'll pick up in time."

The empty coat-sleeve, dangling over the arm of the chair, was eloquent, and John's eyes moistened as he fixed his gaze upon it.

And yet the conversation flowed pleasantly after a time. The Colonel had much to tell, and his hearers were willing to listen.

John arose to depart first. He had told his wife that he should not be out late. Cartwright would remain a while longer.

On the day following this visit Peter and John met in the street close by the bank where the latter had come to deposit for his employers. Peter had evidently been waiting and watching.

"Are you going to lunch, John?"

"Yes. Will you come with me?"

"I will if you'll lunch with me."

"Any way."

The lunch-room was near at hand, and while they eat they talked of Frank Powers and his adventures, and also of his mishaps.

"He ought to be thankful, though," remarked Peter, "that it was his left arm that was taken instead of his right."

John Ogden looked up curiously.

"Eh, Peter?"

"I say, Frank ought to be thankful that they took his left arm instead of his right."

"You mean that for a joke?"

"How?"

"Why—Frank has lost his right arm, to be sure."

"You are mistaken, John. His right arm is safe and sound. It is the left that is gone."

"Peter, are you in earnest? Do you mean it?"

"Are you daft, John? Of course, I mean it!"

"Do you mean to say that Frank Powers has lost his left arm, and that his right arm is intact?"

"I do say exactly so."

John pressed the ends of his fingers upon his brow, and called up to mind the picture as he had seen it on the previous evening. He remembered just where the empty sleeve had dangled, and he remembered that the opposite arm had been whole.

"Peter," he finally said, slowly and emphatically, "Frank Powers has lost his right arm!"

"You are mistaken, John."

"Do you think so?"

"I know you are mistaken."

"I'd like to bet you something on it," said John, with a decisive gesture.

"I'll bet you anything you like, my dear fellow, so that you make it an object."

"And I'll bet anything you like," John answered.

"You ain't sure enough to bet a thousand dollars?"

"A thousand?"

"I thought it would shake your confidence in yourself," nodded Peter, with a smile.

John Ogden started to his feet, and brought his hand down with a slap upon the table.

"Dare you bet a thousand dollars, Peter!"

"Yes."

"You'll lose it."

"I am able."

"I'll go it! The bet is made. Will you hold here while I go and get the money?"

"Yes."

John hurried away to the bank and drew out his thousand dollars, and with it returned to the lunch-room flushed and excited. A mutual friend was called, to whom the case was stated.

"I bet a thousand dollars," said John, "that Colonel Frank Powers has lost his right arm, and that his left arm is whole."

"And I," said Peter, "bet the same amount that Colonel Frank Powers has lost his left arm, and that his right arm is whole."

The money was deposited in the hands of the mutual friend, with instructions that he should pay it to the winner. And then they agreed that the three should go at once to the hotel and there settle the matter.

Twelve months before this time John Ogden would not have bet so large a sum under any circumstances; but the habit had indeed grown upon him.

Arrived at the hotel the three were admitted to the colonel's presence.

"Ah, boys, I am glad to see you. I am feeling much better to-day. John, old fellow, I can get up for you now. How are you?"

And Col. Frank Powers arose, and extended his hand—his RIGHT HAND,—and when John felt its grasp he found it true flesh and blood, warm and pulsating! He staggered back with a groan.

"You will excuse us, Colonel," said Peter; "but John and I had a little dispute. He thought you had lost your right arm."

"O, no," returned Powers, smiling, "Thank Heaven, my right arm is spared me,"—extending his good right hand,—"but this poor stump is all that is left of its fellow," pointing to the empty sleeve that hung by his left side.

John got away as soon as he could. In the lower hall the two thousand dollars was paid over to Peter Cartwright.

"I am sorry you lost your money, John," the latter said, as he put the bank-notes into his pocket-book, "but I think I won it fairly."

"It's all right, Peter." And John tried to smile as he said so, but he could not do it.

A miserable man was John Ogden that afternoon; and more miserable was he when he went to his home in the evening. His wife asked him what was the matter, but he would not tell her; and when she pressed him he was angry. He could not—he dared not—tell her that the savings of years—the money that was to have paid for their precious home—had been swept away in a moment—swept away by an act of his own sin and folly.

That night he slept not a wink. On the following morning, pale and shaking, he started to go away from his home without his breakfast. On his door-step he was met by Cartwright's clerk, who handed him a sealed packet.

"It is from Mr. Cartwright, sir."

"Do you wait for an answer?"

"No, sir."

John went back into his house, and broke the seal, and opened the packet. He found within, one thousand dollars in bank notes, and a folded letter. He opened the letter, and read:

"DEAR JOHN—With this I send you back your thousand dollars. I won the money as honestly as gambling bets are often won, and yet I did not win it fairly. Frank and I deceived you on purpose. On your first visit his right arm was hidden beneath his coat, and his wooden left arm was strapped on. As he did not rise from his chair the deception was perfect. You found him on your second visit, as he really was, only the wooden arm had been laid aside.

"Forgive me, John, and believe that I had an aim in this, which God grant may be fulfilled. "PETER.

"P. S.—I should like that this subject should never be referred to between us. Please me in this, won't you? P."

"Dear John, what is it?"

Susan had come in, and as she spoke she put her arm around her husband's neck and kissed him. He returned the kiss.

"Not now, Susan," he said, huskily. "I will tell you some time."

"But you will come and eat some breakfast?"

"If you won't ask me any more questions—yes."

The blow had been a severe one, and the effects of the shock did not quickly pass away. But John Ogden revived in time; and when he told to his wife the secret of his troubles on that unhappy night, he was prepared to give her a great and lasting joy by adding that he had made his LAST BET.

The Great Lava Fields West of the Rocky Mountains.

Prof. Le Conte, of the California State University, considers the Cascade Mountain regions one of the most interesting fields for geological research on the earth. In connection with the great overflow of lava which deluged the territories of the Northwest in past ages, the Professor says: The principal point of eruption from the great central cauldron was at the Cascade Mountains, in Oregon, which are of themselves one solid mass of lava. From this center the lava overflowed a portion of Oregon, Washington Territory, all of Nothern California, and vast sections of Nevada, Montana and Idaho. The lava-flood covered an area of at least 200,000 square miles, as far as explored, and it would probably be found to extend over a surface of 200,000 square miles, as its limit northward had never been determined. The depth of the lava crust varied from upward of 3,000 feet in the Cascade and Blue Mountain region, to one and two hundred feet and less at remote points on the outer edge of the overflow. Where the tremendous gorge of the Columbia river cut through the lava bed it had a depth of 3,500 feet. The explorations of Prof. Le Conte had determined that the great lava flood pertained to a comparatively recent geological period, and he assigns the eruption to the latter part of the miocene, possiby extending to the post-tertiary. In the great canon of the Columbia river, between this immense layer of lava, he had discovered the petrified stumps of trees, beds of leaves, and all the evidences of a great forest once existing on a level corresponding with the present surface of the river. Above this forest came a drift period, and it was buried in a heavy layer of conglomerate before the overflow of 3,000 feet of lava.

Indian Territory.

A Washington telegram says: The organization of the Indian territory is being urged with great force by parties now in Washington from Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, and Texas. The Senators and Representatives from these States are said to be a unit in its favor. They urge the admission of white inhabitants as a necessity to secure the civilization of the Indian population. They do not urge the confiscation of the Indian lands for the use of white settlers, but insist that the surplus unoccupied lands ought to be surveyed and sold out, and the net proceeds paid over to the Indian owners. This plan, they say, would make the Indians of that Territory the richest people per capita on earth in available means, besides giving every head of an Indian family a homestead for himself and his descendants. Some of the Cherokees here, on the other hand, call it a huge land steal.

ONE of the stations on the Selma and Meridian railroad is named Cuba. Recently a train with an emigration agent and a party of colored men going West reached that point, and the brakeman put his head inside the door and shouted "Cuba!" One old colored man rose, and as his hair straitened out with sudden fear, said: "Dar, I know'd it! Heah we is in Cuba, an' dat 'ar white man's gwine to put us in de war or sell us 'fore day. I'se gwine from heah," and followed by about thirty others, he bolted off the train and into the woods, leaving the agent alone in his glory.

Ages of our Congressmen.

The united ages of 72 Senators are 3,130 years, or an average of 43 years and nearly 3 months each. The ages of 3 are not given. The actual years in the total of them given is 2,970 years, Cameron is 74, Dorsey, just over 31. There are 5 under 40 years, 26 over 40 and under 50, and a number from 50 to 59, while there are ten from 60 to 69, and 1 over 70. There are 15 ex-Governors, 18 ex-Representatives, 1 ex-Vice-President, 2 ex-Cabinet officers, 3 once Ministers abroad, 3 Presidential electors, 3 ex-Lieutenant Governors, and 15 who have seen military service. One of the Senatorial soldiers was a private, 7 Major-Generals (2 in the rebel service), and 4 Brigadiers (1 in the rebel army); 1 was a chaplin and another a surgeon. Of occupations among Senators, 36 are lawyers, 6 planters, 2 railroad presidents 4 who have been or are printers and editors, 1 lumber dealer, 1 civil engineer, 2 manufacturers, 5 merchants, 1 a miner in Nevada, and another a coal miner and banker. Two Senators have been regularly apprenticed to the carpenter's trade—Brownlow and Oglesby. Eight have held high judicial positions, 5 have been Chief Justices in their states. One Senator has held office ever since leaving college; 24 have received a collegiate, 19 an academic, and 17 a common school education. Pennsylvania claims 8 Senators, 3 of whom have "carpet-bagged" in the south and 3 others in the north, New York claims 6 and Massachusetts 5; Virginia and Maine claim as many.—Exchange.

The Ruins of Jamestown.

Jamestown was settled by the intrepid John Smith, May 13, 1607, and was, as is well known, the first English settlement on this continent. It was a peninsula then; it is an island now. The water long since forced a passage through the narrow neck that connected it with the main land and left it an island. But the effect of attrition did not end here. For nearly a mile from this locality "the noble James" has been gaining on the land. So much of the old town is now under water, and, at low tide, evidences of this fact have sometimes been discovered in the debris that is left there. The old tower and ruins of the church are now less than fifty yards from the water, and must, in time, be submerged unless some action be taken to prevent it. The tower, ivy-grown and picturesque as it is, lifts itself some thirty-five fieet above the plain, and is eighteen feet square. It is impossible to ascertain the exact date of the construction of this old building, for it was not the first church erected there, though it was doubtless built in the seventeenth century. As the site authorities of James City for public houses, some steps should be taken by the country or State to preserve it from further demolition, and to prevent it from ever passing under the absolute control of private parties. The island is now owned by a New Yorker, and hence the greater necessity for action in the premises to preserve this memorial of the first settlement of Virginia.

A Brief Temperance Lecture.

The Duke of Orleans, the eldest son of King Louis Phillippe, was the inheritor of whatever rights his father could transmit. He was a noble young man—physically noble. His generous qualities had rendered him universally popular. One morning he invited a few companions to breakfast, as he was about to take his departure from Paris to join his regiment. In the convivialty of the hour he drank a little too much wine. He did not become intoxicated—he was not in any respect a dissipated man; his character was lofty and noble—but in that joyous hour he drank just one glass too much. In taking the parting glass, he slightly lost the balance of his body and of his mind. Bidding adieu to his companions, he entered his carriage; but for that one glass of wine he would have alighted on his feet. His head struck the pavement. Senseless and bleeding, he was taken into a beer-shop near by, and died. That extra glass of wine overthrew the Orleans dynasty, confiscated their property of one hundred millions of dollars, and sent the whole family into exile.

IN the Island of Crete it is customary for the friends and relations of married couples to give expression to their rejoicing by firing off pistols and guns at the conclusion of the nuptial ceremony, when they are generally drunk. On the occasion of a recent wedding a young man who had returned home to replenish his powder flask entered the cellar where the powder was kept with a lighted candle in his hand. A few moments after he had reached his house a frightful explosion was heard, the building and the three adjoining houses being blown to fragments. The remains of the young man were found at a considerable distance.

How Eggs are Hatched.

People have an idea that the hen sits on the eggs for a time, and when the time comes for hatching the chick bursts forth. There never was a greater mistake. The chick, until liberated from the shell by outside aid, is as incapable of motion as if it formed a solid egg, which it nearly does. You might as well inclose a man in an iron boiler, and tell him to get out of it without help. The chick grows on the inside of the shell, and bursts up a very small scale. Of course when it does this, it at the same time "breaks in that spot" the inside of the egg. This admits the air; in a short time it breathes and gets strength to cry loudly. The hen then sets to work to liberate it; she brings it forward under the feathers of the crop, and supporting it between the breastbone and the nest, begins the work of setting it free. She hitches the point of her beak into the hole formed by the raising of the scale by the chick's beak, and breaks away the egg-skin or shell all around the greatest diameter of the egg. The joint efforts of the hen without and the chick within then liberate the prisoner, and he struggles into existence, and gets dry under the feathers and the natural heat of the hen. All female birds which sit on their eggs to hatch them, have the hook in the beak strongly developed. Even the broad-billed duck and goose have those hooks especially developed, and with them they liberate their young. In Australia, where everything seems to be by contraries, it is the cock of the bush-turkey that hatches the eggs, and not the hen. It would be interesting to know whether the hook of the beak is better adapted for this service in the male bird than in the female. The hook of the beak of the ordinary cock of the common fowl is quite different from that of the hen—it is adapted for wounding in fighting, but not for hatching of eggs.

Equestrian Exercise.

A taste for horseback riding is fast gaining ground among our fair countrywomen, who are convinced that it is this delightful exercise which plants such vivid roses in the cheeks and brilliant light in the eyes of their English cousins. It is abundant fresh air, regular exercise, and a prescribed plain diet in early youth, that creates the envied "English constitution," and now Dame Fashion dresses the most tasteful riding gear heart can wish, to aid the double benefit of health and pleasure. The riding habit may be composed of invisible-blue cloth, or entirely black; the last is the most modish, perhaps. The body is cut with a short jockey basque, closed to the throat with one row of heavy cloth or silk buttons, or else strapped across cadet fashion. The sleeves are closely shaped to the arm, without any other finish at the wrist than a neat white linen cuff. The skirt is a yard and a half long, and three yards and a half wide. The hat is a silk stove-pipe, with slightly rolling brim. Around the crown is twisted a vail of grenadine, or a sweeping ostrich plume. Gloves of chamois skin, or undressed kid, with long wrist, complete a very stylish toilet.

Iron Manufacture in Pennsylvania.

In conversation with a leading iron-master, a few days ago, a reporter of the Allentown (Pa.) Chronicle learned that most of the furnaces in the country are preparing to go into blast again, as buyers who have been holding off for lower prices are convinced that iron will sell no cheaper for the present, and are sending in their orders, thus creating a revival in the trade. The same authority predicts that next winter the dullness in iron will equal that which we just experienced, and says there will be more iron manufactured in the country this coming spring than there will be next fall. The American Iron and Steel Association have ascertained by a thorough canvass of the country, that there are in the United States 864 blast furnaces in working condition, capable of an annual production of 4,000,000 tons of pig iron, a quantity greater than the country can consume at present, and these furnaces, encouraged by the present demand for iron, will go to work, so that before next fall the demand will be supplied and another cessation will be occasioned.

A Successful Battle witn a Deer.

Last Monday evening a deer was run off the mountain by some hunters. Late in the evening the deer came in the neighborhood of Decherd, pursued by some hounds which were pretty well run down. Mr. Mike Madden, finding it out, put his hounds, which were fresh, in pursuit. The deer being pretty well fagged, and fresh hounds in pursuit, took refuge in the creek just back of Mr. Hockersmith's, where he fought the dogs off until Mr. Madden came up. He being a bold and resolute man, at once bulged in the creek and laid hold of the deer, when a desperate struggle ensued. The deer would drag him out of the water and back again; but after a long struggle, and in great danger of getting badly hurt, he finally killed him. The deer proved to be a fine, large buck, with rather an extra rig of horns.—Winchester (Tenn.) Journal.

Infant Mortality.

Of the people who die in our cities, a trifle more than half are children under 5 years of age. The diseases that cause this infant mortality are many, but their causes are few. Roughly stated, they are bad ventilation, defective drainage, and adulterated milk. The land-owners who build air-tight tenement-houses, the city that leaves its sewerage undug and its parks unopened, and the dairymen who feed their cows on garbage and then dilute the poisoned milk they yield—these three unite to play Herod and cause the modern slaughter of the innocents. It is not strange that so many children die; the only wonder is that more of them do not give up the ghost of life that clings to their bodies. "Man's inhumanity to man" is bad enough, but man's barbarity to children is worse.—Chicago Tribune.

THE CROW'S CHILDREN.

BY PHŒBE CARY.

A huntsman, bearing his gun afield,
Went whistling merrily;
When he heard the blackest of black crows
Call out from a withered tree:

"You are going to kill the thievish birds,
And I would, if I were you;
But you mustn't touch my family,
Whatever else you do!"

"I'm only going to kill the birds
That are eating up my crop;
And if your young ones do such things,
Be sure they'll have to stop."

"Oh," said the crow, "my children
Are the best ones ever born;
There isn't one among them all
Would steal a grain of corn."

"But how shall I know which ones they are?
Do they resemble you?"
"Oh, no," said the crow, "they're the prettiest birds,
And the whitest that ever flew!"

So off went the sportsman, whistling,
And off, too, went his gun;
And its startling echoes never ceased
Again till the day was done.

And the old crow sat untroubled,
Cawing away in her nook;
For she said, "He'll never kill my birds
Since I told him how they look.

"Now, there's the hawk, my neighbor,
She'll see what she will see, soon;
And that saucy, whistling blackbird
May have to change his tune!"

When, lo! she saw the hunter
Taking his homeward track,
With a string of crows as long as his gun
Hanging down his back.

"Alack, alack," said the mother,
"What in the world have you done?
You promised to spare my pretty birds,
And you've killed them every one."

"Your birds!" said the puzzled hunter;
"Why, I found them in my corn;
And besides, they are black and ugly
As any that ever were born!"

"Get out of my sight, you stupid!"
Said the angriest of crows;
"How good and fair her children are There's none but a parent knows."

"Ah! I see, I see," said the hunter,
"But not as you do, quite;
It takes a mother to be so blind
She can't tell black from white."

A CROSS-EYED man cast a gloom over a Detroit street-car, last Wednesday, by asking one of seven men and strangers on the opposite seat "if he had any chewing tobacco handy." First the seven strangers looked at each other; then the seven hands went pocketward; and, observing this motion, each of the seven supposed his neighbor the one spoken to, and the seven hands returned empty. AN INEXHAUSTIBLE INKSTAND.—An invention worthy the fertile genius of a Yankee, but the patent of a firm of Englishmen, is the "magic inexhaustible inkstand." Some chemicals of a secret nature, hidden in the bottle, furnish the coloring material, and the ink is obtained by the addition of water. According to the directions the watering process may be carried on indefinitely to supply the natural exhaustion, and the seemingly extravagant claim is made that the inkstand will produce ink sufficient to write a letter a day for one hundred years. We sigh as we think of the strong probability of our not being able to test the inventor's veracity!

Nil Desperandum.—A real healthy man or woman is a rarity; and what wonder? when we realise that it is the custom to overload the stomach, and then produce chronic disease by the use of spirituous liquors, "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restoratives," etc. Having first produced disease by indiscretion, the victim wonders why "nothing does him good." Just so; and the reason is that they all, or nearly all, find a basis in alcohol—or POISON. To all thus discouraged, we can conscientiously say, "make one more trial." The people of Colorado are greatly interested in the so-called Platte Canon canal, which will be 350 miles in length. The flume at the mouth of the canon is designed to be ninety-six feet above the ground, and will have to be carried along for the space of two miles before ground is reached and the canal proper commenced. The canal, when completed, will carry over 2,476,000,000 gallons of water daily. It will irrigate about nine and a quarter million acres of Government land, and from one million to one million and a half acres of Kansas Pacific land. The cost of the entire canal is estimated at about $8,000,000.

When applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche and accompanied with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery as constitutional treatment, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy produces perfect cures of the worst cases of Catarrh and Ozena of many years' standing. This thorough course of medication constitutes the only scientific, rational, safe and successful manner of treating this odious disease that has ever been offered to the afflicted. So successful has it proven that the proprietor has long offered a standing reward of $500 for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure.

INDISPUTABLE EVIDENCE.

THOS. J. BISHOP, of South Brooklyn, N. Y., writes that his wife had suffered since a child with Catarrh until it had resulted in what eminent physicians pronounced Consumption; that she has used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and they have worked wonders with her case.

STEALING OUR THUNDER.

People should beware of those impostors who not only try to imitate Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, but also copy his original style of advertising by offering various sized rewards for cases of Catarrh and other diseases which they cannot cure. Those who do not possess sufficient intelligence to enable them to write original advertisements of their own, but have to steal those of others, are not likely to have made great and valuable discoveries in Medicine. Look out for them.—[Com.

AYER'S AMERICAN ALMANAC has arrived, and is now ready for delivery, gratis, by our druggists, to all who call for it. Our readers may be surprised to know that this little pamphlet, which has become so much a favorite in our section, has quite the largest circulation of any one book in the world, except the Bible. It is printed in many languages, and scattered through many nations, as well as supplied to almost the entire population of our own vast domain. Every family should keep it, for it contains information which all are liable to require, when sickness overtakes them, and which may prove invaluable from being at hand in season. If you take our advice, you will call and get an AYER'S ALMANAC, and when got, keep it.

MANY people, particularly children, suffer with the earache; and for the benefit of such we give a sure but simple remedy. Put in two or three drops of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, stop the ear with undressed wool, bathe the feet in warm water before going to bed, and keep the head warm at night.—[Com.

CAPT. CHARLES SAGER, who keeps a superb stock of livery horses in Portland, Me., informed us recently that he uses Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders regularly in his stables, and that the expense is more than offset by the diminished amount of grain necessary to keep his horses always in good order.—[Com.

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Orient Safety Lamps.

These Absolutely Non-Explosive Metal Lamps

Have within the last few years become so universally known that a full description is unnecessary.

Why is this Lamp Safer than Other So-called Safety Lamps?

This question, so often asked, is easily answered. The ORIENT SAFETY LAMP is the only lamp which has

THE FULLER PATENT DOUBLE JOINT

above the surface of the oil, which prevents the possibility of being injured by accident, or of leaking. This is also the only lamp which uses

Fuller's Patent Safety Wick Chamber or tube—the only device yet discovered which prevents the fire from getting into the body of the lamp, thus rendering it

ABSOLUTELY NON-EXPLOSIVE.

These lamps are compact, simple and substantial, and adapted to all domestic uses, the PARLOR, the DRAWING-ROOM, the HALL, the BED-CHAMBER and the KITCHEN.

They are also adapted to Stores, Hotels, Factories, Shops, Churches, Halls, &c., FITTING ALL THE GAS and KEROSENE CHANDELIERS, BRACKETS, PENDANTS, &c., in use. They are finished in the most elegant and substantial manner. Our lamps with bronze figures, for parlor use, are the most elaborate and beautiful in design and finish ever manufactured in this or any other country. They are as

Clean and Easily Managed

as a common glass lamp, and the light is Intensely Brilliant, Pure and Steady.

As further evidence of the popularity of the Orient Safety Lamps, we submit the following editorials from the many we have received:

From Moore's Rural New-Yorker, Nov. 11, 1871.

"Since the introduction of petroleum oils and fluids, many attempts have been made to produce a lamp which will effectually stop the terrible destruction of life and property caused by the exploding and breaking of glass lamps.

"A lamp, to meet universal demand and give satisfaction, must be capable of burning, with safety, all kinds of oil, good and bad. It must be made of metal, without seam, joint or solder, so that it can never break or leak. It must be simple, but scientifically constructed, and so nicely finished as to be ornamental as well as useful, and must be sold at a price within the reach of all. Such is the ORIENT SAFETY LAMP, manufactured by WALLACE & SONS."

From American Agriculturist, April 1, 1873.

"Recently we have tried a new lamp, called the ORIENT, and several weeks' trial has failed to show any fault in it. The lamp is a neat pattern (as shown in the engraving). The flame is pleasant, bright and steady, and the lamp is not a rapid consumer of oil. We do not see how any one can get a better return in light from the amount of oil consumed than from the ORIENT, manufactured by WALLACE & SONS."

From the New York Independent, April 10, 1873.

"We have been exceedingly well pleased with the light given us by a pretty ORIENT SAFETY LAMP, manufactured by WALLACE & SONS, New York. It has a metal bowl, with partition inside, so constructed that if overturned or accidentally upset (though filled with kerosene), it will not explode, and the oil cannot get on fire. The Wick is circular, also the Glass Chimney, and with the Shade on it gives a most pleasant and brilliant light. It seems to us just the thing for families to use who are not supplied with gas, and it is, as far as we have seen, the cheapest of the various lamps which we believe to be safe."

From Hearth and Home, February 8, 1873.

"GOOD LIGHT.—We have used, in this office and elsewhere, for more than a year past, ORIENT SAFETY LAMPS, manufactured by WALLACE & SONS. They are safe, simple in construction, easily managed, well made, give an excellent light—in short, are just the lamp we like, and are glad to recommend."

The Auburn Courier

Saturday, February 14, 1874

The National Grange met at St. Louis last Wednesday. The Secretary reports that 8,000 Granges have been organized during the past year.

Ex-Governor Harvey, was on Monday elected to the United States Senate from Kansas for the unexpired term of Caldwell, the unwhitewashed. He is a reformer in politics and supported Greeley in the last Presidential election.

Senator Carpenter, Republican, created a sensation in the Senate by denouncing the course of the administration, and called upon the party to unload some of its monstrosities. By the time all the monstrosities are unloaded there will be nothing left of the Republican party.

The report that thirty thousand Teton Sioux under the leadership of Red Cloud and Spotted Tail are about to go upon the war path in search of blood and beef is now fully corroborated. The Chicago Tribune has a special dispatch from Omaha stating that a large cattle owner and beef contractor is there who says that it is true.

These masked robberies are becoming a terror to the traveling public. Last week a gang of highwaymen boarded and robbed a steamboat near New Orleans, and made their escape; and only a few days since they robbed a railway train at Gad's Hill, Missouri. They are as daring and bold as the Ku-Klux. Congress should be devising some plans for their suppression.

At Decatur, Ind., last week, James and Rebecca Jacobs were sent to jail on a charge of incest. They have been living with their parents, who are good, sensible people, living on and owning a farm in that county. The couple have been noticed to act towards each other with an unusual amount of affection, but nothing wrong has ever been thought of until the girl's condition became noticeable.

General Harney, the old Indian fighter, was before the House Committee on Military Affairs and gave his views in reference to the policy to be pursued by the Government toward the Indians. The General gave it as his opinion that if the Indians were let alone and not disturbed by fraudulent agents and whisky dealers, we would never have any difficulty with them. The General's opinion of the best way to suppress these fraudulent agents and whisky dealers is, when captured, to take them to the nearest military post and hang them. The method has the virtue of being an efficacious one.

The Forty-seventh Annual Report of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company, informing the stockholders of its operations for the year which ended on the 30th of September last, has just reached us. It is a document of unusual interest from the fact, almost unique in the history of American railroads, that neither the stock nor the debt of the company has been watered to the amount of a dollar, and that while it has made sufficient dividends—during the year covered by this report they amounted to ten per cent upon the capital—the surplus fund representing money derived from earnings and invested in various branch and connecting roads and in productive improvements on the immediate line of the company, now amounts to more than twenty-nine millions of dollars, or something less than twice the whole capital stock of the company. The increase in revenue for the year as compared with the year preceding is more than two millions of dollars, while the expenses increased only $1,100,000. It is impossible that such an enterprise should be in a more substantial and satisfactory state, or have more encouraging prospects of healthy future growth. These facts reflect the highest credit upon the wisdom, firmness and fidelity of Mr. John W. Garrett, the able and vigilant President, who has so long directed the affairs of the company.

There was a lively passage at arms yesterday during the debate in the House on the Army Appropriation bill between Judge Holman and George F. Hoar. Holman went for Hoar.

So says the Fort Wayne Sentinel. That paper should be very careful in giving encouragement to such acts. Going for such creatures is generally frowned upon by the public press.

Sleep for Farmers' Wives.

A farmer's wife writes a letter to the Rural New Yorker, which she wants the "men folks" to read. It is a plea for more sleep. Have you a wife, she says, who goes about in a listless, spiritless fashion, as though she could but just drag herself about? Or is she cross and fretful, and do you wonder how she came to have such a temper? Ten to one, all she needs to make her bright and happy is rest, sleep and loving words. Her efficient help, that the wife who has passed a restless night may take advantage of baby's morning nap and have one of her own; or, if she choose, lie down in the afternoon and make up the lost sleep. You can afford it if you will. Do you begrudge a hundred dollars a year for your wife's comfort and health? Why, no breeding mare would ever be worked as some men work their wives! Give women their own rights; help them to bear their burdens; give them a few kind, loving words, every day, and you will have healthier and happier wives, children and homes.

The Washington Ring.

A Washington dispatch to the Cincinnati Enquirer says: The respectable citizens of this District, who have for years been most greviously taxed and oppressed by the Radical upstarts managing the City Government, have at last a prospect of relief. The memorial of Messrs W. W. Corcoran, Riggs, Alexander and other citizens to Congress has drawn on them the virulent abuse of the Ring organs, but these two facts combined have aroused Congress to its duty. The House to-day, by an overwhelming vote, seconded Mr. Wilson's resolution for a Joint Committee of Investigation. The Democrats almost unanimously voted to second the resolution, which was the test vote. Among these few members who failed to vote in the affirmative were Maynard, of Tennessee; Eldridge, of Wisconsin, and Leach, of North Carolina. The resolution was then passed. The result is in the highest degree unsatisfactory to the Washington Ring, though they pretend that they are not opposed to an investigation. They will have to prove a clean bill of health before they can come on the impoverished people of the South and West for four or five millions of dollars to help in the operations of the Ring in building up a grand imperial city at Washington. The plan is to devote eight or ten million dollars to this purpose, with large profits to the real estate pool. Boss Shepherd was on the floor when the resolution passed. The committee appointed by Mr. Blaine, consists of Mr. Wilson, of Indiana, Hubbell, of Michigan, Hale, of New York, Clymer, of Pennsylvania, and Jewett, of Ohio, and is generally regarded as a trustworthy committee. If there is a corrupt or improper manner in which this committee can be approached and manipulated by the ring, so as to procure a whitewashing report, it is pretty certain that this weak spot in the committee will be found. All the usual appliances which are effective in Congress will be invoked.

The grange business is looming up. We cannot account for this in no other way than than that the Press has been opposing them. Success is always assured when this fact becomes generally known. Union township organized a grange last Saturday at Husselman's school house.—R. N. Crooks was chosen master and S. Kutzner Sec'y. The movement had more than the requisite number of signers for an organization, and the probabilities are that this will be the largest grange in the county. Smithfield township organized last Tuesday evening by electing the officers:

Hon. Freeman Kelley, Master,
E. R. Shoemaker, Asst Master,
Solomon B. Mottinger, Sec'y,
Jeremiah Hemstreet, Lecturer,
Henry Hood, Treasurer.

The President of the National Grange at St. Louis, last week said:

"When the first subordinate granges had been organized, one of the first and most proper subjects for discussion was, how to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before. During these discussions the fact soon became prominent that how to sell crops was fully as knotty a question as how to grow them. It came to the conviction of members that we received 60 cents for a bushel of wheat, while the man who ate it paid $1.20 for it. We were selling corn at 20 cents a bushel, while the consumer was paying 80 cents for it."

Because we made the assertion that it took two bushels of grain to get one to market, our neighbor, of the Press, says it is a "monstrous lie." We leave the fair minded to draw their own conclusion from the above.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

Examination of Teachers.

Examinations will be held at Auburn, on the first Saturday in each month until further notice.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co. Supt.

It appears from papers in other parts of the State, that teachers and others are hard at work holding institutes and other meetings, and in other ways showing the interest that is felt in school work. Every township in this county will hold its full number of institutes.

The subject of allowing teachers the holidays is again being agitated in various parts of the county and State. It is to be hoped that some degree of uniformity in this matter, can be secured. At present, each county, or rather each township, has its own method of settling the matter, some trustees giving teachers those days, and others requiring them to make up all time so lost.

Township Institutes.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

Institute met at school house No. 10. Opened by the President, J. S. Jackman. Singing by Misses Annie, Jennie and Della Noragon, also Milton Noragon. On motion of Richard Baxter, Mrs. J. A. Barns was elected Secretary, pro tem. Roll call by the Secretary—nine teachers present. Next exercise in order was a short lesson and discussion in primary reading, which was conducted in a very creditable manner by Richard Baxter. Next in order was a class in grammar; subject, "The Verb," taught by Reuben Sawvel; a short discussion followed and the time was well improved. Institute adjourned one hour for dinner.

Afternoon session—Institute was called to order at 1½ o'clock by the President. Motion was then made that the Chairman appoint a commitee of two on resolutions—Mr. Sawvel and Mr Dirrim were appointed as a committee. Song by the institute, entitled "Childhood." Superintendent Barns then gave a short lecture on grammar, also conducted a class in the same subject. The subjects of geography and map-drawing were then taught by Mr. Dirrim. Moved and seconded that the President conduct a class in spelling. The Superintendent then gave a test spelling lesson, which created quite an amount of amusement. Then followed a discussion of the subject "Economy of time in the school room." Richard Baxter was first, followed by Milton Noragon, Miss Lizzie Rauson, Mr. Dirrim, Reuben Sawvel and the President, followed by remarks by the Superintendent. Critic's report by Richard Baxter. Resolutions read and adopted. Secretary's report read and adopted.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That we, as teachers, elevate the standard of our profession by more thoroughly informing ourselves on the different branches to be taught, and the best methods of teaching the same.

Resolved, That we tender our thanks to our Superintendent for his presence and valuable instruction.

Resolved, That we tender our thanks to Mrs. Barns for her presence and service as Secretary.

Resolved, That we, as teachers, tender our thanks to the officers of this institute for the faithful discharge of their duties.

Resolved, That we tender our thanks to T. C. Mays, editor of the COURIER, for his kindness in printing the reports of our several meetings.

WILLIAM DIRRIM, } Committee.
REUBEN SAWVEL, }

Institute adjourned, sine die.

J. S. JACKMAN, President.
MRS. J. A. BARNS, Secretary.

TROY TOWNSHIP.

Pursuant to previous notice, the teachers of Troy township met at school house No. 6 on January 31st, 1874. C. D. Knisely was elected President, and B. F. Cornelius, Secretary. An invitation was extended to all friends of education to assist in the exercises.

Writing, according to the Babbitonian system, was taught by D. A. Black; grammar by Miss Katie Smith; lesson in parsing by D. W. Weitz; history by D. A. Black and decimal fractions by Mr. Weitz.

General discussion—"How to induce scholars to take an interest in their studies;" also "Are township institutes beneficial?" Weitz thought them useful, as they bring our county institute work home to us in every district.

The institute was enlivened by music, Mr. Knisely having kindly furnished an organ, and the Misses Knisely consenting to play and sing.

Deep interest was taken by all, the house being crowded to overflowing.

C. D. KNISELY, President.
B. F. CORNELIUS, Secretary.

A caucus of the Democratic members of the Illinois Legislature was held at Springfield last week. Gov. Hendricks being in the city, was invited to address them. During the course of the Governor's remarks, he said:

"Of the future of political matters I cannot now undertake to speak. I believe the 3,000,000 Democratic voters will not disband; but, standing upon such just and liberal positions as will invite co-operation of all the elements of opposition, success may attend."

A correspondent to the Laport Herald says about dogs: I own a small yellow, short tailed pet dog, nearly ten years old. One night lately my wife had biscuits for supper, and I eat one and a half, and the pet ate two for his supper. I said to my wife, "how much is it worth a week to keep the dog?" and she "one dollar." I said no not so much as that but about 50 cents a week, which is really a very low estimate. I figured a little and, calling the dog nine years old, found that in nine years there were 468 weeks, which at 50 cents a week amounted to the small sum of $234. Then I have paid tax on said pet to the amount of twenty-five dollars so that the keeping of said dog and taxes have cost me $259. Now, Mr. Editor, that purp is for sale, price ten cents.

The Tremont House, one among the best hotel edifices in the west, will open for business on the 15th inst. It is a handsome building, and if it equals as we have no doubt it will, the general features of the old ones, it will be the best in Chicago. Always stop at the Tremont.

Some one sent us a rich and racy account of a blackguarding affair which occured while several parties were going home from a spelling school. Not very choice language was used, and our correspondent thinks some were church members. Correspondents should remember that we never publish communications unless their real names are given as well as their fictitious ones.

The Press in Indianapolis is battling for the right, and that's right. The printers struck for higher wages and have necessarily been kicked out of the offices, a deserved punishment. When things shape so that printers get control of the offices they are employed in, we'll go a fishing. Printer's unions generaly make bigger asses of themselves than any other we know of. Perhaps its because they are so smart.

Our friend Mr. Martin, operator at the Junction, informs us that a freight train on the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois R. R. going north last Thursday evening met with an accident by which a car in the center of the train got off the track a short distance from Columbia City. The flang of the wheels cut almost all the bolts and spikes between Taylor's and the Pittsburg crossing leaving the track in a bad condition. Roadmaster H. C. Bell is at work repairing the damage.

We have not had time to get a full report of the shipments to and from this place for the year 1873, but the agent at the Saginaw depot furnishes the following:

GRAND CONCERT

AT THE

M. E. Church, Feb. 13th, 1874.

VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.

Som ething that our Citizens will Appreciate.

Go and Hear it!

The Glee and Chorus, Class which has been practicing all winter, under Prof. Bennet will close their second term by a grand concert, on to-morrow (Friday) evening. We hope to see the church crowded. The bellringers were well patronized, and the entertainment was poor. We will guarantee as fine a concert as can be given in this part of the State, on this occasion and there is not one but should be there. Our citizens should remember that the class have been at great expense in this instruction, and the money received from the concert does not go into individual pockets, but to defray the expenses.—Our own friends are in the class and we should encourage as much at least as we would a stranger. Go by all means. Go and hear the tintinabulations of concordant sounds. Young man, sell your sheep skin notes at half price: get on your best gear, and ask your Dorcas Alvina if you may'nt—take her to the concert. A host of stars will appear for one night only!—Great Attraction! sparkling, melodious, euphonious, bubbling gushes of music!—Classical, Sentimental, Comical and Patriotical! Every throat new lined with oiled pink silk. Come and hear such music as the old masters need not be ashamed of.

Our Dramatic Club visited Columbia City last Thursday evening to witness the first appearance of the club organized there. The programme embraced "Everybody's Friend" and the "Dutchman's Ghost," both of which were admirably rendered The different characters acquitted themselves with considerable credit, and the audience was delighted. They have a fine hall compared to the one we have here, and certainly one that our neighbors should be proud of. The scenery was beautiful and shows Mr. Reynolds to be a master at his profession.

We cannot refrain from complimenting the lady characters for their fine acting but as we have forgotten their names we cannot single them out, except Miss Rhodes whose attractive appearance and excellent taste peculiarly fit her for the stage. Our friend Campbell and in fact several others should be mentioned but we have not the space to give them an extended notice. They have promised to be present when our club makes their next appearance, which we hope will be in a short time.

The Press all along has been opposed to temperance and has stood by the whisky ring. We have stood by the Baxter law in hopes that it would bring about a better condition of things. It having failed to do this we took a common sense view of the matter and said so. And now our neighbor says we have gone back on those who patted us on the back. We have not wavered one iota from the true position on this question. But according to that immaculate sheet we are without principal, honor or morals. If Charles Washington is the standard by which these accomplishments are to be judged we are glad that we possess none of them. The highly moral and honorable Charles says;

"Since deserting the temperance men, Tommy is "standing by the farmers" to the extent of [illegible] the monstrous lie that it "takes two bushels of wheat to get one bushel to market."

Now, to use the favorite knock down argument of this principled individual we agree to pay him $5 if he will show us or anybodyelse that monstrous lie, as ever having appeared in the COURIER. Come neighbor, tell us the day and date of its appearance, and we will fork over. Now, let us see who has been telling the "monstrous lie." Of one thing we are certain. No one has patted us on the back or paid us $25 in advance to advocate this cause, nor has a second party came around and given us $50 more to go back on the first as our neighbor did two years ago in the congressional fight. Oh, consistency thou art a jewel, but thy name ain't Baxter.

LAYING TRACK—Last week the B. P & C managers sent a construction and a campsupply train to Deshler preparatory to commencing immediate work on the line west from Deshler. The work of track laying will progress as rapidly as the weather will permit.—Defiance Dem

"Hon John B. Stoll is talked of as the probable Democratic candidate for Auditor of State. Mr Stoll is a progressive politician."—Exchange

We doubt whether Mr. Stoll will be a candidate. He fills his present position so eminently that he is necessary to the existence of Northern Indiana

"A wedding is soon to take place between two of our prominent young people A western trip will be taken before the nuptials are tied."—Indianian.

Up this way our young folks get married first and then take the western trip.—The above would indicate that it is different down in Warsaw. It may be a mere matter of taste, however.

The Indianian has a distressing story about Freeman Kelley, a DeKalb county farmer, who has the audacity to aspire to the seat in Congress now warmed by Maj. Sayler. We are terribly stirred up against Freeman by the Indianian's article—Huntington Dem

Dreadful, ain't it We don't pity Mr Kelley so much as we do poor Reub To think of his nervous condition and then to have such an explosion occur as his incendiary item would indicate, is perfectly awful

John Hyke, residing a short distance north-east of Waterloo, brought a load of grain to Butler, and remarked that he had heretofore hauled his wheat to Waterloo but as he could realize two cents more on the bushel and have so much better facilities for unloading at Butler, he intended in future to come to this place. Also Ezra Lautzenhiser, residing north of the doomed "city," hauls his wheat to Butler. But yet the Press says we get "exercised over Waterloo's wheat business.—Butler News.

Horrors, upon horrors! The Northern Indianian has discovered a deep lain plot of the Frangers and the Democrats in the "old Tenth" District, for the joining of forces in order to elect a man opposed to the Radical party to Congress, at the October election. The above paper is absolutely frigntened and indulges in a long diatribe of abuse. Keep your shirt on, friend Reub!—Col City Post

The Auburn Dramatic Troupe are playing an engagement at Columbia City.—Tom Mays appears as Solon Shingle, for two nights only.—Ft. Wayne Sen.

What has John Owens done. The moral turpitude of the author of the above is only equaled by his reputation for truth and veracity. We would'nt care, but the next thing we hear will be that Tom Taylor is playing Rip Van Winkle to the delighted citizens of Roanoke.

WHY NOT?—In nearly (if not quite) all the neighboring cities and towns, a municipal tax is levied on the retailers of liquors—ranging from $50 to $500 for each license. Why not have a similar regulation here? We opine none of our first class, responsible saloon keepers would object to such an arrangement, but rather favor it—as it would tend to lessen the number of dealers We submit it to the consideration of the trustees and city council.—Exchange

We suggest the propriety of the town board to do something in this line for our place. Put it up to $50 at least.

"One of the editors and proprietors of the Press visited Butler three or four weeks ago, and we have been looking patiently for some mention of the fact in the Press, but we are compelled to forego a disappointment. Are the gentlemen afraid to speak of the advantages of our town. It takes no effort for them to speak disparagingly. It costs nothing to be courteous, but then we presume a lack of 'experience' in this direction is a sufficient excuse for the gentlemen. Talk about little souls!"—Butler News.

Be careful Bro. Weamer you are addressing one of those hightoned individuals, notorious for "principle, honor and morals." We would about as lief see you enter a den of lions as to tackle him on these points.

Fort Wayne, Sep. 17, 1872.—For the benefit of those who think consumption incurable, I will make a statement of my cure: On the 12th of last March I was taken with the Lung Fever, or as the doctor called it, Pleuro-Pneumonia. I was attended by one of whom I considered the most eminent physicians of this city 3½ months, during which time he employed 3 other physicians as council. For 3 weeks I though I was getting better, when an abscess began to form in my left lung, and the physicians pronounced it quick consumption, from this time I failed rapidly, and raised from a pint to a quart of phlegm and matter each day, and had night sweats: by the 26th of June I had got so weak I could not lift a glass of water to my mouth, and was confined to bed. At this time some ladies in the neighborhood persuaded my wife to employ Dr. Todd, and I am free to say I improved steadily from the time I began taking his medicines, and in 10 weeks I was able to walk 2 miles, and felt as well as I ever did, now I walk from 3 to 4 miles each day, and neither cough nor spit. I have no pain and think my lung is healed perfectly.

The Chicago Tribune has this complimentary allusion to them: "A convention has seldom been held in this city where qualities of head and heart were shown equal to those of these worthy Israelites. From the first to the last, their deliberations have been in admirable taste, and it will be the judgment of all who have watched them that they have elevated their race as well as their order by their conduct."

A MOST daring and successful robbery was committed on the Iron Mountain railroad, at Gadshill Station, 120 miles south of St. Louis, on the 31st ult. As the southward-bound express which left the latter city at 9:30 a. m. approached Gadshill at 4:30 p. m., it was signaled to stop. The switch was turned, and the train run on a side track. As the train stopped, Conductor Alford stepped off to ascertain what the matter was, when he was confronted by a man in a mask, a pistol placed to his head, and he marched off under guard. The engineer, fireman, mail agent, express messenger, and other train men were then seized by five masked, heavily armed men, and also placed under guard. The robbers then went through the entire train, took from the passengers about $2,000 and a large amount of jewelry, from the Adams Express messenger over $1,000, and rifled the mail. The robbers then left in a southerly direction, and after the release of the train men the train started southward. THE Memphis and Louisville railroad shops, in Memphis, were recently destroyed by fire. Loss, $130,000.

Washington.

THE annual report of the Board of Indian Commissioners to the President has been published. It indorses the peace policy of the Administration, states that the supplies for the department have been purchased at a much lower price than in any former year, recommends that no territorial government be adopted for the Indian nations without the consent of the Indians, and that the territory should be reserved exclusively for them, unmolested by white intruders.

GEN. SHERMAN was before the House Military Committee the other day, and argued in favor of placing the Indians in charge of the War Department. He thinks that they would be better treated and more effectually kept in order by the army than they ever can be by the Interior Department under the Peace policy.

THE Senate Military Committee has agreed on a bill giving a uniform bounty of $8.33⅓ per month to each and every officer and private who served at any time, either in regular or volunteer service, between April 15, 1861, and April 15, 1867, bounty and payments already made to be deducted, and the benefits of the above provision to be extended also to widows or other heirs of deceased soldiers.

GEN. HARNEY, who was one of the most noted Indian fighters of his day, was before the House Military Committee the other day, and told them that the way to put an end to the Indian troubles is to treat them fairly. In his experience he recalled only two instances in which the savages had violated their treaty obligations, and these he considered excusable. Instead of making war on the Indians, he would direct hostilities against Indian Agents and the whisky-dealers.

IT has been decided by the House Military Committee, in defiance of the recommendations of all the army officers, to permanently reduce the army....Some excitement was caused in Washington, the other day, by the arrest of a drunken, half crazy man named James G. Sypher, while attempting to ride into the Executive mansion on horseback. He was searched, and a loaded pistol found on his person.

Foreign.

IN the forty-eight boroughs in England in which elections had been held up to the 2d inst. twenty Liberals and twenty-eight Conservatives were returned to Parliament. This is a conservative gain of one member....Advices from Cape Coast Castle state the Ashantees have sued for peace....The death of the Sultan of Acheen is announced.

AT Lancashire, England, while a Liberal meeting was in progress, the other day, in a factory building, the floor gave way, precipitating a great mass of people to the story below. Six were killed outright and many fatally injured.... In Alsace, the French candidates for the Reichstag have been elected by overwhelming majorities....The Cubans are practicing the lesson which the Spanish taught them, of shooting prisoners of war. A Col. Montaner, who has made himself peculiarly odious to Cubans by his brutalities to Cuban prisoners, was recently captured by them, and at once shot by order of Gen. Gomez. Some Spanish prisoners taken near Puerto Principe were treated in the same manner.

A BERLIN dispatch states that Archbishop Ledochowski has been arrested by order of the German Government, and sent to Frankfort-on-the-Oder, where he will be imprisoned....The cholera has broken out in Buenos Ayres.

ENGLAND can carry the broom in regard to riotous elections. There is nothing in the political history of America that will compare with the violence which has prevailed in connection with the Parliamentary elections in that country. The dispatches from day to day have been filled with accounts of riotous demonstrations, fighting, window-smashing, etc. In several instances the aid of the military was invoked to quell the disturbances. The returns from the elections show large Conservative gains. Up to the 5th inst. 108 Liberals and 141 Conservatives had been returned. The balance of parties in 208 other places remains unchanged. The Conservatives gain thirty seats, previously held by the Liberals, and the Liberals have ousted nine Conservatives. The Conservative journals are jubilant over the result.....A doubtful rumor comes from Berlin that Germany and France are on the eve of another war.

A PARIS dispatch says: "The French Bishops announce their intention to resist any attempt to muzzle them, and Pius IX. has counselled them to "fight the good fight of faith" even unto martyrdom. As a corollary to all this the Paris Bourse has been falling frightfully for the past three days, spreading consternation in financial circles."....The Ashantee war is ended, and the British lion is triumphant. The King of the Ashantees has delivered all the white prisoners to Sir Garnet Wolseley, accepts the latter's terms for the cessation of hostilities, and agrees to pay the Britishers an indemnity of £200,000....A Madrid dispatch announces a desperate battle between the Republicans and Carlists near Lerida, in which the latter were defeated with heavy loss....Emperor William concluded his speech, on the opening of the German Parliament, the other day, with the assurance that all the nations of Europe are resolved to preserve the peace....The famine in Bengal is increasing. It is estimated that 150,000 natives are already severely distressed....The excitement over the English elections has culminated in several bloody fights. At Wittenham there was a desperate conflict, in which several persons were killed. At Windsor and Handy there were also bloody rows, resulting in the death of three or four. At Askeaton, in Limerick, three were killed and a number wounded. Rioting has been general all over the pottery districts of Staffordshire, and many casualties are reported. At Timstake, Lington and Burslems the rioters seized the ballot-boxes, which were recaptured by the police after severe fighting.

Political.

THE New York Tribune, of the 1st inst., announces, in a double-leaded editorial, that it is in possession of startling documents gravely affecting high officials. The paper states that it is unwilling to give the alleged disclosures publicity until their entire authenticity is established, as the facts they allege will bring disgrace and discredit on the American people, and that a thorough investigation into their authenticity has been set on foot, and will soon determine the matter, pending which they are withheld. It is surmised that the papers referred to, if they really exist, have relation to the Pacific Mail subsidy jobs.

THE Kansas Senatorial contest has been ended by the election of ex-Gov. James M. Harvey.

THE Democrats of Connecticut have renominated unanimously the entire State ticket of the last election, with Gov. Ingersoll at its head....B. K. Bruce (colored) and H. R. Pease have been chosen United States Senators from Mississippi—the former for the long and the latter for the short term.

The Grange.

DUDLEY W. ADAMS, Grand Master of the National Grange, informs a St. Louis reporter that there are in the United States 12,000 organizations of the Patrons of Husbandry, and about 1,000,000 members....There are 1,800 Granges in Missouri, with a membership of over 80,000.

THE National Grange of Patrons of Husbandry began its session at St. Louis on the 4th inst. The Secretary reported that 8,000 subordinate granges had been formed during the year. The Treasurer reported $60,000 to be on hand. In the report of the Executive Committee, co-operation is warmly indorsed, and the members of the order declared to have saved $8,000,000 last year by co-operative stores, agencies, and grain-elevators. Anything like waging war on the railroads of the country is discountenanced, as their interests are one with those of the farmers. Grand Master Adams, in his address, characterized the Boston Grange as a dangerous and revolutionary element in the order, being composed entirely of the class known as politicians. The Grange sits with closed doors, and consequently much that transpires is not known to the outside public.

THE National Crop Reporter of the 2d inst. contains estimates in relation to the percentage of the last crop of corn remaining in the hands of producers Jan. 15, and an estimate of stock hogs in the hands of feeders on the same date, in comparison with the quantity and number on hand the corresponding date in 1873. In relation to corn in the States of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Ohio and Wisconsin, which produced in 1874 upward of 392,000,000 bushels, the average amount on hand at the date named is estimated at a fraction less than 50 per cent. and the approximate quantity of 190,000,000 bushels. The average consumption is very uniform in all the States, being highest in Wisconsin—60 per cent. The estimates upon the stock of hogs are for the same States named above, and indicate an average falling off of 21 per cent. from the number on hand a year ago. The condition of the same is considerably below the average.

RETURNS from the Canadian Parliamentary elections indicate that the Government will be sustained on a test vote by fully 85 or 90 majority in a full House.

A NEW resolution of the transportation problem is offered in the shape of a project for the construction of a canal from St. Louis to Terre Haute, a distance of 180 miles, there to connect with the Wabash and Erie Canal, affording a direct water route between the great producing West and Eastern and European markets.

CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, Jan. 30.—Senate.—Chandler presented a petition for the extension of the money-order system to every Postoffice in the United States. ....A resolution was introduced, but laid over, authorizing the President to appoint a Board of five army officers to investigate the charges against Gen. O. O. Howard.... The Senate devoted the afternoon to the discussion of Louisiana affairs. Carpenter finished his speech commenced on Thursday, and was replied to by Morton, who maintained the legality of the Kellogg Government, defended the Administration from the imputations of the Wisconsin Senator, and denounced his argument as a tissue of contradictions. Before Morton had concluded the Senate went into Executive session, and soon after adjourned.

House.—A resolution was introduced by Coburn, and after considerable discussion adopted, authorizing the President to convene a Court of Inquiry to investigate the charges against Gen. O. O. Howard....The other proceedings were of an unimportant nature.

SATURDAY, Jan. 31.—Senate.—Not in session to-day.

House.—In the House, sitting in Committee of the Whole, speeches were made by Cox, on the financial question; by Wilson, of Indiana, on the Pacific railroad question; by Loughridge, of Iowa, on the army question; by Kellogg, of Connecticut, on the currency, interspersed with ludicrous left-handed compliments between Kelley and Beck, and Havens and Mellish, on finance.

MONDAY, Feb. 2.—Senate.—The Louisiana question was again before the Senate, and Morton continued his speech in opposition to a new election, contending that the Kellogg government was legally constituted, and recognized by competent authority. The debate was further participated in by Frelinghuysen, Carpenter and Stewart. The whole question was then laid aside....The Bankruptcy bill was taken up and read at length....House joint resolution directing the President to appoint a Court of Inquiry of five army officers to investigate the case of Gen. O. O. Howard was adopted.

House.—Bills introduced: By Hulbert, a bill to abolish the office of Army Judge Advocate also to provide for the gradual abolition of the Ordnance Department, and to reduce the salaries of all officers of a higher rank than Colonel of cavalry 10 per centum; by Hawley to create a Bureau of Agriculture; by Barriere, to establish a branch mint at Chicago; by Clements, a bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers and sailors; by Burchard, a bill forbidding Territorial Legislatures to grant aid for the construction of railroads; by Fort, a bill to classify the pensions of soldiers and seamen who have lost a leg or arm; by Myers (Pa.), to amend the Bankruptcy law; by Havens, for a Board of army officers as Indian Peace Commissioners....Butler introduced a joint resolution, which was adopted, providing that disabled soldiers, or their wives or widows, shall have preference for positions in the civil service....A resolution was adopted, under a suspension of the rules, authorizing the Postoffice Committee to report a bill for the free distribution of printed matter. ..White (Ala.) presented articles of impeachment against Judge Busteed....The Speaker appointed Wilson (Ind.), Hale (N. Y.), Hubbell (Mich.), Clymer (Pa.), and Jewett (O.), as a committee to investigate the affairs of the District of Columbia.

TUESDAY, Feb. 3.—Senate.—Logan presented a resolution of the Grand Army of the Republic, asking an equalization of bounties....The Military Committee reported unfavorably on the bill providing for the arming and equipping of the whole body of the militia of the United States, and favorably on the bill to increase the number of Paymasters in the army....Sherman introduced a bill to bring about the resumption of specie payments Jan. 1, 1875. After that date, under the operation of the bill, gold will be given by the Government in exchange for its notes. If the gold is not handy, the notes will be redeemed in untaxable bonds, payable in gold in ten years, and bearing 5 per cent interest. The notes redeemed may be re-issued in payment of the public debt or the expenses of the Government. The bill also proposes some important amendments in the Banking law, and establishes free banking....The Finance Committee reported the bill providing for a redistribution of the currency. It proposes to take $25,000,000 of the bank circulation from New England and transfer it to the South and West....Sargent introduced a bill to establish a National Bureau of Health. It is to be located at Washington, to be placed under the direction of the Interior Department, and is to be in charge of a Federal Commissioner, at a salary of $4,000 a year.

House.—Thomas, from the Election Committee, reported a resolution that Hodges, of Arkansas, has a prima facie right to the seat....The House devoted nearly the whole day, in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the Army Appropriation bill.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 4.—Senate.—Sherman called up his bill to secure equalization of national bank circulation, and explained its provisions.... The Bankruptcy bill was considered, the pending amendment being that of Oglesby's, to strike out the words "or who has stopped or suspended and not resumed payment of his commercial paper within a period of forty days," so that persons of that class should not be considered bankrupts. After discussion the amendment was lost—34 to 18. Sherman moved an amendment limiting the operations of the 39th section of the original law as amended, and reported by the committee, to persons owing over $3,000.... Thurman opposed the amendment of his colleague, and gave notice that at the proper time he would offer an amendment to the original law, so as to provide for the proving of accounts before a Justice of the Peace or notary public instead of before a Register in Bankruptcy, or United Commissioner, as now provided. Pending the discussion the Senate adjourned.

House.—The resolution of the Election Committee that Asa Hodges was entitled, prima facie, to a seat as Representative of the First Congressional District of Arkansas was adopted, and Hodges took a modified oath as a member. ..The remainder of the day was devoted to the consideration of the Army Appropriation bill. The debate was enlivened by a lively personal colloquy between Holman and G. F. Hoar, in which the Western member is credited with having come out very much ahead.

THURSDAY, Feb. 5.—Senate.—The joint resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate the affairs of the District of Columbia was adopted, and Frelinghuysen, Boutwell and Thurman were appointed the committee....Carpenter introduced a bill, of which he had given previous notice, to restore the rights of the State of Louisiana. It declares there is no Governor or other State officers in Louisiana, and provides for holding an election to fill these offices on the 6th of May, the President to appoint some person, or designate some army officer not below the rank of Major-General, to superintend said election, he to appoint two citizens of Louisiana, of opposite political parties, to be State Registrars. The bill was ordered printed....The bill to facilitate the completion of and to protect certain public works at the mouth of the Mississippi river, was passed....Sherman's amendment to the Bankruptcy bill, limiting the operations of the 39th section to persons owing $5,000 and over, was lost....Frelinghuysen, at his own request, was excused from serving on the committee to investigate the affairs of the District of Columbia, and Conkling was substituted. He, too, declined the honor.

House.—Dunnell's bill modifying the law of last year for the encouragement of timber culture was passed. The bill amends the existing law so that the entire forty acres need not be planted the first year, but gradually, or ten acres each year....The House consumed a considerable portion of the day in considering the Army Appropriation bill....The bill to incorporate the Colorado Canal, Irrigation and Land Company was defeated.

THE pay of members of a Territorial Legislature has been fixed by Congress at $6 a day, and of the Speaker of the House and President of the Upper House at $10 a day. Many of these men are worth as much as members of Congress, and are as self-sacrificing in devoting themselves to legislative duties.

ONE of the most remarkable cases of desperate madness on record, is that of an Italian sailor who was lately shipped on board a vessel at Leghorn. He stabbed four of the crew in their births, attacked the mate and watch on deck, drove them to the rigging, fastened the cabin doors, steered the vessel near the shore, jumped overboard and swam to land.

GERMANS are not very numerous this winter. The "kettledrum" has been found a more economical and far more satisfactory entertainment, both to guest and hostess. Some of our social leaders, however, in their anxiety to kill two birds with one stone, combined the German and kettledrums, and get the credit of ingenuity.

A SUBSTANCE which exudes from the earth in small quantities, at the head of the Coorang river, in South Australia, contains about seventy gallons of kerosene, thirty of lubricating oil, and seven of asphaltum, per ton. The substance resembles asphalite. Tests show that the kerosene will not burn, except through a wick, until heated to one hundred and twenty-five degrees.

Sad Case of Destitution.

The following is one out of the many examples of the sufferings to which the poor of Philadelphia are subjected this winter. Late Sunday afternoon, the attention of Officers Hussey and Rutherford was directed to the case of a widow, Mrs. Stinson, who, with four children, the eldest of whom is but 5 years, occupied a small room in the rear of No. 1008 Heaborne street. The room was in a wretched condition, with window-panes out, doors cracked, and without furniture or fire. When visited, the family were found huddled in a corner almost in a state of nudity, half frozen and nigh dead with hunger. They had not eaten for several days, and the unfortunate mother prayed for death to relieve herself and little ones from their terrible sufferings. They were relieved by a charitable association.—Exchange.

Ben. Butler, the Terror of Congressional Reviews.

The newspaper correspondents continue their relentless war on the famous "Essex statesman." Here is one of the latest shots, fired by a Washington letter writer:

The country will be brightened some fine morning with the tidings that Ben. Butler has been batted in the face, may be, if the Lord is especially gracious, killed like Cæsar "in the capital." It will be done by some new member—Brown of Calaveras, or any other wrathy delegate from the western slope.

The seats in the house of representatives are arranged in a semi-circular form, with aisles radiating thickly from the centre. Half a pie cut in slices of boarding-house thickness, gives a good idea of the general plan. There is a little area in the center occupied by the pages—and Ben. Butler. Old Strabismus has a seat somewhere back with the other representatives, but he never sits in it. When not lounging in the lobby he is usually hovering in this bit of open field directly under the speaker's nose. When a member, new or old, gainsays a statement of Butler's, the latter makes directly up the aisle and fixes his complicated stare straight into the face of the talker. Men who have become inured to this horrible phantasm, haunting them in broad daylight so closely that its demoniac breath can almost be felt, talk right on with astonishing unconcern. Farnsworth used to go further. He would return stare for stare, and leer for leer. But all men are not Farnsworth's, and it is only after a severe apprenticeship has been served that a man can preserve his coherency within average proximity to Butler's relentless jowl.

The fearful phase of all this matter is that Butler grows worse as he grows older, in congressional sin. Five or six years ago he could be endured if not cured, and even a fresh representative fish could be allowed to flounder in the shallow waters of a maiden speech with a modicum of annoyance. Now Butler waits until the raw member has worried well into the core of his address. Having gradually found that his voice does not ring a particularly different jangle in the halls of Capitol hill from its old-time twang in the district school-house or police court, the new delegate has partially acquired confidence in himself and is warming into something like vigor. This is Butler's cue. The Essex county fiend drives his hands into his pockets and starts across the house, ostensibly upon a private impulse. He contrives to take a path which will bring him face to face with the victim; then abruptly stops as if he had for the first time discovered that somebody was talking.

A look of utter amazement spreads over his knotty features, which express in the acme of pantomime, "Why, who in thunder are you? How long have you been here, anyway?" Then he twirls his twisted glare alternatively from the half-stranded oratorical craft to the sea of members around him with a painful look of inquiry. He asks, as clearly as the words themselves could do it: "Is this all right, boys; does this fellow belong here?" satisfied, apparently, that the poor devil is duly qualified; Butler flops into the nearest empty seat. An interminable ogle of hungry curiosity is turned into the wretched being's soul, and at last he wilts and collapses into servility and slinks down to his boots. Butler strolls away tugging at a cold cigar.

And so I say that on some auspicious morning the national heart will be made glad with the news that his oblique face has been smashed into harmonious pulp. He will corral an arrival from central Colorado, who, like Macduff, will "lay on" him.

African Parrots.

On Hong Island in Africa, close to the Gaboon river, there is a stupendous cotton-tree the wide-spread and gigantic arms of which have served, time immemorial, as a lodging-place, not only for the parrots belonging to this part of the country, but, one might be tempted to believe, for all in Africa. These birds usually spend an hour or more in adjusting themselves in their proper places at night, during which time they keep up such a loud and incessant screaming that you cannot be heard anywhere in the vicinity without raising the voice considerably above the ordinary pitch. At length they are quietly seated, when they commence what very closely resembles a musical concert; this they continue about an hour longer. At regular intervals during the night they sing out as if they were keeping watch. The natives say the concerts have been borrowed from them; and the practice of keeping watch they suppose to have been derived from vessels lying at anchor in the river. These conjectures will not appear improbable to those who are acquainted with the singular aptitude of these birds to catch and imitate the sounds of the human voice. They are never molested; their powers of utterance, in the estimation of the African, are so close an approximation of human speech, that to kill and eat them would be almost equivalent to murder and cannibalism.

Irrigation in the West.

Mr. Phillips, of Kansas, has introduced a bill in Congress to provide for the development and irrigation of the Western plains. It declares that the even-numbered sections of the public lands, from 9 to 36, except the 16th and 37th, which are, as heretofore, to be set apart and devoted to school purposes, shall be devoted solely to the purposes of homestead settlement under the provisions of the homestead laws. The odd-numbered sections are set apart to be sold to actual settlers only in tracts not exceeding one-quarter section at $1.25 per acre, and the settler is to have one year to pay for the same after living thereon that length of time. The proceeds arising from the sales of these odd-numbered sections are to be paid over to the State or Territory in which they are situated, on a requisition from the proper authority, and appropriated for the purposes of irrigation, artesian wells, railways, canals, or bridges, made wholly or in part within the county in which such lands thus sold are situated. This bill is to apply to all lands west of the sixth principal meridian in Kansas and Nebraska, and including Colorado, but excepting the mineral lands of the latter.

The Marshals of France—A Dark Record.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "Of the nine Marshals of France who have been condemned to death since Gilles de Laval, Marshal de Retz, was hung at Nantes in 1440, Marshal Bazaine is the only one who has not suffered capital punishment. Louis de Luxembourg, constable of France, was beheaded upon the Place de Greve, in 1745, for conspiracy and rebellion against Charles VII. and Louis XI. Charles de Gontaut, created Duke de Biron by Henry IV., was a son of the great soldier whom that monarch declared to be the 'right hand' of his throne, and ancestor of the Marquis de Gontaut-Biron, now French ambassador at Berlin. The Duc de Biron, after covering himself with glory at Ivry and Arques, was discontented with the treatment he received from the king, and, though he was made Governor of Burgundy, he several times conspired against Henry IV., who pardoned him again and again. His last crime was to propose to Spain and Savoy that France should be dismembered; and, as a reward of his treason, the Duke of Savoy, was to bestow upon him the hand of his daughter, and he was to be created the reigning prince of Burgundy and Perigord. The plot was discovered, and Henri IV., who entertained a deep affection for his old companion in arms, was ready to forgive even this act of treachery if the Duc de Biron would have acknowledged his misdeeds. But he would not, and he was beheaded within the walls of the Bastile in 1602. Henri II., Duc de Montmorency, was taken prisoner at the battle of Castelnaudry by the royal troops, and beheaded in the courtyard of the capitol at Toulouse in 1632, and in the same year Marshal de Marillac, arrested while at the head of his army, for plotting against Cardinal Richelieu was beheaded upon the Place de Greve. Baron de Luckner, who had served under Frederick II. in Prussia, entered the French army just before the revolution, and rallying to the Republican cause, was created Marshal of France and appointed to the command of the Army of the North. After achieving some insignificant triumphs over the Austrians at Courtrai and Valenciennes, he was suspected of trafficking with the enemy, and being brought before the revolutionary tribunal in 1794, was condemned to death and guillotined. Phillipe de Noailles, Duc de Mouchy, who attempted to defend Louis XVI. from the popular fury was also a victim of the revolution, for both he and his wife were sent to the scaffold during the same year, and the list of French marshals brought to a violent end terminates with Marshal Ney, who was shot upon the 7th of December, 1815.

"Jim Nye."

Ex-Senator Nye, of Nevada, is visiting Washington. As plain "Jim Nye" he is familiarly known to us. He is one of the brightest, handsomest, most popular men who has ever been in Congress. Nothing or nobody was out of the range of his wit. Even the stately Sumner, whose pomposity inspires awe in the most thoughtless, was a target for his neighbor's repartee. Nye is a native of New York State, but emigrated to Nevada while Nevada was quite young, and figured there as Governor (of Virginia City) during that remarkable gold excitement, so graphically described in "Roughing It." Mark Twain seems to have a great admiration for Nye, and has given us a characteristic sketch of him in his "President's Reception." "Many and many is the time," writes the inimitable Mark, "I've seen him stand up and beam and smile on his children (Washoes and Pi-Utes), as he called them in his motherly way; beam on them by hours out of his splendid eyes and fascinate them with his handsome face, and comfort them with his persuasive tongue; seen him stand up there and tell them anecdotes and lies, and quote Watts' hymns to them, till he just took all the war-spirit right out of them and send them away bewildered with his inspired mendacity. Most remarkable man, Jim Nye! He can tell a lie with that purity of accent, that grace of utterance, that convincing emotion! I do reckon he is the handiest creature about making the most of his chances that ever found an all-sufficient substitute for mother's milk in politics and sin!"

Marrying for Money.

An extremely sharp and intelligent American gentleman from the West once walked into the office of Dr. C. T. Jackson, the chemist.

"Dr. Jackson, I presume?" said he.

"Yes, sir."

"Are you alone?"

"Yes, sir."

"May I lock the door?"

And he did so; then, having looked behind the sofa, and satisfied himself that no one else was in the room, he placed a large bundle, done up in a yellow handkerchief, on the table, and opened it.

"There, doctor, look at that."

"Well," said the doctor, "I see it."

"What do you call that, doctor?"

"I call it iron pyrites."

"What!" said the man; "isn't that stuff gold?"

"No," said the doctor, "it's good for nothing; it's pyrites."

And putting some over the fire in a shovel, it soon evaporated up the chimney.

"Well," said the gentlemanly man, with a woe-begone look, "there's a widder up in our town has a whole hill full of that, and I've been and married her."

THE ASHANTEES.—The Ashantee war is bringing to notice some of the queer practices of the natives. The King of Ashantee, desiring one of his Generals to return with his troops, sent by a messenger an "emblem of recall," consisting of a circle of beads. This order was disregarded, and one more potent was sent by the irate King. Its form was that of a small shield made of fibers of palm, and its signification was well understood by its recipient. In accordance with native usage, when a General will not return from war in accord with the message of beads, the King takes this miniature shield and solemnly swears upon it that he will kill himself if his order is again disobeyed. The troops were filled with superstitious horror when the symbol was received, and the General no longer disobeyed the order to retreat.

THE FARMERS' MOVEMENT.

Address of President Snead, at the Meeting of the Farmers' Association of the Seventh Illinois District—Objects of the Organization—How Co-operation has Worked—Benefits of the Cash System, Etc., Etc.

At a meeting of the Farmers' Association of the Seventh Congressional District of Illinois, held at Morris, on the 29th ult., President Snead spoke as follows:

For the first time in the history of America have the producers of this country made any attempt to join hands for the purpose of relieving themselves from oppressions, or for the elevation and advancement of their calling to a higher plane than that accorded by mere accidental circumstances. As a class, we have had but one idea, and by worshiping it so closely, have lost sight of many higher and nobler objects. The social, moral, and intellectual ties which build up and make men and nations strong, have been confined to a narrow limit, and wrapt up in a sanctimonious cloak, and, like a faithful watch-dog, had no interest in protecting any person's rights except his own. May we not, then, offer thanks that a change is being wrought, and that we more fully realize that man is a social being. And, in order to more perfectly develope and illustrate all of the wants and demands of his nature it is necessary to get together and compare notes occasionally, and consider what direction we are drifting. Was not this Grange system, adopted by individuals, been the means of finding out the state of affairs which now exist—no concert of action, no sympathy with each other, nothing that would tend to elevate their condition outside of the old routine of affairs? But time and circumstances have revealed the fact that it is necessary that we should mingle together, and calmly consider our standing in society. We should also consider whether our rights are respected and protected in the tribunals of the nation, as you all know that many of our representatives have no particular interest in our welfare, except, perhaps, incidentally to pocket the fruits of our labors. But, without undue reflections upon those who, it is said, had followed the natural laws of self-preservation, we pass on to examine the advantages of organization. The farmers of the West have undertaken to inaugurate a reform which, if carried to success, will, to some extent, change several features of business in commercial circles, and probably political. The object of this change is to improve the condition of the producers and those interested with them financially, morally, and socially, educating every man, in a commercial point of view, to think and act independently, as a business man, and rely upon his own judgment and knowledge in the ordinary transactions of everyday life. Not that every man should qualify himself to become a merchant, or banker, or lawyer, but that he will find upon investigation that it will be for his welfare to understand some of the principles which underlie these vorious business departments. He will find that the coat he wears has had a tax levied upon it, and should know whether the tax has gone to the Government or simply as a subsidy to the manufacturer. He should also understand that the same coat was sold by the manufacturer to a jobber, who undoubtedly received a profit by handling it. He, perhaps, sold it to the wholesale merchant, and the wholesale merchant turns it over to the retail merchant. The retail merchant has supplied you with the coat. You observe that it has become a thing of considerable magnitude, as it has been continually accumulating something from the time it left the manufacturer. Quite a contrast between that and of shipping a car-load of grain to New York or Boston, as it would frequently require a retroacting telescope to discover its remains after paying express charges.

Under our present banking laws, it is said that money costs the people from 15 to 20 per cent., when it is claimed that the same money can be supplied by the Government and save this entire amount by issuing greenbacks in the place of bank bills. Some claim that a free-banking law would remedy the great evils that seem to exist in our finances, while others claim that nothing short of a specie basis will set us right. These are questions to be settled by the American people within the next twenty-four months, and we should fully prepare to be able to decide upon a course of action that will be for the interests of the producing classes to adopt. The great object to be attained is the adjustment of rules governing trade so that while one party may live another should not die, or while the man who lives by his wits and money may receive a fair compensation, the producer may enjoy similar privileges. One of the great advantages of organization and co-operation will be the reduction of our business to a more systematic standard. We should know what each bushel of corn, oats, wheat, or potatoes costs. We should also understand the value of these products in all of the different markets of the world; also the quantity produced annually, in time to calculate more closely its probable ultimate value. We should also understand what the cost of producing a pound of pork and beef, cheese, butter, etc., is, compared with the raising of grain, and the relative profit of each. In fact, a broad field is open, and many things connected with business transactions require to be righted. Errors have crept into many departments of business which discriminate heavily against a large class of individuals. To illustrate, We have an organization of plow-makers who refused to sell their goods to any except their regularly-appointed monopoly agents; that is, they have farmed out certain territory and established a price which virtually forbids competition, thus compelling you and I to pay such prices as may be fixed by the parties. And, let us inquire, what parties are they?—persons who have any particular interest in our welfare, or is it the almighty dollar they are after? Now, while we would not object so much, if it were not virtually placing the masses of the people in abject servitude, bound down by the will of a few manufacturers of the country. "Well," say these gentlemen, "what are you going to do about it?" I say, for one, that I have a seventeen-year-old reaper, I have plows, etc., and I will run them for seventeen years more before I will ever surrender to this kind of a ring. How, then, shall we meet these unjust combinations? There seems to be but one way, and that by thorough organization and co-operation.

Farmers of the Seventh Congressional District, are you prepared for the work before you? Will you surrender your manhood by purchasing a machine of any character from those who have combined against you? We have claimed no privileges, no other guarantees than that accorded to others, and I have taken the responsibility of saying that we will accept nothing less. I do not understand that farmers, as many have assumed, wish to dispense with middlemen, nor to compel manufacturers to do away with agents, but that we shall claim the right to purchase, through our own agents, such goods and machinery as we may require, especially where almost the entire commission usually paid to agents may be saved and retained in the hands of the consumer. Is this demand unreasonable? Is it unjust? Have we asked any special privileges from the manufacturer than what seems to be proper and right. We propose to pay him cash where he now receives long time notes, many of which we never paid. It has been said that competition is the life of trade. If this be the case, the old stand-by agents should find no fault. But, without dwelling upon this point, I wish to say that the Illinois State Farmers' Association has adopted a business system, one which it is believed has but few objectionable features. Some slight variations and changes may become necessary, yet the plan has been pronounced by business men feasible and practical. This system, a copy of which will be presented for your consideration, is apparently free from anything that looks like monopoly or oppression, requiring of every man who has anything to do with carrying out its provisions to give a strict account of all his doings and acts connected therewith, and if in any instance he is found wanting integrity or business qualifications, there is a power behind that will inform him that his services are no longer wanted. We want no salary-grabbers. I trust we have none yet. If a hydra-head should appear, cut it off without waiting from two to six years before it can be done legally. This long-winded style of thriving should be done away with, and a provision be made for the removal at any time of agents appointed by the State or local organizations, if found dishonest, incompetent, or neglectful of duties. Why not apply this rule to all public servants? If we do not pluck the weeds from our cornfields, our crop will prove a failure. Why not farm our public assemblies when we are in need of a bountiful harvest? The rule to be applied would have to be rigid, yet its application might effect wholesome results. The rules governing the business department are ample, requiring but little more care or labor to carry them out than is required in conducting any ordinary business establishment. A record is to be kept and reports made that will enable the association to detect almost any instance of fraud, and at the expiration of the year know exactly what has been saved over the old system of purchasing. What, then, remains to be done to make the plan a success? The system, of itself, will not do it. The agent you appoint is not sufficient, but it will require your united co-operation, watchful care, and a firm determination to stand by the right. Your agent and your association, every individual, must feel that he has a duty to perform that cannot be done by proxy, and that the success, growth and development of this movement can be measured only by the earnestness and workings of its supporters. It is easy to talk, but not so easy to act. Precept is good, but example is better. One is indicative of what might be, and its beauties and advantages are to be seen in the dreamy distance, while the other is stern reality, giving to us that which is tangible and has intrinsic worth, and will give straight and ultimate success to our movement. But individuals not especially interested with us will tell you our movement is not practical, and that the farmers will not stand by each other. Second, that it is discriminating against the poor man. Third, that there are no business men connected with us. Fourth, we cannot obtain the machinery. Now, we believe these opinions and assertions to be untrue in every particular. In the first place, farmers in general, heretofore, have allowed parties who have no particular interest in their welfare to do their thinking, who to-day are figuring for themselves, and the more they think, study and figure, the more perfectly they understand and comprehend the situation. They have formerly sold their products at wholesale and purchased at retail; have also taken whatever has been offered for them, and paid whatever was asked for articles they were obliged to purchase. They have been, and are to-day, to a large degree, represented in our State and national assemblies by individuals having little or no interest in their welfare. Our revenue laws, railroad laws, banking laws, etc., emanated from a source that could have but little thought or respect for the agricultural interest of the country; and while all other departments have received special care and fostering, there has been a gradual drain upon agriculture for the support of all other branches of trade. Will farmers stand by each other and organize thoroughly? Will they use their individual efforts to remedy these growing evils, demanding equal rights based upon principles of justice? We believe they will.

Second, it discriminates against the poor man, because you adopt a cash basis. Did any business man trust you but that you had to pay the bill? Would he have trusted you had he believed that you could never have paid him? No. If your life depended upon the credit system how long do you think you could sustain yourself? It would depend a little upon circumstances—perhaps thirty, sixty, or ninety days. We may assume that you pay your debts? Yes. How much, then, has the credit system cost you during the past five years? Well, don't know; never figured up, but have generally purchased on credit. Did you find that these notes you gave for machinery became due? Yes, always. Do you ever have to sell your corn at a sacrifice to pay these notes? Yes! sometimes at half price, received by my neighbors, and so continue on from one year to the other, continually ground down, my family often suffering for the comforts of life.

* * * * * * * *

That manufacturers will not deal with us is a very great mistake. While it is true that many have farmed out to agents certain territory, and given them the exclusive right to sell their goods, it is also true that there are first-class establishments that have not done this, and will sell to farmers' agents at satisfactory figures. Yet, in order that we may reap the full benefits to be derived through our purchasing agency system, it is necessary that we should conduct this department upon true business principles; that is, there must be a responsibility at the foundation which will rest upon every man interested in this reform movement. We should all fell that we have undertaken a great work, and that patience and perseverance are requisite qualities in those who are laboring for its success. Difficulties will have to be surmounted, embarrassments will frequently meet you, but energy and careful management will bring success.

Having given you a rough outline of the work before us, and of what may be accomplished by organization and co-operation, we simply wish to ask you if you are ready for the work?

This great movement of the farmers of the country call for vigalence, labor, and continual watchfulness. It means that you and I have something to do besides talk. It means that the seed has been sown and the germ found for one of the greatest reforms of the nineteenth century, and it remains to be seen whether we can properly cultivate that germ until it has so far matured as to bring forth good fruit. Or shall we stand upon the brink of success or failure, trembling with doubt, with fear, on the one hand, and anxiety on the other? All those whose tender hearts entertain such impressions, we would ask if they realize that justice and right are on the one hand, while monopoly and oppression are on the other; and the same old ruts that have been followed so long will be continually growing deeper, and instead of age bringing relief from toil and freedom from burdens, and adding happiness to be mingled with approaching gray hairs, that careworn brow will but testify the continued labor, followed by poverty, and often distress. Agriculture is said to be the noblest calling that man can follow, and its status or condition makes men slaves or freemen. We have had too much of the first, too little of the last; but a brighter day seems to be dawning. The people are awakening to a sense of their duty and condition, and it is believed, will continue to labor in unity until all are free. And you all undoubtedly can now see the force of that old and trite maxim, "He who would be free must first strike the blow." We should not interfere with any legitimate calling or business, but aim to build up those departments upon a solid foundation, and in doing that it is necessary that the industries of the nation should be fostered and protected upon a basis of equality, the occupation of the farmer being second to no other upon earth, and upon his success depends the success of every branch of business. Holding, as he does, the destinies of nations on his hands, should he not wield that power for the elevation of mankind, and especially that of civil life, and mak it what nature designed, the most attractive and independent of all accupations; and, instead of, as now, longing for town or city life, or a change to some distant land, that spot which is now called home should be preserved, beautified, and its inmates made happy and contented? It is for such uses that money is valuable, and it is for that purpose, and that only, that it should be sought. When used to elevate the condition of the people and add to their happiness, it is performing its legitimate functions; but when used simply to gratify selfishness and oppress the people, it ceases to become of any use. It then becomes the imperative duty of every individual to assist in co-adjusting the laws, customs and rules which govern trade, that money shall seek its proper and legitimate channels, and that oppression, monopolies and combinations, unjust discriminations, the usurpation of rights of the people, shall be checked and done away with; that the principles of right, justice and equality shall govern all.

If this is the view of the case you take, I urge you one and all interested in this great work of reform to organize thoroughly, study each other's wants and needs, act in unison, help each other, be magnanimous and just to all, and you will accomplish all your desires. Already your action has been felt in our legislative halls, and to-day your movements are watched and respected in the chambers of the nation, where heretofore you were not known. In fact, the whole world is watching with anxiety and wonder for the results of this great uprising of the people, and well they may wonder and ask for the meaning and the intentions of this great mass of humanity that is now so actively engaged in efforts to throw off the yoke of oppression. One explanation of the problem is this: Truth and justice crushed to earth will rise again, and that no plow rings, reaper rings, corn-planter rings, railroad rings, subsidy rings, salary-grab rings, political rings, or any other rings, can prevent it.

THROUGH the perversity of one of our young men in wearing a pair of light blue pants, when his affianced desired he should wear some other color, the match was broken up on Sunday evening. That shows the fallacy of going with a girl who is supported by her pa; had she worked for a living she would not have been so independent.

WHICH is the vainest bird, the peacock or the weathercock?

Mrs. Williams.

A lady correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, writes from Washington, concerning Mrs. Attorney-General Williams, as follows:

Her early history is as full of romance as one of Dumas' novels, and I dare Rhoda Broughton to produce a story to eclipse it. At 16, she married, against her parents' wishes, a man whose subsequent treatment of her vindicated the family's disapproval and her application for a divorce. These were the days when her headstrong, impetuous nature was strong within her, and her own will her only law. Following its dictates, she drifted westward, perchance for adventure, peradventure, in hopes of a fortune. There, girl-woman as she was, with the waves of self still surging unsubdued, after teaching music for awhile, she consented to bow her neck a second time to an unhappy matrimonial yoke. Her second husband, Mr. George, was a driver on one of the lines of stages crossing the plains, and proved to be a good-for-nothing fellow, who frequently abused her, and had nothing to recommend him but a sort of devil-may-care, handsome face. A pretty picture his wife often afforded the tourist as, standing before their log cabin, she stood with her white arms, bright face, and simple dress, hanging out the family linen. Her husband's treatment became at last so unendurable, that friends procured for her the services of Judge Williams, then a quiet Western lawyer, who loosed her from her unhappy thralldom through the medium of a divorce. Mrs. George still westward pushed her way to California, and taught school in San Francisco, where, many years afterward, Judge Williams met and married the woman, the memory of whose peculiar beauty had never left him. When she heard her husband, Mr. George, was sick, she traveled miles to watch over him in his last hours, and was with him when he died. The woman has marvelous adaptability, and spirit, and nerve, and ambition enough for Agrippina herself.

The Deadly Sewing-Machine.

The London Lancet says: "Some few years ago one of the London hospital physicians called attention to the fact which had come under his notice repeatedly among the out-patients under his care, that the use of the sewing-machine was injurious to the health of those who habitually employed it for many hours together. The patients suffered from nervous debility and other symptoms referable to its employment, and admitted that the constant exertion which necessarily occurred in using heavy double-actioned machines had an exciting and exhausting effect upon them. These statements were somewhat strongly denied at the time, but we think the almost universal adoption of hand-worked machines in family life since that date shows that there was a pretty general feeling among the profession, and probably the public, too, that the exercise required for young ladies in order to work the treadle-machine was not calculated to improve their health. Facts which have recently come to our knowledge show that the evil was no imaginary one, and that many workers at the sewing-machine, or machines of a similar character, do suffer very materially in their health. One of the heaviest forms of machines is, we believe, that employed in 'braiding,' and young women working in this department have suffered very materially, and have been compelled to discontinue the employment. But the distress is not confined to one class of employes; it seems to affect pretty generally all those who use the feet alternately as the motive power of their machinery. If the workers themselves, or their immediate supervisors, were to speak out, there would, we believe, be abundant evidence found that 'machining' is a most exhaustive employment, and one which gradually breaks down the health."

Epitaphs, Etc.

THE following queer epitaph is said to have appeared in a Philadelphia paper:

"Grim death has taken darling little Jerry,
  The son of Joseph and Sevena Howles.
Seven months he suffered with the dysentary,
  And then he perished with his little bowles.
Perhaps 'twas weaning injured little Jerry;
  His bottle seemed to hurt his stomach's tone,
But with the angels he'll get plump and merry,
  For there's no 'nursing bottles' where he's gone.'

AS NEAR as we can remember, the following was given to us in 1870, by a lady who resides near Uxbridge, in England. It was written by a deceased relative of the lady, who was a painter of considerable note. Further, it was composed for the purpose of being put on the gravestone of its author, and indeed, before death, instructions were given to have it put there, but the instructions were never carried out:

Here lies a sinner, to his disgrace,
The only one that's buried in this place;
For, judging by the stones all scattered round,
None but the righteous else may here be found.

EPITAPHS ON A MISER.

Here lies old twenty per cent.;
The more he got, the less he spent;
The more he got, the more he craved;
If he goes to heaven—we'll all be saved.

ON MARRIAGE.

Marriage is like a flaming candle light,
Placed on the window on a summer's night,
Inviting all the insects of the air
To come and singe their pretty winglets there.
Those that are out, butt their heads against the pane;
Those that are in—butt to get out again.

ON LIFE.

Our life is but a winter's day;
Some only breakfast and away;
Others to dinner stay, and are full fed.
The oldest man but sups and goes to bed.
He that goes soonest has the least to pay.

Oatmeal.

Americans are gradually waking up to the fact that oatmeal is by no means an unimportant article of diet. As a food, the merits of which have stood the test of centuries, and which is calculated to promote the sanitary interests of the nation by laying the foundation for more hardy and vigorous constitutions for the coming generation, let us regard its general adoption as an article of diet as nothing short of a national good. Its phosphorescent qualities act as a gentle and healthy stimulant to the brain, and on no other food can one endure so great or so prolonged mental labor as on oatmeal porridge. Properly cooked, it is not only a most healthful and nutritious food, but it is decidedly palatable, as is fully attested by its wonderfully rapid adoption as a popular diet by the very fastidious palates of our American people.

The Rebel Forces.

In the November numbers of the Eclectic and the Land We Love, 1869, an interesting and important correspondence was published between Dr. Joseph Jones, Secretary of the Historical Society, and Gen. S. Cooper, ex-Adjutant-General of the Confederate States. From that source we glean the following facts for the benefit of those who are not so fortunate as to have preserved a file of the magazines. Such facts are startling even to those who participated in the Southern struggle:

First—The available force of the Confederate army did not, during the war, exceed 600,000 men.

Second—The Confederate States never had in their defense more than 200,000 men in the field at one time.

Third—From 1861 to 1865 the Confederate forces actively engaged were only 600,000.

Fourth—The total number of deaths during that time were 200,000.

Fifth—Losses of prisoners counted as total losses, on account of the United States policy of exchange, 200,000.

Sixth—The loss of the Confederate States army by discharge, disability, and desertion, amounted to 100,000.

Seventh—At the close of the war, the force of the Confederate army was less than 100,000.

Eighth—Out of 600,000 men, 500,000 were lost to the service.

These facts are taken from calculations made with great care by Dr. Joseph Jones, submitted to and approved by Gen. S. Cooper, Adjutant-General of the Confederate army.—Mobile (Ala.) Register.

Notes on Sleep.

To literary men, preachers, teachers, lawyers, doctors, journalists, and brain-workers in general, the following hints are exceedingly worth attention:

The fact is, that as life becomes concentrated, and its pursuits more eager, short sleep and early rising become impossible. We take more sleep than our ancestors, and we take more because we want more. Six hours' sleep will do very well for a plowman or bricklayer, or any other man who has no exhaustion but that produced by manual labor, and the sooner he takes it after the labor the better. But for a man whose labor is mental, the stress of work is on his brain and nervous system, and for him who is tired in the evening with a day of mental application, neither early to bed nor early to rise is wholesom. He needs letting down to the level of repose. The longer the interval between the active use of the brain and the retirement to bed, the better his chance of sleep and refreshment. To him an hour after midnight is probably as good as two hours before it, and even then his sleep will not so completely and quickly restore him as it will his neighbor who is physically tired. He must not only go to bed later, but lie longer. His best sleep probably lies in the early morning hours, when all the nervous excitement has passed away, and he is in absolute rest.

Good Interest Rules.

The answer in each case being in cents, separate the two right-hand figures of answer to express in dollars and cents:

Four per cent.—Multiply the principal by the number of days to run, separate right-hand figure from product, and divide by 9.

Five per cent.—Multiply by number of days, and divide by 72.

Six per cent.—Multiply by number of days, separate right-hand figure, and divide by 6.

Eight per cent.—Multiply by number of days, and divide by 45.

Nine per cent.—Multiply by number of days, separate right-hand figure, and divide by 4.

Ten per cent.—Multiply by number of days, and divide by 36.

Twelve per cent.—Multiply by number of days, separate right-hand figure, and divide by 3.

"Society" Requisites.

A correspondent says: "The countersigns required for admission into 'good society' are characteristically demanded by the several cities. Boston draws herself up severely, and, while raising her eye-glass to scan the cerebral development of the importunate one, coldly asks, 'What do you know?' New York, vulgarly displaying her silks and diamonds, looks at the costliness which the applicant's apparel denotes, and pertly says, 'What are you worth?' Philadelphia, proudly drawing around her her covering of pampered aristocracy, demands, blue-book in hand, and lips pursed into prunes, persimmons and prisms, 'Who was your grandfather?' While Washington stops a moment in the gliding German, and, while trying to obtain a sly glimpse of your pedal extremities, with glowing cheeks and heaving breast inquires, 'Can you dance?'"

The Rev. Dr. Stone on the Newspaper.

In a recent sermon the Rev. Dr. Stone, of California, is reported to have said: "The newspaper is more feared to-day in Congressional halls and the high places of corruption and villainy than laws and courts, the stings of conscience and the thunders of divine wrath. God is a great way off, and the judgment waits; but the ubiquitous reporter thrusts his sharp gaze into all covert and hidden schemes, an unerring detective. The pestilent spy will tell all he sees—tell it on the housetops, print it for a nation of readers. Good! Give us more of this. Long live the reporter! Let every public man who meditates a little piece of gainful fraud, understand that he is 'shadowed' at each step by this unbought espionage, and though he may not be converted, he will be restrained."

AT Constantinople, according to a French writer, the jasmine is extensively grown for the manufacture of pipe stems (chibouques). For this purpose the stems are carefully trained until they have attained the desired length and thickness, care being taken to protect the bark by a covering of varnished linen or calico. Two or three times a year the bark is sponged with citron juice, which is said to give it the light color sought after. Some of the pipe stems are over sixteen feet in length, and sell for as much as $100 each.

A Lesson Learned in Berrien County, Mich.

Some time ago, a Mrs. Buckleby, who lives over in Berrien county, directed her son Samuel, a lad of 14 years to take a turn at the churn. Now, as Samuel had set his heart on going a fishing at that very time, he "got his back up," and flatly refused to agitate the cream. The curvature was promptly taken out of his spine by a slipper, and with "tears in his eyes," he went on duty with the dasher. In about half an hour, and during the brief absence of his mother, his eyes fell upon a plate of fly-poison, and a bright, smart thought struck him. Just before Mrs. B. came in, Samuel lifted the fatal platter to his face, and as she entered he put the "poison" from his lips with the dramatic exclamation: "There, mother, I guess you won't lick me no more!" Now what did this Spartan dame do? Did she shriek for a doctor and fall into hysterics? Not much. She simply took Samuel by the nape of the neck, lifted him deftly into the pantry, beat the white of six eggs together, and told him to engulf the same instanter; he, refusing, she called the hired girl, and in a twinkling Sam found himself outside the albumen. Then Mrs. B. began preparing a mustard emetic. Seeing this, Sam's pluck dissolved, and he commenced begging, crying, "I was only tryin' to skeer ye." But the stern mother was not to be softened, and Samuel had to swallow the mustard. He was then forced to take a dose of pain-killer, and had his back rubbed with the "Vigor of Life," and his stomach with the "Oil of Gladness." Then he vomited up everything but his boots and socks. This being over, he took seven Ayer's pills, two spoonfuls of castor oil, a teaspoonful of salts, and a blue pill. And now, if you want to behold the maddest boy in Michigan, just say "fly poison" to Sam Buckleby.—Laporte Herald.

An Ex-Dictator of San Domingo.

Ex-President Baez, who arrived in New York from San Domingo recently, is described as being affable and intelligent looking. He is small in stature, with twinkling black eyes, and a nervous manner that seems at variance with his bushy, iron-gray, Anglo-Saxon, mutton-chop whiskers. He only knows a few words of English. When asked how soon he would visit Washington, he drew his head hard to the left side and elevated both shoulders, both elbows, and the fingers of both hands. Then he said slowly, and with a smile, that perhaps he wouldn't go to Washington. He thought, however, that the time for anexation was not past. He believed that the annexation of San Domingo to a strong power was the only thing that would ultimately secure permanent peace on the island. He liked this country. It was full of evidences of solid prosperity.

Speaking of the existing government of San Domingo, the ex-president was indefinite. He said, under it the people might again break out into civil war, or might settle down into quietness. His fellow-countrymen differed in a good many respects from the Mexicans. Though like them, of Spanish origin, they were more peaceable, or amenable to law.

In answer to a question whether he held President Grant to blame for the failure of the anexation scheme, the extent of his shrug was something wonderful. All his fingers, elbows, shoulders, eyebrows, lips, moustache, knees, and even the toes of his boots were braced hard up, while his neck was fairly grounded on the back and left side of his coat collar. His verbal reply was that that was a very delicate question. Baez referred to his abdication without any apparent annoyance. He bears his reverse of fortune easily and apparently with the cheerful philosophy of a man of the world, whom no surprise takes at a disadvantage.

THE railroads of Missouri are said to be worth, with their rolling stock, equipments, and all other property except ex-Government lands, $24,231,330. The State has given them $16,762,304 bonds; counties, townships, and cities have added $28,576,000. So, the people of Missouri have built the railroads and have then kindly given the corporations $21,107,574 more to pay them for the trouble of ownership. This is more absurd than for England to give princely revenues to people who "condescend to be born."

COOLNESS.—A young man was carving a goose at a dinner-table one day, when, by an awkward move, he knoched it into the lap of a lady who was sitting opposite, in all the glory of a green satin dress. Instead of showing his verdancy by profuse apologies and a confused manner, he simply said: "I'll trouble you for that goose, miss!" Can the annals of society furnish an example of self-possession more sublime?

THE customers of a cooper in the highlands caused him a great deal of vexation by their saving habits and persistence in getting their tubs and casks repaired, buying very little new work. "I stood it long enough, however," said he, "until, one day, old M'Cawbrie brought in an old bung-hole, to which he said he wanted a new barrel. Then I quitted the North in disgust."

MR. G. L. ALBERT has recovered from the Iowa Central railroad a judgment of $6,000 for injuries received in a collision in October, 1872, when his collar bone was fractured and he was crippled for life. Another man named Haines, who was injured at the same time, obtained a verdict of $11,000.

A PREACHER took up a collection on Sunday, and found, when his hat was returned, that there wasn't a cent in it. "I thank my God," said he, turning the hat upside down, and tapping the crown of it with his hand, "that I have got my hat back from this congregation!"

INDIANA NEWS.

There is a Grange in every township in Pike county.

Nearly 1,000 Granges have been organized in this State and still the work of organization is rapidly going on.

A Morgan county dog fell into a dry well where it remained three weeks, being fed during the time by another dog. When taken out it was quite lively, though somewhat emaciated.

Two dramatic clubs, two dancing clubs, an elocutionist, a literary association, a minstrel troupe and a glee club afford amusement to Mishawakagans. Still they are not happy, and yearn for the circus season.

Because of a broken key in the lock of the iron door of the Jefferson county Treasury, the vault was battered down last Friday, all other efforts to obtain an entrance having failed. A battering ram, worked by a number of men, was used.

A merry wife of Jeffersonville formed a lay figure by stuffing a suit of her husband's clothes and propped it at a portico door, so as to give the appearance of a burglar effecting an entrance. The good man coming home late, discovered the figure, and to prove to a burglarious world that he did not care a fig for the life of a cracksman, he fired six shots into the effigy and then valiantly waded into the bunch of rags with a knife.

A Private Word to You.

There is no town or city in the United States, where newspapers are published, at which the best bargains can not be obtained at houses that do not advertise.

On the contrary, all experience and observation proves that those who advertise sell cheaper than those who do not.

Besides, persons who do not advertise, especially at this season of the year, have no desirable goods in stock. For such as they have, since they don't sell much, they must have a big price. It is the general rule, to which there are only enough exceptions to make the rule, that merchants who do not advertise are liberal and fossilized, and everybody knows that such a person will never sell even a remnant unless he gets his regular profit. The advertising merchant sells one hundred dollars worth of goods at ten per cent. profit and makes ten dollars. The non-advertising merchant, in the same hours, sells thirty dollars worth of goods at thirty-three and one-third per cent. profit and makes ten dollars. Each reader is free to buy from either class.

There are two legitimate ways of advertising—one by such special notices as those below, the other by displayed advertsements. Merchants who advertise at all sometimes use one way, sometimes the other. So we say to each reader, if you want to get the best bargains in goods of all kinds read the advertisements and special notices in this paper and buy what you want from one or more of the advertisers. We are sure we know exactly what we are saying, and that this counsel is wise, and that heeding it will be to your advantage.—Kokomo Tribune,

The Size of Countries.

The Red sea would reach from Washington to Colorado, and it is three times as wide as Lake Ontario.

Madagascar is as large as New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Vermon Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Virginia and North Carolina all put together.

Palestine is one-fourth the size of New York.

Hindostan is more than a hundred times as large as Palestine.

Great Britain is two-thirds the size of Japan, one-twelfth the size of Hindostan, one-twentieth of China, and one-twenty-fifth of the United States.

Greece is about the size of Vermont.

The English channel is nearly as large as Lake Superior, and Lake Superior and Lake Huron are as large as the Sea of Azof.

The Great Desert of Africa has nearly the present dimensions of the United States.

The Caspian sea would stretch from New York to St. Augustine, and is as wide as from New York to Rochester.

The following bodies of water are nearly equal in size: German ocean, Black sea, Yellow sea; Hudson's bay is rather larger; the Baltic, Adriatic, Persian gulf, and Œgean sea about half as large, and somewhat larger than Lake Superior.

The Mediterranean, if placed across North America, would make sea navigation from San Diego to Baltimore.

The Gulf of Mexico is about ten times the size of Lake Superior, and about as large as the sea of Kamtschatka, Bay of Bengal, China sea, Okhotsk sea or Japan sea. Lake Ontario would go into either of them more than fifty times.

Great Britain and Ireland are about as large as New Mexico, but not as large as Iowa and Nebraska. They are less than New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

The Boston Post says it is said that the President never went to a dancing school. He can put his foot in it as well as the next one, though.

JOKE ON THE GRANGERS.

A correspondent of the Randolph Enterprise tries to make fun at the expense of the Grangers by the following burlesque account of an initiation. It is rather laughable, and can be enjoyed even by the Grangers themselves, though we warn the writer not to fall into their honest hands. He says:

On being brought into the anti-room of the lodge (Green-grocer Temple No. 101) I was told that I had been balloted for and accepted. My informant, who was masked by what I afterward learned was a large burdock leaf, perforated with holes for the eyes, told me that if I valued my life it would be necessary for me to strip. As I did consider that worth considerable to me, and as he italicized his wishes by carelessly playing with a seven shooter, I withdrew from my garments with eagerness. My masked friend furnished me with a regalia of the first degree—called "The Festive Plough-boy"—which consisted merely of one large cabbage leaf attached to a waistband of potato vines. In this airy costume I was conducted to the door, where my companion gave three distinct raps. (I was securely blindfolded by binding a slice of rutabaga over each eye.) A sepulchral voice from within asked: "Who comes?"

My guide answered: "A youthful agriculturist who desires to become a Granger."

Sepulchral Voice—Have you looked him carefully over?

Guide—I have, noble gate-keeper.

S. V.—Do you find any agricultural marks about his person?

Guide—I do.

S. V.—What are they?

Guide—The candidate has carroty hair, reddish whiskers and a turnip nose.

S. V.—'Tis well. Why do you desire to become a Granger?

Guide (answering for the candidate)—That I may be thereby better enabled to harrow the feelings of rascally politicians.

S. V.—You will bring in the candidate. My worthy strippling, as you cannot see, I will cause you to feel that you are received at the door on the three points of a pitchfork, piercing the region of the stomach, which is to teach you the great virtues—faith, hope and charity. Faith in yourself, hope for cheaper farm machinery and charity for the lightening-rod peddler. You will now be harnessed, and in representation of the horse, Pegasus, will be tested as to endurance and wind.

The candidate is here attached to a small imitation plow, by means of a hempen harness. A dried pumpkin vine is put in his mouth for a bit and bridle. He is made to get down on all fours, the guide seizes the bridle, and urged on by a granger armed with a Canada thistle, which he vigorously applies at the terminus of the spine, the candidate is galloped three times around the room. While making the circuit, the members arise and sing—

Get up and dust, you bully boy—
Who wouldn't be a granger?
If the thistle's prick don't ease your joy,
To feelings you must be estranged, ah!

After this violent exercise he is rubbed dry with corn cobs, beeswaxed where thistled, and brought standing up before the great chief—the most worshipful pumpkin-head.

M. W. P. H.—Why do you desire to be a granger?

Candidate—(answering for himself)—That I may learn to distinguish sewing machine agents.

M. W. P. H.—Have your hands been hardened with toil?

Candidate—Not extensively; but then, I am not running for office.

M. W. P. H.—'Tis well for our lodge to contain several who are supposed to be ready to sacrifice themselves for the good of their constituents. Do you feel pretty smart this evening?

Candidate—Yes, where the bustle goes on.

M. W. P. H.—(savagely)—Give me a chaw of terbacco.

Candidate searching himself thoroughly, but as there is no place about him to stick a pocket, tries to explain, but the most worshipful pumpkin-head interrupts him with:

"Never mind my dear young friend—I am well aware that in your present condition you can no more furnish your friends with the weed than Adam could be comfortable in a plug hat and tight boots. It is merely to teach you the great lesson of economy—doing to others as you'd like to have them do to you. You will now be conducted to the most eminent squash producer, who will teach you the grand hailing sign of distress. The sign, my worthy brother, will insure you against many of the ills of the agriculturists—amongst others, drouths and being bit by the ferocious grasshopper."

The candidate is now conducted to the most eminent squash producer, who thus says:

"My worthy brother, I will now invest you with the order of the Festive Plough-boy, which you have well won by your heroic achievements, while harnessed—may you ever wear it with pleasure to yourself, and may it be a means of terror to your enemies."

(M. E. S. P. then proceeds to invest the candidate with the regalia of the Festive Plough-boy, which consists of a long tomato-vine necklace.) The grand hailing sign of distress is made by gently closing the left eye, laying the right forefinger alongside the nose, and violently wagging the ears. It requires practice, but the advantages are intense. It also has an important signification, which you will do well to heed. The closing of the eye signifies that in all our dealings with mankind we are bound to have an eye to business. Laying the finger alongside the nose is emblematical of wisdom, and places you at once among the knowing ones. This is extremely handy in prognosticating new weather, and saves the wear and tear of almanacs. Wagging the ears signifies sublimity of purpose, as is thought to be emplamatical of "childhood's happy hours." It is also supposed by some scholars to have a distinct reference to apple dumplings, but this fact is somewhat obscure by the dust of ages. In token that you are one of us, you will now be branded. This ceremony is very impressive, and consists of two brands. They are both applied "while the iron is hot," and consist of one letter of the alphabet each. The first is a large letter S, on which you will please sit while the other letter is applied to the stomach. The letter S, my worthy chicken, signifies scooped, and refers to railroad monopolies. It is also supposed to indicate the seat of learning—the spot where the old time teacher hunted for brains with the ferule. The second letter is C, and is applied, as I said before, to the stomach. It has a double meaning. First, the application is an agricultural one, "corn crib," and has reference to the stomach as being the great receptical for bourbon whisky. But, brother, do not be diligent in finding a home market for your corn. The second application of the letter C, my distracted infant, is got hold of as follows: When one granger desires to ascertain "for sure" if there is another of the order in the room, he raises himself gently by the slack of his—of his unmentionables—scratches his off thigh with his near hoff, and remarks in a voice of thunder, "Are there any grangers about?" The answer is "Jees wax." The inquirer then says, "let us see," (letter C), and the other party must immediately pull out his stomach and disclose the brand.

These brands are applied in such a manner that I am enabled to assure you that they will wash.

I was here interrupted, Mr. Editor, by a volley fired into the window, evidently intended for me. Fortunately I escaped without a scratch, and what is of more consequence, succeeded in fetching off my precious manuscript. This is about all there is in the ceremony of any importance—I must leave the country at once—armed men are at my heels—they know that I am waiting to expose them. You may hear from me again by mail, if I should deem it best to expose the other degrees; until then, adieu.

From your sacred friend,
B. BOLE.

Notice—This ceremony of initiation is used during the absence of lady members. Their initiatory ceremonies are entirely different, being much simplified, as they should be.

Curious Anecdote of Cushing and Choate.

[From the Philadelphia Press.]

Old 'Squire Gerrish, of Newburyport, Massachusetts, is a genial soul, who has a host of legal reminiscences. An intimate friend of Webster, Edward Everett, and Rufus Choat, and a law partner of Caleb Cushing, he had a rare opportunity of collecting anecdotes and details that are very interesting now. When connected with Cushing, a time came when those two Titans, Choat and Cushing, were on opposite sides in an important suit. On the day when the case was called the court room was crowded. A battle between such men was a novelty, even in that epoch of brains. To the amazement of judge, jury and spectators, both Choate and Cushing were somewhat anxious for a "continuance"—in other words for a postponement of trial. As a usual thing, both gentlemen were always anxious to force a case to trial, being in a state of "chronic preparation," as Webster once said in speaking of Choate. In going out of court, says Mr. Garrish, I met Choat and said: "How is it that you were ready for a continuance to-day? It is a little odd of you."

Choate replied: "Oh, I am a little pressed with business and can afford to let this case stand over."

Said I: "Choate, this is sheer nonsense. I'll tell you what the matter is. You are afraid of Cushing."

"So I am," was the reply; "and I am not ashamed to own it, either."

"Well, well," said I, "this is pretty good. The idea of Rufus Choate being frightened. What on earth do you fear in Cushing?"

"Mr. Garrish, I will tell you. I am afraid of his overwhelming knowledge of the law."

In the afternoon Cushing came into the office. I went for him at once. "Caleb, what was the matter to-day? Why don't you insist on trying that case?"

"Oh," he replied, "the weather is warm, and we have much to attend to, and I didn't care to hurry matters."

"Now, Cushing, be honest; were you not a little afraid of Choate?"

"Well, Garrish, to be candid about it, I was. Are you satisfied now?"

I then inquired what he feared Choate for. "Do you think," said I, "that he knows any more law than you do?"

"No, sir, I don't," was the answer, "but I'm afraid of the rascal's influence with a jury, right or wrong."

And there it was. The two men had been so often associated that each knew the other's strong points and felt timid.

Gov. Hendricks, in a few remarks at Springfield, Ill., the other day, said: "I feel myself quite taken captive, and now I cannot undertake to make an address, for the reason that in Indiana our minds have not been upon political matters. The contest of 1872 was so sharp and determined in that after it was over we relaxed, and since then have not had any election or contest, nor am I prepared to advise. This much one may assert—that the judgement of the people is against the administration in power; and if all the elements of opposition become combined, the result of the approaching elections must be the defeat of the party that has so long, and with such a firm hold, held the power. I believe the element of the opposition may unite to maintain the States in their constitutional power, and the Federal Government in its rightful authority. Upon that idea the Democrats, the Liberals and the Grangers have a common ground. It is apparent that are dissatisfied, but, so far as I can understand their purposes and feelings, they are more in accord with democratic opinions and purposes than with the party in power, and I will repeat what I suggested to-day in the Senate—that prominent politicians seek to make a pretext of railroad combinations to carry the control and management of railroads into Congress.—Under this pretext centralization is sought. Now, it seems to me that the interests of the farmers of Illinois as shippers of their produce can be more safely protected and regulated at Springfield than at Washington, more safely, for the reason that if you, as their Legislature, fail therein, they can bring you to a more direct and immediate account. The responsibility from Springfield is more direct than from Washington, and under the decisions of the courts, the States can provide for the rights and interests of agriculture as connected with the transportation of products and at the same time not wrong the railroads, and when you give the assurance by your acts to that effect, the farmers will be content to seek such protection rather than a more distant and irresponsible control. Of the future of political matters I cannot now undertake to speak. I believe the 3,000,000 Democratic voters will not disband; but, standing upon such just and liberal positions as will invite co-operation of all the elements of opposition, success may attend. Thanks for the respect you have shown me. I must beg to be excused from any further address.

THE FARMERS

CONTENTMENT.

[Suggested by seeing a little picture of an aged couple seated in a log-cabin before a fire at bedtime.]

The banks is all bustin', Nance, an' things is goin' ter smash;
The people sold for credit what they'd oughter sell for cash,
An' winter's bringin' poverty to everybody's door,
The rich kin stand it pretty well—but it's awful on the poor.

The workin' man's the sufferer, Nance; he's got no work to do;
An' folks are goin' to suffer what they sufferin' never knew,
An' them that's always "showin' off" to poor folks what they've got,
You'll find, perhaps, that they'll turn out the poorest of the lot.

I've just been thinkin', Nancy Jane, about the awful muss;
How folks had better live an' raise their children just like us,
For, as I told old Deacon Smith, he sed it all was true;
He never in his life had seed two folks like me an' you.

Our home's an old log-cabin, Nance, half-hidden in the woods;
Our family's rich in [illegible] and health, but poor in "worldly goods."
We haint no fine lace curtains, or no carpet on the floor,
But the sun is always smilin' through the window an' the door.

Our farm is small—we've got a spring, and horses, hogs and cows;
We've gals to milk, an' cook, an' sew, an' boys to tend the plows,
We've got no gold in banks that bust, nor owe no man a cent;
I tell you, Nance, the Lord is good, and we should feel content.

We're plain and honest country folks, an' know no "city airs;"
We read the Bible every night before we kneel in prayers,
We go to church on Sundays, Nance, and walk just like the rest,
An' live like Christian people ought—we try to do what's best.

Our boys don't do like city boys, who from thar duty shirk,
Whose parents raise 'em up to think 'tis a disgrace to work,
Our gals ain't like them city gals you will so often meet,
Who ought to help their mothers more, an' run less on the street.

You don't see Thomas Henry pushin' billiards every night,
Or loafin' 'bout the tavern gettin' treated till he's tight,
You don't find him runnin' round to catch some damsel's eye,
Or courtin' of some gal that's rich, whose daddy's 'bout to die.

Ah! Nance, the time has come at last when pride must have its fall;
The folks 'll find the workin' man the life and prop of all;
The farmer's independent, Nance, his trade will never spoil
So long as he is able with his sons to till the soil.

The proud, aristocratic folks, who set in fortune's door,
Who thought they'd never come to want, are "busted up" an' poor;
Their servants gone, their horses sold, their houses an' their lands,
An' everythin' except their lives are in the Sheriff's hands.

Old woman, put your knittin' up; its gettin' purty late,
I'll read 'bout two chapters in the Bible, if you'll wait;
We'll pray to God before we sleep, as every Christian ought,
An' thank Him, not for what we want, but what we've had, an' got.

SCIENCE AND SPIRITUALISM.

In view of the apparent tendency of modern religious controversy to narrow down to a contest between Materialism and Spiritualism, the following abstract of a remarkable article which has just appeared in the London Quarterly Journal of Science, will, no doubt, be interesting to readers of every shade of opinion. The article is from the pen of the editor of the Quarterly Journal of Science, Mr. Wm. Crookes, a chemist and physician of high repute in London. He has devoted several years to a careful scientific investigation of the so-called phenomena of Spiritualism, as presented by the Spiritualist, David D. Home, of London, and a Miss Kate Fox, another English "medium." It may be remembered that, several years ago, Mr. Crookes gave an account of certain experiments which he had made upon the so-called spiritual manifestations, as developed in the presence of Mr. Home, and the flutter into which the scientific community was thrown by the statements presented by this gentleman, in view of the fact that he is a chemist of high reputation, and a scientist of acknowledged position, editing not only the Quarterly Journal of Science, but also the Chemical News, the leading chemical publication of Great Britain. In one of the issues of Scribner's Monthly of last year, a very interesting illustrated sketch of these investigations was given. In the present instance Mr. Crookes assures us most positively that "the statements he presents in this paper constitute a record of actual occurrences which have taken place in his own house, and in the presence of witnesses, and under as strict test conditions as he could devise; and that every fact is, moreover, corroborated by the records of independent observers at other times and places." Although these facts are of the most astounding character, and seem utterly irreconcilable with all known theories of modern science, Mr. Crookes says he has satisfied himself of their truth, and thinks it would be moral cowardice to withhold his testimony because his previous publications were ridiculed by critics and others who knew nothing whatever of the subject, and who were too prejudiced to see and judge for themselves whether or not there was truth in the phenomena. He proposes to state simply what he has seen and proved by repeated experiment and test, and has yet to learn that it is irrational to endeavor to discover the causes of unexplained phenomena.

In classifying the various phenomena that have presented themselves to him in the course of his inquiries, Mr. Crookes refers, first, to the movement of heavy bodies, with contact but without medical exertion. This, he states, to be one of the simplest forms of the phenomena observed, varying in degrees from a quivering or vibration of the room and its contents to the actual rising in the air of a heavy body when the hand of the medium is placed upon it. These movements, and indeed most of the phenomena, are preceded by a peculiar cold air, sometimes amounting to a decided wind, sufficient to blow sheets of paper about the room, and to cause a lowering of the thermometer by several degrees.

The second class manifested themselves as percussive and other allied sounds; sometimes as delicate ticks; sometimes a cascade of sharp sounds, as from an induction coil in full work; detonations in the air, sounds like scratching, twittering as of a bird, etc. These sounds were most prominently developed in the presence of Miss Kate Fox, and manifested themselves in all [illegible] around her and in every variety. He assures the reader that, with a full knowledge of the various theories in regard to the sounds, he has tested these all, and is well satisfied that they are true objective occurrences, not produced by trickery or mechanical means. The third class of phenomena consists in the alteration of the weight of bodies, which will be presented in detail in an early number of the Quarterly Journal of Science. The fourth class, namely, the movement of heavy substances when at a distance from the medium, he has seen in many instances. His own chair, he says, has been twisted partly round, while his feet were off the floor. A chair was seen by all present to move slowly up to the table from a far corner, when all were watching it. On one occasion, an empty arm-chair, at his request, moved to where he was sitting, and then slowly back again, a distance of about three feet. He has repeatedly seen, in full light, the movement of a heavy table, and, on several occasions, chairs turned with backs to the table, about a foot and a half off, each occupant kneeling on his chair, with hands resting on the back, but not touching the table. The fifth class is that of the rising of tables and chairs off the ground, without contact with any person. On five separate occasions a heavy dining-table rose between a few inches and a foot and a half from the floor, under special circumstances, which rendered trickery impossible, the hands and feet of the medium being held by him during this movement.

The sixth class is that of the levitation of human beings, which has occurred in the four instances in his presence. He has seen Mr. Home raised completely from the floor of his room in several instances. The accumulated testimony, establishing Mr. Home's levitations, Mr. Crookes considers overwhelming, and he thinks it greatly to be desired that some person, whose evidence will be accepted as conclusive by the scientific world, shall seriously and patiently examine these alleged facts. The seventh class of phenomena consists in the moving of various small articles without contact with any person, which he has very frequently observed, and where there could be no suspicion of trickery. He thinks that when he is in his own dining-room, seated in one part of the room, with a number of persons keenly watching the medium, the latter could not, by any trickery, make an accordeon play in his (Mr. Crooke's) own hands, when the keys are held downward, nor cause the same accordeon to float about the room, playing all the time. He thinks it impossible to introduce machinery which shall wave window curtains; pull up Venetian blinds eight feet off; tie a knot in a handkerchief and place it in a remote corner of the room; sound notes on a distant piano; cause a card-plate to float about the room; raise a water-bottle and tumbler from the table; make a coral necklace raise on end; move about a fan so as to fan a company, or set in motion a pendulum when inclosed in a glass case firmly cemented to the wall. The eighth class is that of luminous appearances, which, according to Mr. Crooke's, require that the room shall be dark, as the lights are in many cases faint. He states that he has seen a solid, self-luminous body, of the size and nearly the shape of a turkey's egg, float noiselessly about the room, being visible for more than ten minutes, and striking the table three times, with a sound like that of a hard solid body, before fading away. He has seen a self-luminous crystaline body placed in his hand by a hand which did not belong to any person in the room, and a luminous cloud floating upward to a picture. In the daylight he has seen luminous clouds hover over a heliotrope on a side-table, break off a sprig, and carry the sprig to a lady; and on several occasions he has seen a similar luminous cloud visibly condense to the form of a hand, and carry about small objects

This leads him to the next or ninth class, namely, the appearance of hands, either self-luminous or visible by ordinary light. Of these phenomena he gives numerous instances. In one case, a small hand rose up from an opening in the ding-table, and gave him a flower; it appeared and disappeared three times, at intervals, affording Mr. Crookes ample opportunity of satisfying himself of its reality, as it occurred in the light, in his own room, while he was holding the medium's hands and feet. The hands and fingers do not always appear solid and life-like, sometimes indeed seeming like a nebulous cloud, partly condensed in the form of a hand. He has more than once seen first an object move, then a luminous cloud appear to form about it, and, lastly, the cloud condense into shape and become a perfectly formed hand. At this stage it was visible to all present. Sometimes if was life-like and graceful, the fingers moving and the flesh apparently as human as that of any person in the room. At the arm or wrist it became hazy, and passed off into a luminous cloud. To the touch the hand appeared sometimes icy cold and dead, at others, warm, grasping his own with the firm pressure of an old friend. In one instance he retained one of these hands in his own, firmly resolved not to let it escape. There was no struggle, no effort to get loose, but it gradually seemed to resolve itself into vapor, and faded in that manner from his grasp. The next, or tenth, class of phenomena comprised those of direct writing, exhibited sometimes in darkness, sometimes in light, sometimes without any apparent agency, at others through the medium of a hand. The eleventh class embraces the rarest phenomena, namely, those of phantom forms and faces, which he witnessed in a very few instances only. The twelfth class covers phenomena that seem to point to the agency of an exterior intelligence other than that of the medium or some person in the room. Although the hypothesis has been suggested that the medium is the source of this intelligence, by those who think they see in this an explanation of many of the facts, yet Mr. Crookes has reason to believe that in certain instances, at least they result from the agency of an outside intelligence, not belonging to any human being present. Under the thirteenth head, Mr. Crookes includes a variety of miscellaneous occurrences of a complex character, not easily grouped under any any of the preceding divisions, to which, however, he refers only briefly, reserving the details for the volume which he is now preparing.

LYING FOR A WAGER.

One day a father sent his son to the mill with corn to grind, but before he went he recommended him not to grind it in the mill in which he should happen to meet with a man named "Beardless." The boy came to a mill, but there he found Beardless.

"God bless you, Beardless," said he.

"God bless you, too, my son," replied the man.

"Can I grind my corn here?" asked the boy.

"Why not?" responded Beardless; "my corn will be soon ready, and you can grind yours as long as you like."

But the boy recollected his father's advice, and left the mill and went to another. But Beardless took some corn and hurried, by a shorter way, to the mill toward which the boy had gone, and reached there before him, and put some of his corn into the mill to be ground.

When the boy arrived, he was greatly surprised to find Beardless there, and so he went away from this and approached a third mill. But Beardless hurried by a short cut, and reached this mills also before the boy, and gave some of his corn to be ground.

He did the same at a fourth mill, so the boy got tired, and, thinking he should find Beardless in every mill, put down his sack, and resolved to grind in this mill, although Beardless was there.

When the boy's corn came to be ground, Beardless said to him:

"Hearken, my son. Let us make a cake of your flour."

The boy was thinking all the time of his father's words, but he could not help himself. So he said:

"Very good, we will make one."

Beardless got up and began to mix the flour with water, which the boy brought him, and he kept mixing till all the corn was ground, and all the flour made into a very large loaf. Then they made a fire, put the bread to bake, and when it was baked, took it and placed it against a wall. Then Beardless said:

"My son, listen to me. If we were to divide the loaf between us, it would not be enough for either of us, so let us tell each other some lies, and whoever tells the greatest lie shall have the whole loaf for himself."

The boy thought, "I cannot now draw back, so I may as well do my best and go on." So he said aloud to Beardless:

"Very well; but you must begin."

Then Beardless told many different lies, and when he got quite tired of lying, the boy said to him:

"Eh! my dear Beardless, if that is all you know, it is not much. Only listen, and have patience a little, whilst I tell you a real truth. In my young days, when I was an old man, we had very many beehives, and it was my business every morning to count them. Now, I always counted the bees easily enough, but I never could count the beehives.

"One morning, whilst counting the bees, I saw that the best bee was missing, so I put a saddle on the cock and mounted, and started in search of my bee. I traced it to the sea-shore, and saw that it had gone over the sea, so I followed it. When I got over, I saw that a man had caught my bee, and was plowing a field with it, in which he was about to sow millet. I called to him:

"That is my bee! How did you get it?'

"And the man said:

"'Well, brother, if it is yours, take it.'

"And he gave me back my bee, and also a sack full of millet. Then I put the sack on my back, and moved the saddle from the cock to the bee. Then I mounted it, and led the cock behind me, that he might rest a little.

Whilst I was crossing the sea, somehow one of the strings of the sack broke, and all the millet fell into the water.

"When I had got over it was already night, so I dismounted, and let the bee loose to graze. The cock I fastened near me, and gave him some hay; after that I lay down to sleep. When I awoke in the morning, I found the wolves had killed my bee and eaten it up; and the honey was lying all over the valley ankle-deep, and on the hills it lay knee-deep.

"Then I began to think in what I could gather up all the honey. I remembered I had a little ax by me, so I went into the forest to try to kill some beast, in order to make a sack from its skin. In the forest I saw two deer dancing on one leg; so I broke the leg with my little ax, and caught them both.

"From the two deer I drew three skins and made three bags, wherein I gathered up all the honey. I put the sacks full of honey on the cock's back, and hastened home. When I reached home, I found that my father had just been born, and they sent me to heaven to get some holy water.

"Whilst I was thinking how I should go to heaven, I remembered the millet which had fallen into the sea. When I reached the sea, I found the millet had grown up quite to heaven, so I climbed it and reached the sky. And on getting into heaven, I saw the millet was quite ripe, and that one whom I met there had reaped it, and had already made a loaf from it, and had broken some pieces into warm milk, which he was eating. I greeted him, saying:

"'God help you!' and he answered, 'God help thee also!' and then he gave me holy water, and I returned.

"But I found that meanwhile there had been a great rain, so that the sea had risen and carried away my millet. Then I grew very anxious as to how I should get down again to earth.

"At last I remembered that I have long hair, so long that when I stand upright it reaches down to the ground, and when I sit it reaches to my ears; so I took my knife and cut one hair after another, and tied them together as I went down them.

"Meanwhile it grew dark, so I tied a knot in the hair, and resolved to rest on that knot through the night.

"But how should I do without a fire? The tinder-box I had by me, but I had no wood! Then I remembered I had somewhere in my overcoat a sewing-needle, so I found it, cut it in pieces, and made a great fire, and when I was well warmed, laid myself down near the fire to sleep.

"I slept soundly, but, unfortunately, a spark of fire burnt the hair through, and so head over heels I fell to the ground, and sank into the earth up to my girdle. I looked about to see how I could get out, and, seeing no help near, I hurried home for a spade, and came back and dug myself out. Then I took the holy water to my father. When I arrived home, I found the reapers working in the cornfield. The corn was so high that the reapers were almost burnt up. Then I shouted to them:

"'Why do you not bring our mare here which is two days long and a day and a half broad, and on whose back large trees are growing? Bring her, that she may make a little shadow on the field!'

"My father quickly brought the mare, and the reapers worked on quite pleasantly in her shadow. Then I took a vessel to bring some water. But the water was frozen, so I took my head and broke the ice with it. Then I filled the vessel with water and carried it to the reapers. When they saw me, they all shouted:

"'But where is your head?'

"I put up my hand to feel for my head, and found, alas! that I had no head on my shoulders. I had forgotten it, and had left it by the water. So I returned quickly, but a fox had got there before me, and was drawing the brain from my head to eat. Then I approached slowly and struck the fox furiously, and he began to run, and, in running, dropped a little book from his pocket. I opened the book, and there I read:

"'The whole is for me, and Beardless is to get nothing!'"

So the boy caught up the loaf and ran off home, and Beardless remained looking after him.

A correspondent at Washington sends the following to the St. Louis Republican: "An amusing incident occurred at a recent White House levee. As Senator Bogy, Bart Able, and old Van, of Kansas City, entered the Blue Room they met Governor Hendricks, who held out his hand to the Senator, saying, 'Good evening Senator Bogy, I am glad to see you.' The Senator looked at the Governor inquiringly. 'I know your face,' he said, 'it is quite familiar, but I can't call your name.' Replied the Governor: 'My name is Hendricks.' 'Hendricks, Hendricks,' mused the Senator from Missouri; 'the name is familiar, but I can't call you to mind. What State are you from?' 'I am from Indiana,' was the bland and somewhat amused response of the Governor. 'Indiana, Indiana?' mused Mr. Bogy, 'What district do you represent?' 'Oh,' said Hendricks, maintaining an admirable gravity under the circumstances, 'I am Governor of Indiana.' 'Oh,' responded the Senator from Missouri, 'I thought the name was familiar. I am glad to see you Governor Hendricks.'"

A Curious Anecdote of Cushing and Choate.

Old Squire Gerrish, of Newburyport, Mass., is a genial soul who has a host of legal reminiscences. An intimate friend of Webster, Edward Everett and Rufus Choate, and a law partner of Caleb Cushing, he had a rare opportunity for collecting anecdotes and details that are very interesting now. While connected with Cushing, a time came when these two Titans, Cushing and Choate, were on opposite sides in an important suit. On the day when the case was called the court-room was crowded. A battle between such men was a novelty, even in that epoch of brains. To the amazement of judge, jury and spectators, both Cushing and Choate were somewhat anxious, for a "continuance"—in other words for a postponement of trial. As a usual thing, both gentlemen were anxious to force a case to trial, being in a state of "chronic preparation," as Webster once said in speaking of Choate. In going out of court, says Mr. Gerrish, I met Choate and said: "How is it that you were ready for a continuance to-day? It is a little odd of you."

Choate replied: "Oh, I am a little pressed with business, and can afford to let this case stand over."

Said I: "Choate, this is sheer nonsense. I'll tell you what the matter is. You are afraid of Cushing."

"So I am," was the reply; "and I am not ashamed to own it, either."

"Well, well," said I; "this is pretty good. The idea of Rufus Choate being frightened! What on earth do you fear in Cushing?"

"Mr. Gerrish, I will tell you, I am afraid of his overwhelming knowledge of the law."

In the afternoon Cushing came into the office. I went for him at once. "Caleb, what was the matter to-day? Why don't you insist on trying that case?"

"Oh," he replied, "the weather was warm, and we have much to attend to, and I didn't care to hurry matters."

"Now, Cushing, be honest; were you not a little afraid of Choate?"

"Well, Gerrish, to be candid about it, I was. Are you satisfied now?"

I then inquired what he feared Choate for. "Do you think," said I, "that he knows more law than you do?"

"No, sir, I don't," was the answer; "but I'm afraid of the rascal's influence with a jury, right or wrong."

And there it was. The two men had been so often associated that each knew the other's strong points, and felt timid. Philadelphia Press.

A Nonplussed Attorney.

A correspondent at Fredonia, N. Y., writes: Being in attendance at the Circuit Court in Albany in the year 1870, I happened to hear the trial of a breach-of-promise case. The plaintiff was a young lady of rather delicate nerves, and although, through the aid of her counsel, Hon. Lyman Tremain, her case was looking well, yet when she came to be cross-examined by the opposite attorney, Hon. Henry Smith, she quailed before his searching examination, and finally fell down in a swoon. The sympathies of everyone were aroused, and Mr. Smith saw that he must do something. The young lady's face was of a purple-red during her swoon, and so, when the next witness was called (a middle-aged lady), Mr. Smith said:

"Witness, you saw the plaintiff faint a short time ago?"

"Yes, sir," said the witness.

"Well, people turn pale when they faint, do they not?"

The witness hesitated a moment, then said, "No, not always."

"Did you ever hear of a case of fainting where the party did not turn pale?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you ever see such a case?"

"Yes, sir."

"When?"

"About a year ago."

"Where was it?"

"In this city."

"Who was it?"

"'Twas a nigger."

The plaintiff won the case.

The West Beginning to Assert Its Power in Congress.

There is evidently a revolt on foot, and the West, as Judge Wright yesterday declared, is coming to the front as dictator of continental policy. The recent speeches in the Senate upon the financial resolutions are remarkable merely for their declaration of distinctive Western policy, not only in finance, but in the matter of internal and transportation policy. Judge Wright and Logan yesterday, Oglesby to-day, and later, too, the vigorous speech of Senator Gordon, which clearly indicates the South's acceptance of Western leadership in such matters, are remarkable indications of the tendencies alluded to. —St. Louis Globe.

[We reproduce below the celebrated poem of Bishop Berkeley, in which the oft-quoted line, "Westward the course of empire takes its way," occurs:]

VERSES ON THE PROSPECT OF PLANTING ARTS AND LEARNING IN AMERICA.

The Muse, disgusted at an age and clime
  Barren of every glorious theme,
In distant lands now waits a better time,
  Producing subjects worthy fame.

In happy climes, where from the genial sun
  And virgin earth such scenes ensue,
The force of Art by nature seems outdone,
  And fancied beauties by the true:

In happy climes, the seat of innocence,
  Where nature guides and virtue rules,
Where men shall not impose for truth and sense
  The pedantry of courts and schools:

There shall be sung another golden age,
  The rise of empire and of arts,
The good and great inspiring Epic rage,
  The wisest heads and noblest hearts.

Not such as Europe breeds in her decay;
  Such as she bred when fresh and young,
When heavenly flame did animate her clay,
  By future poets shall be sung.

Westward the course of Empire takes its way;
  The four first Acts already past,
A fifth shall close the Drama with the day;
  Time's noblest offspring is the last.

Humor.

What a barber mustn't do—Lather his wife.

The best way to raise strawberries—with a spoon.

Why is a poker like an angry word? Because it stirs up a smouldering fire.

Query—Can it be called a feat of skill when a person throws up his situation?

When is an encampment most likely to burn well? When the tents are pitched.

Why is a solar eclipse like a woman whipping her boy? Because it's a hiding of the sun.

A little girl of eight or ten summers being asked what dust was, replied that it was mud with the juice squeezed out.

"Who cut your clothes, Tommy?" asked a visitor of a curiously ragged boy. "Well," said he ingenuously, "ma cuts my pants, and pa cuts my jacket."

"Should I be discovered, I am lost!" exclaimed the hero of a melodrama, as he concealed himself in a closet on the stage. "Should you be discovered, you will be found," was the amendment of a wag in the gallery.

A preacher took up a collection on Sunday, and found when his hat was returned that there wasn't a penny in it. "I am thankful," said he, turning the hat upside down and tapping the crown of it with his hand, "that I have got my hat back from this congregation."

"Wife, what has become of the grapes?" "I suppose, my dear, the hens picked them off," was the bland reply. "Hens—hens!—some two-legged hens, I guess," said the husband, with some impetuosity; to which she firmly replied, "My dear, did you ever see any other kind?"

A Slight Mistake.—A rural gentleman visiting a friend, found at the back of the house, after dusk, an immense snake lying on the grass. He procured an axe, and when he had chopped the reptile into about a dozen pieces he discovered it to be a garden-hoe which should have been hung up in the tool-house.

Foul Promotion.—"Why did the general take you on his staff?" was asked of a young Hussar not long ago by an enthusiast. "Oh! I'll tell you; because I cut——" "Through the ranks of the enemy, you hero!" interrupted the enthusiast (she was a lady). "Oh! dear no, nothing of the sort; it was because I cut up a turkey so well!"

A wag went to the station of one of the railroads one evening, and finding the best car full, said in a low tone, "Why, this car isn't going!" Of course this caused a general stampede, and the wag took the best seat. In the midst of the indignation the wag was asked: "Why did you say this car wasn't going?" "Well, it wasn't then," replied the wag, "but it is now."

Simplicity.—A distinguished journalist announces that he has positively received the following request: "Sir, I should feel much honored by having your autograph for my album. If you deem the request unwarranted on my part, pray pardon me, but at the same time send the refusal in your own handwriting, and with your own signature, that I may know the refusal is authentic."

"Pa," said a son to his father, "what is meant by a 'chip of the old block?'" "Why, my son, do you ask the question?" "Because I was in Enfield this morning, and told them gentlemen while hunting I saw fifty squirrels up one tree. They kept trying to make me say that I did not see but forty-nine; and because I wouldn't say so they said I was a 'chip of the old block.'" "Hem! Well, my son, they only meant that you were smart and honest, like your pa. You can go out to play now."

Hasty Courtship and its Consequences.

On the Fourth of July last an interesting young couple met at a moonlight picnic in New York. As they were foreigners, they did not appreciate the spirit of the day, for, instead of asserting independence like the old colonists, they fell into each other's arms and declared they would be mutual slaves. Such thraldom meant matrimony, of course. He gave her money to purchase rings and things, and she looked forward to the lighting of Hymen's kerosene lamp as an event so near that her heart jumped. But he, finding that instead of a dressmaker, as he supposed her, she was only a box-factory girl, tore himself from her side, repudiated the results of the moonlight meeting, and declared himself fancy free. She brought her broken heart to the courts, where he claimed that when the contract of marriage was made he was a minor. As, of course, it was preposterous that a man under twenty-one years of age could agree to marry without his ma's consent, the jury let him off. As she returns to her work at the box-factory, she has one consolation, the worth of which she may not appreciate—it is, that it was her good fortune not to be a dressmaker.

Soup or broth made of different meats is strengthening, as well as nice flavored, but it should be perfectly free from fat if prepared for invalids.

Opening of Winter in St. Petersburg.

The coming on of winter in St. Petersburg is so different from the way nature does it in America that I am inclined to tell you about it. The Neva generally closes from the 20th of November to the 1st of December. This year it was earlier—on the 15th of November. From the 1st of November there were few fair days—in fact no day when the sun shone all day. It was cloudy, sour weather, with much rain, but no frost, even at night, till the 1st of November, when a cold snap came on, since which time there has been no day when the mercury was above freezing point. The rays of the sun are so oblique as to have little or no effect upon the atmosphere, making the days and nights of nearly equal temperature. The sun is not on duty long enough to accomplish much, as it rises a little before 9 and sets before 3. The twilight is of course very long.

The cold steadily increased for perhaps ten days, when a little snow began to fall, and almost every day since a little has fallen, till now perhaps there is 6 inches. There has been little or no wind, though one day it blew some, and about 2 inches of snow fell, which is called here quite a storm. I learn there are never any snow-storms in this part of Russia, during which more than 3 to 6 inches of snow falls. But the acquisition of snow is constant. It does not appear to come from the clouds, but the water held in solution in the atmosphere which is very damp, it being so near the sea, and country perfectly flat, congeals and chrystalizes, and thus falls slowly but constantly half an inch, or perhaps less, per day. No one carries an umbrella, as it does not snow fast enough to get wet in, and nobody minds it, but they walk, ride, or skate all the time. Hundreds of men work constantly sweeping the sidewalks, crosswalks, and streets. It is not in sufficient quantity to shovel, but is swept into heaps and carried off, leaving only enough to insure good sleighing.

The mercury has been down to 10 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit, though it is warmer now. We may expect it, however, down to 30 and 40, and possibly 50, for days. At such times great wood fires are built on an open grate, open on all sides, I mean, but under a circular iron cover with a hole in the top, in front of all the theatres and the palace. Around these big blazing fires gather the coachmen and servants during the performances at the theatre, opera, or balls, as they never go home after leaving their passengers, but wait in the street. As they must often wait during the greater part of the night, these fires are absolutely indispensable. What the poor horses do I am not aware, for I have not yet seen a horse-blanket, but have seen the horses driven up smoking hot and stand four or five hours uncovered.

Winter here means business, and one must prepare for it, and once prepared, there is apparently no trouble with the cold. Rooms all have double windows, both sashes fitted in close and tight, very thick walls are well stocked with big pardean stoves, which are great heaters. Except for lack of ventilation, they are entirely comfortable, but everybody lives in flats, as in Paris and other continental cities.—Correspondence of the Hartford Post.

The Overthrow of Gladstone.

Mr. Gladstone's defeat is to be sincerely regretted. Assuming the reins of power on the defeat of Disraeli in December, 1868, he has continued at the head of the British Government until the present time. During his administration many important measures affecting the interests of the country have been carried out, principal among them the passage of the Irish church disestablishment act, in 1869, and of the Irish land act, in 1870; the abolition of the purchase system in the army by the exercise of the royal prerogative, in consequence of an adverse vote by the peers on the army regulation bill, and the negotiation of the treaty of Washington. The first of these measures tended greatly to allay the irritation in Ireland, where a very strong feeling existed against contributing to the support of the Church of England by those who were communicants of other sects. He followed it up by other measures conciliatory in their nature, and has done more toward fostering a national feeling in Ireland than had been accomplished during decades under the administration of the conservatives.

The appeal to the people which has resulted so disastrously to the liberal premier was rendered necessary by the defeat of the Government on the Irish Education bill. When the result of the vote was first announced, Gladstone and his ministers tendered their resignations, and Disraeli was, by royal decree, summoned to form a new cabinet. This he declined to do, when Gladstone resumed his charge, partly influenced in his course by the entreaties of Disraeli himself. As soon as Parliament had disposed of the pressing business before it, it was prorogued, and its dissolution was accomplished last week.

Of the incoming administration little progressive legislation was expected. The party has been principally distinguished of late years for its opposition to the reform legislation proposed by the Gladstone ministry. It fought the disestablishment of the Irish church to the bitter end, and its leaders have been continually harping upon "the outrageous act" ever since. The new premier, Benjamin Disraeli, is a man of world-wide reputation and of acknowledged great ability as a statesman, financier, and author. He has twice occupied the position to which he will shortly again be called. His policy, judging by his recent utterances, will be devoted to securing financial reform and to lessening the burdens of taxation. If he shall succeed in doing more than his predecessor in that direction, he will be indeed fortunate.—Chicago Times.

CLINCHED IT.—Two topers, the bright and shining lights of a coterie of bar-room loungers, made a wager as to which could tell the biggest lie, the loser to stand treat as the penalty. Toper No. 1 proceeded to make the astounding statement that "the other night I climbed up to the moon, and drove a spike clear through it." "That's nothing," said No. 2. "I was on the other side and clinched it."

Curious, if True.

A correspondent of the New York Times relates the following incident in connection with the sinking of the Ville du Havre: "Among the passengers was a French priest, who never for a moment lost his self-control in the frenzy which raged around him, or missed, as far as I could see, a single opportunity of comforting or serving those who were about to die. 'Are you a Catholic?' I heard the father ask of a passenger near him. 'I am,' was the reply. 'Make an act of contrition, then, and I will absolve you,' said the priest; and these were his last words on earth. The vessel sank immediately, and the father was drowned; but the gentleman with whom he conversed was among the saved."

FAST TALKING.—One of our contemporaries publishes some statistics upon the important subject of the relative speed in talking of men and women. Photographic reports of speeches and the length they occupy when printed are the evidence upon which the statistics are founded, and from this it appears that a forty-five minutes' lecture recently delivered by Mrs. Burnham filled three and one-half columns of the St. Louis Democrat. Mr. Wendell Phillips and Rev. Henry Ward Beecher some time ago lectured two hours in St. Louis, and while the former filled four and one-half columns the latter filled five. Mrs. Burnham, it seems, did faster talk than either of the others; but the world will not be content to decide the question solely upon this single instance of woman's ability to out-talk men.

SIX MILLIONS.—About two years ago, DR. J. WALKER, an old and prominent physician of California, discovered by actual experience upon his own system, a medicine which may honestly be termed "a boon to suffering humanity." Being a combination of herbalistic extracts, pungent and sour to the taste, and yet possessed of gentle stimulative characteristics—although entirely free from alcohol—he named it VINEGAR BITTERS, and despite the prejudice existing among his profession, against all patent medicines, he determined to brave the jeers of his brother practitioners, and give to suffering humanity the benefit of his accidental discovery. He did so, and the benefits from its use became known. The demand increased, and immense quantities were sold, at a merely nominal price. Its merit is told in the fact that "in two years over SIX MILLIONS of bottles have been sold;" and still the demand increases. Surely such a man should be ranked among the benefactors of the human race. 29

CAN GO ALONE.—A young man who belongs to a club where euchre is the principal intellectual study, took a young lady to church the other Sunday evening, and fell into a gentle dose before the minister had reached his "thirdly." He cannot explain exactly how it happened, but just as the reverened gentleman said somethin about the "last trump," the young man earnestly ejaculated, "I'll go alone!" The young lady says the next time he can "go alone," for she won't go with him.

"Housekeeper" of Health.

The liver being the great depurating or blood cleansing organ of the system—set this great "housekeeper of our health" at work, and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood, and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with very small daily doses of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted systems may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these great resolvents.

DOCTOR'S COULDN'T HELP HIM.

MEIGSVILLE, Morgan Co., O., March 24, 1872.

DEAR DR. PIERCE: When I was 12 or 15 years of age I took what is called King's Evil, and by constant doctoring it would heal in one place and break out in another. It also broke out in my left ear. I first found your name in the Christian Advocate, and sent 10 miles for the first bottle, which did me more good than all other medicines I ever used. I am 28 years old and doctored with five doctors, and not one of them helped me so much as your bottle of Discovery. I have got well and able to do a good day's work. JOHN A WILSON.

Wood's Household Magazine.

The February number of Wood's Household Magazine is really a marvel of what can be furnished for only one dollar a year; considering the cost and the quality this is the cheapest magazine which comes to our table. Its articles have a chasteness about them which is not always found in periodical literature, which adapts it to fill a place now too largely occupied by cheap publications that are positively injurious to the young, without being immoral. We have not room to specify the articles which fill the pages before us—but they are many and excellent. The magazine contains three engravings—a pretty house design—also the New York fashions (illustrated) prepared expressly for the Household by Mme. Demorest. The publisher announces that hereafter the magazine will always be illustrated. Subscriptions may begin with any number. Only one dollar a year, or with chromo Yosemite, $1.50. Address Wood's Household Magazine, Newburgh, N. Y.

The Little Corporal.

This is indisputably the best and cheapest magazine for boys and girls extant. Contents of the February number: "The Lucky-Stone" (Cap. II), "Pierre and Patty" (poem), "Lili's Adventure," "Down by the Sea" (poem), "Rover's Christmas Dinner," "Playing at Siege," "The Long Tailed Bug," "Little Folk Wisdom," "A Little Musician" (illustrated), "More About Chubby Ruff," "Life on an Island" (Chap. VIII), "Shoeing the Steed" (illustrated), "Jack Frost and Miss Snow," "About Natty," "Eddie's Pet," "Eyes and Ears," "Prudy's Pocket," "Work and Play." Subscription price, $1.50 per annum. John E. Miller, publisher, Chicago, Ill.

IT is now generally admitted by honest physicians that when once the consumption is fairly fastened upon the lungs, no human power can save the patient from death. They also say that about fifty per cent. of those who die from this disease can trace the cause to a neglected cough or cold, which might have been cured by a small bottle of Liquid Opodeldoc, or what is the same thing, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.—[Com.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR

To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens and faded or gray hair resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the VIGOR is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft luster and richness of tone it imparts.

SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, February 19, 1874.

Holman, the monopolist member of Congress from Indiana, gave the railroad rings thunder one day last week in the House. The leaven is working and the grist is grinding that will bring the brethren home to roost.

There are rumors of war, if not wars among the Indians. In Wyoming and vicinity the Indians are becoming heroic, and a general Indian war may be depended on. Robeson might as well commence patching up the navy. A few million dollars could be safely expended now in way of preparation.

The tidal wave of temperance is at its flood in Ohio. We hope it will lead on to fortune. As the tide is manipulated by a man who is endeavoring to win Massachusetts over to total abstinence by toiling in Ohio for the paltry pittance of $50 a night, there is good ground for hope.—Enquirer.

Two decisions have just been made, one by Judge Drummond, of the United States District Court, and the other by the Supreme Court of Illinois, to the effect that a married woman may form a valid business partnership with her husband, as with anybody else, and may contract debts on her own account, with the consent of her husband.

The Plymouth Democrat makes a good point when it says: The Government carries papers by the car load across the continent for the same postage that it demands of the county papers for carrying it half a dozen miles, or for simply handing it out of the post-office. This is unjust to county papers, and should be remedied by Congress.

Milton B. Hopkins, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, submitted his biennial report to the Governor, last week. The number of white children between the ages of six and twenty-one is 621,149; the number of colored children, 9,183; increase of scholastic population in six months, 8,783. Total school fund, $8,618,931.27; total school revenue, $2,276,559.75. The number of school houses in the State is 9,902, of which 465 were built last year. The Superintendent is pleased with the results of the township, county and State teachers' institutes, regarding the good accomplished by the latter as invaluable. In the past year $871,909 has been expended in the erection of new school houses.

The platform adopted by the National Grange at St. Louis is very generally commended by the Eastern press. The New York Evening Post says that it reads something like a new Sermon on the Mount. The non-political character of the Grange is now pretty well understood. It has been declared by the National Grange that political questions cannot be even discussed in the meetings of the Order, but freedom of political action outside of the Order is permitted and encouraged. In the State of Illinois there has been some friction between the Granges and the Farmers' Clubs—the former being a secret, non-political, and the latter an open, political organization. How far the differences between the two can be harmonized it is difficult to say. Probably some light may be thrown upon this question by the fall elections.

J. B. McKinney, a Randolph county granger, is the owner of one of the largest and most complete farms in the State. When he was twenty-one years old, he left home with just thirty-one cents in his pocket, and he never had a dollar given him in his life. To-day he owns a farm of 1,600 acres in Randolph county. He is a large stock dealer and has now about 500 head of cattle on his farm. His house is a wonder in its way, standing six stories high with a basement. It contains forty rooms, ninety-three doors and eighty windows. To cover the floors 1,200 yards of carpet were used. The out houses are as complete as the residence, carpenter shop, weighing houses for stock, ice house, stables, etc. The same perfection of arrangement extends over the entire farm, no less than 250 gates being used in the various divisions. Altogether it is one of the most complete farms, and the residence is said to be the finest farm house in the State of Indiana.

The Connecticut Democracy met in Convention, and [illegible] Charles R. Ingersoll [illegible] as well as the rest of the [illegible] State officers elected in 1873. The platform adopted [illegible] states the position of the Democracy in relation to the issues of the day and comprehensively [illegible] honesty, economy and reform in the administration of public affairs. [illegible] elements of the Republican party and the Democracy are indissolubly [illegible] in Connecticut, and [illegible] of success [illegible] out of doubt. In 1870 the Democracy carried the State by 843 majority, but for the two succeeding years the Radicals, aided by the notorious Tho. Allen and his gang of New York roughs, succeeded in carrying the State, obtaining a majority for their candidate for Governor in 1871, of 100, and in 1872 getting 28 majority. In 1873 Governor Ingersoll was elected, along with the whole Democratic and Liberal ticket, by a majority of 3,273, in a total vote of 86,845.

A fresh impetus has been given to the temperance crusade in Ohio, by the appearance of Dr. Dio Lewis among the women, in some places, urging them onward in the movement they have inaugurated. At Ripley, Ohio, every saloon is closed, and this fact is taken as an encouraging sign that singing and prayer before the doors of the establishment had done the work. At Hillsdale, Judge Safford has issued an injunction against the crusade, threatening the women with imprisonment if they continue their trespassing. Dr. Lewis is anxious that the women shall defy the law and go on with their singing and praying. He confesses that the mode which he encourages of fighting intemperance "is not nice," but so long as the women will do it, it is a good thing to keep up the great temperance revival. In order to show that his heart is in the cause, Dr Lewis has reduced his price of lecturing from $100 per day to $50 and $25. The crusade has extended into this State and Illinois, and the women will make open demonstrations as soon as the mud freezes up so they can kneel for praying.

CONUNDRUMS.

The New York Sun propounds the following conundrums to be answered by Radical leaders.

"What is the financial policy of the national Administration? Will it inflate or contract or will the treasury continue to wiggle on the horns of illegal inflation and spasmodic contraction?

"What is the present reconstruction policy of the Government? Does Morton speak by authority, or, is Carpenter its prophet? Has Louisiana a State Government, or is she merely in the grasp of usurpers and robbers?

"Is civil service reform an accomplished fact, or a savory reminiscence?

"Shall we stop the maws of the public creditors by laying heavier taxes, or by selling more bonds?

"Is the great moral party in favor of four more years with the sphinx for its figure head, or shall we have a new deal?

"Let him who can, stand up and answer."

Newville township is to have two chairs in each school house. The idea is a good one and ought to be adopted generally.

DOCTOR S. CLAY TODD!

Resident Specialist, Ft Wayne, Ind

Office and dispensary moved to No. 4 East Columbia street, over the New York Hat Store. Office hours from 8 a. m. to 7 p. m., Sundays excepted.

He wastes no time giving remedies for pain, as they do not cure the disease, that is only tampering with the health and life of the patient; instead he removes the cause of the disease and the patient becomes permanently well. Dr. Todd does not numb the brain and nerves with morphine, opium, chloral or other Narcotic Poisons, but allows the brain and nerves to assist in throwing off the disease.

Dr. Todd cures his patients PERMANENTLY in one third of the time usually consumed by other physicians in drugging the sick to prevent their feeling pain.

Dr. Todd's new method of treatment produces no pain; he does not use caustic, bleeding, setons, blisters, liquors, blue pills, minerals or other harsh treatment, but by the use of New, Pleasant and Healthful Remedies he cures all curable diseases.

Dr. S. Clay Todd particularly request those who have passed thro' treatment with other physicians, and have received no permanent benefit, and were finally called incurable, to call and make a trial of his skill and remedies. All medicines compounded by the Doctor in person.

The Opium or Morphine Habit cured with his painless antidote in one month.

Dr. S. EPILEPTIC FITS,

NERVOUSNESS, NERVOUS DEBILITY, &c., &c.

CURED PERMANENTLY.

Kenton, Ohio, Jan. 27, 1873.—This is to certify that my son was cured of Epileptic Fits by Dr. S. Clay Todd, and has not had a fit or symptom for 3 years.

ZACHEUS CRESNA

Refers to Mr. Robert Pollock, Van Wert, O., cured of Epileptic Fits in two months.

Mr. Henry Rechtold, 152 Brown-st., Rochester, New York, was cured of Epileptic fits in 2 months.

Mr. Gustave Werin, Nashville, Tenn.—Cured in 2 months of Epileptic Fits of 6 years standing, after having been treated unsuccessfully by some of the most eminent physicians of Europe.

GLAIRES

is a form of fits often mistaken for Epilepsy. In this form the patient does not always fall. They often occur in the night, and affect children as well as adults.

CAUSES—Excessive or insufficient food or drink, too rich or too poor quality of food, bad drinking water, and the influence of sudden change of temperature, bad habits, &c.

SYMPTOMS—Hard pains in the stomach or around or under the heart; a disposition to vomit; warm salt water rising to the mouth with effort; diarrhœa and dysentery or obstinate constipation and tardy digestion; the stomach bloating; dizziness of the head; heaviness; loss of memory; the pulse quickened and irregular, sometimes palpitation of the heart; muscular agitation, or twitching convulsions, which become more frequent and severe, and finally end in insanity.

HOME TESTIMONIALS.

Aboit tp., Allen Co Ind, Mar. 4th, 1873.—I hereby certify that I was afflicted with fever sore for nearly 3 years. We employed what we thought the best physicians of Ft. Wayne without any benefit; and for over two years I could not walk, and my whole system was affected. At this stage of the disease I consulted Dr. S. Clay Todd, and, I am glad to say, under his treatment I became perfectly well in four months, and thanks to a Kind Providence, and the skill of Dr. S. Clay Todd, I am no longer a cripple.

I was 61 years old when cured. Those who have such a disease should employ Dr. Todd at once.

MRS. LYDIA K SEPPER, Six miles west of Fort Wayne.

Ft Wayne, Ind. Feb. 15 1873.—I hereby certify that Dr. Todd cured our infant daughter of a large scrofulous tumor on the right under jaw in two weeks without lancing. She has been perfectly well ever since. Cured Aug. 14, 1872.

MRS. HARRIET BROWN, Wife of Mr Harrison Brown, 5 miles west of Fort Wayne.

Fort Wayne, Sep. 17, 1873.—For the benefit of those who think consumption incurable, I will make a statement of my case: On the 12th of last March I was taken with the Lung Fever, or as the doctor called it, Pleuro-Pneumonia. I was attended by one of whom I considered the most eminent physicians of this city 3½ months, during which time he employed 5 other physicians as counsel. For 3 weeks I thought I was getting better, when an abscess began to form in my left lung, and the physicians pronounced it quick consumption, from this time I failed rapidly, and raised from a pint to a quart of phlegm and matter each day, and had night sweats; by the 20th of June I had got so weak I could not lift a glass of water to my mouth, and was confined to bed. At this time some ladies in the neighborhood persuaded my wife to employ Dr. Todd, and I am free to say I improved steadily from the time I began taking his medicines, and in 10 weeks I was able to walk 2 miles, and felt as well as I ever did, now I walk from 3 to 4 miles each day, and neither cough nor spit. I have no pain and think my lung is healed perfectly.

JOHN A. MILLER,

SHE PRAYED FOR DEATH.

Two years and four months I lay upon my back in the most abject suffering every night I thought I would not live until morning and every morning that I would not live until night, and prayed for death to relieve me from my misery. We employed ten (10) physicians the most eminent of Fort Wayne, and other cities, without any benefit. When we heard of the wonderful cures of Dr. S. Clay Todd of this city we employed him, and thanks to a kind Providence and the skill of Dr. Todd. I am now able to attend to my household duties. I would advise all who think their case past help, to apply to Dr. S. Clay Todd at once.

Mrs. DAVID BIRLEY, 109 E. Holeman St.

Nov. 18th, 1872. Fort Wayne, Ind.

SHE HAD LOST ALL HOPE.

Van Wert, O. Nov. 21, 1871—I hereby certify that my daughter was afflicted with Absent Menstruation for 15 months, notwithstanding she was under the treatment of eminent physicians all that time. Having dropsy, sinking spells and supposed to be in consumption. Becoming alarmed we consulted Dr. Todd, of Fort Wayne, under whose treatment she became perfectly well in 16 days. I also had another daughter cured of the piles in 10 days by Dr. Todd.

Respectfully, ASA POLLOCK.

Ask for DR. S. CLAY TODD and insist on seeing him as there are other doctors in the same building. See name on door. Consultations free and confidential at the office or by mail. Medicines sent to all parts of the world by express or mail. Money must be sent by Postoffice order, registered letter, or express, or the medicines will be sent C. O. D. EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

J. A. BARNS, Conductor.

Township Institutes.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

Institute convened at the center school house on February 7th, D. M. Allen in the chair. Teachers were all present. The institute work consisted in exercises in the different common school branches, and discussions on the best methods of teaching the same. Many valuable suggestions were made; and the institute was lively as well as profitable. The question "How can schools be made most pleasant to scholars" was discussed. The trustee took an active part in this discussion, and showed that he, too, had an interest in this direction. Many valuable ideas were suggested. Among the many were these, which we think worthy of [illegible] directors be urged to visit the schools more than they do; that parents be solicited to visit the schools and show to the children, by their presence there, that they have an interest in their education, and not cause them to feel as they must now feel, that, when the doors are closed, all within the four walls of the school room comprise their little world, and they have no sympathy from the out side world at all. We hope and trust this cloud may be speedily dispersed, and the bright sunlight may shine into our school rooms; and then, and not till then, can we, as teachers, feel that we have the sympathy and co-operation of parents. And that the school rooms be made more comfortable by seating them conveniently and with the proper kind of seats. We would recommend a general change of our old straight backed board seats for some one of the modern styles of patent seats. This of course will cost something, but what is the "mighty dollar" compared with the health and comfort of your children? But we are inclined to think that you think "hang to the dollar and let the child get along the best way it can." This, parents and trustees, is penny wise and pound foolish.

The following resolutions were presented to the institute. The first by McDugal:

Whereas, The teachers are required to attend all the township institutes or forfeit a day's wages for non-attendance.

Resolved, That we, the teachers of Jackson township, demand of our trustee pay for attending said institutes.

Laid on the table.

Resolved, That we, the teachers of Jackson township, tender our thanks to Peter Stuffer, township trustee, for his unwearied labors and best wishes, as trustee, in our behalf, as teachers.

Unanimously adopted. Adjourned.

D. M. ALLEN, President.

NEWVILLE TOWNSHIP.

Pursuant to adjournment, the institute met at Cole's corners in District No. 5 on Saturday, January 31st, at ten o'clock, A. M. Called to order by the trustee, J. W. Murphy. Prayer was offered by Rev. R. Faurot. Some remarks were then made by Mr. Barnes, after which the work of the institute was taken up. An interesting lecture was then given on arithmetic, by Mr. Chapman; subject—Division of Fractions, followed by discussion, each speaker being limited to five minutes. Mr. Barnes then continued the subject of arithmetic, taking up several different points in which teachers had found something difficult either to understand or to teach. This was a very interesting lesson, and drew out an animated discussion. Mr. Barnes was then requested to give the teachers some assistance as to the best method of teaching grammar, having reference especially to Harvey's grammar. This recitation occupied about one hour, as it called up many things in the study of grammar that seem not to be very well understood. Earnest discussion succeeded some of the explanations, in which it was apparent that Pinneo's grammar has never succeeded in making all of us good grammarians, and that some other and better work on the subject is necessary in order that we fully comprehend this very difficult branch.

Adjourned for noon. Many citizens were present, and a dinner was provided for the teachers. After an interesting session in the afternoon, the institute adjourned.

J. W. MURPHY, President.

SMITHFIELD TOWNSHIP.

JOHN W. BAXTER, President.
W. H. CLARK, Secretary.

WILMINGTON TOWNSHIP.

Institute met at school house No. 7 February 7th. Programme as follows: Reading by J. J. Eakright; arithmetic by J. A. Campbell; geography, J. P. Kester; grammar, J. S. Otis. Fire Engine.

The Town Board sent a committee to Laporte to examine the fire engine and hose cart, which is offered for sale at a reasonable figure, returned last Saturday with a favorable report. They found the hand engine in good serviceable condition and the hose cart one of the finest in the country

Liquor License.—Our friend Jas. Clifford, of Waterloo, has filed his petition with many more than the requisite number of signers, for a license to retail spiritous liquors. If there are to be saloons, we think that they should be confined to those who possess some qualification to conduct them properly. We think our friend "Jim" able to do this. James is on the sport, and means business every time, but then, he is a quiet gentlemanly fellow, and keep things quiet and respectable around him?

The Boss has come and gone, and we are again happy. We mean Prof. Cushman, the great hum—ble apostle of the horse. He lectured here last Saturday evening, and if to be a success as a lecture a man must indulge in Billingsgate profane language and vile abuse, he was most certainly a success. The way he scored Waterloo was a caution, but we did'nt think the citizens of that place ought to be much concerned therefor, because he was evidently speaking of his superiors. He organized a small class here, and taught them what he knew about the horse. His briddle bit is good and his plan for balky horses is worth all the money, but his lecture was a fraud.

A Handsome Present.—Our popular and generous hearted friend, Geo. J. E. Mayer of Fort Wayne, has presented the Courier office with a splendid office clock, of large proportion and beautiful harmony. This is from the establishment, in which he is the senior member, No. 19 East Main-st. It is a valuable present and one that we esteem very much. It was given to the office, however, and is always to remain a feature of the office, and to be transferred with the office to successors in ownership. On the part of the Courier we humbly thank the donor for his appropriate and valuable present, and hope that for years to come it will mark the time of his prosperity and success.

Attempted Rape.—A miscreant wretch by the name of Timothy Lynch, stopped at the residence of Mr. D. Watson, in Jackson tp., on the evening of Feb. 9th while Mr. Watson was absent. There were two girls, one 16 and the other 13 years old, and two younger children in the house at the time. One of the children shut the stove door, when Lynch opened it and with an oath said, he expected that house to be burned down by morning. He then pushed the oldest girl toward a bed-room but she escaped him. He then went to the kitchen and the girl placed the rest of the children on the lounge and stood before them determined to defend them. Lynch soon came back, and while the girl was taking one of the little boys to bed in a small room he tried to get in after her, but with the assistance of the other girl he was prevented, after showing his evident intention of satisfying his beastly desires. He finally went away, and when the father returned search was made and he was found in a hay-stack about a mile and a half from the house. He is now in jail and his trial may be on to-day or to-morrow.

Shall we have a Fire Engine?

Since the Town Board has show a disposition to do something in the way of providing an apparatus for use on occasion of fires there has been a very general expression of our citizens in favor of such action. But the moment a special tax is talked about of say 25 cents on $100 valuation for the purchase of an engine, hose and hose cart, a very few object, and we are glad to notice that this is confined to those who are abundantly able to pay such a tax. They seem to go on the principle that what money they pay out should not in any way benefit anybody else but themselves.

While they may be conscientious in the view they take of it, they certainly view it from the wrong standpoint. The principal objection advanced is that it will not benefit some of them, as they are too far away from water supplies, and the main part of town. The objection amounts to nothing. If a fire should occur in the wooden block and destroy it, would it not affect the interests of every citizen? But we claim that the greater portion of the property of the town is and will soon be under the protection of an engine of this kind. With the location of a few more cisterns every building within a reasonable distance can be reached. It is not for Main street alone, but for the whole town. Some object because they think Main street will be more benefitted than other localities and ought to pay more. So she will by the provision of this assessment. Perhaps the residents of Main-street could advance the same argument with equal force in regard to the ditch constructed in the west end of town, costing $300, but we think they have too good sense for that. They know that it is of great benefit generally, and so would be a fire engine. He who objects to a fire engine contributes to the destruction of his own and his neighbor's property by fire. He who objects says practically, you shall have no means of defending yourselves from the destroying element. He who objects to a fire engine says people of other towns are fools for purchasing these machines, and advances his opinion in face of the experience of an intelligent public. He who objects to getting a fire engine, will some day, sooner or later, see the good that may, and can, and will be accomplished.

It requires the names of property owners to the amount of ⅔ of the valuation of the property assessed, and a petition is now being circulated asking that a special fire tax of 25 cents be levied for the space of two years with which to purchase this machinery. There is not a man in Auburn but what ought to sign that petition. The one that refuses might want the use of it first. There is one thing certain, we have got to bear our share of conflagrations. We have been singularly free from the presence of this devastating element, but it will come some time.—Providence has favored us thus far, but we must not look for Providence to do it all. The engine and hose-cart can be bought for town orders. The hose will cost about $1.25 per foot, and we will need 510 feet. This will require cash. The whole expense will be about $1260. Let every man that has any interest in Auburn sign this petition, and then we can tell who are for and against us. We hope there will be none of the last.

Free of Charge.—Call at W. & E. T. Martin's Drug Store and get a sample bottle of Dr. A. Boschee's German Syrup, Free of Charge. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and for any person suffering with a severe cough, heavy cold settled on the breast consumption or any disease of the throat and lungs it has no equal. Our regular size bottles 75 cents. In all cases money will be promptly returned if perfect satisfaction is not given. Two doses will relieve any case. Try it.

We protest against different gospel speaking [illegible] of Reub Williams' big scare on the Kelly congressional matter. Now such an item like the following, from the Lagrange Standard is certainly out of place, considering the circumstances with which Reub. has attacked the subject. We do not regard it as proper encouragement after such a startling disclosure:

He may be a "blather-skite," or he may not be for aught we know. It is not becoming to call any man such unless the facts warrant.

And then the following from the Press at Waterloo is not exactly loyal to the great scheme which from Reub's. standpoint seems to be threatening the district:

Our local pride is humbled. Most of the papers, of both parties in this district, make fun of the Indianian's sensational account of the "Congressional succession." They say that the candidate is too big a fool to go to Congress, and Reub. ought to have known it.

We insist that more respect should be shown to "the great mouth-piece of the district. The Indianian has given the key note and it is due our small-pica friend that the other papers should howl accordingly.

For the benefit of the "patent side" papers of this county, the Steuben Republican, which is in the same boat, comes to their defence. Most of these papers will say nothing about the system upon which they are printed, preferring thereby to keep the fraud from their patrons, who subscribe for a local paper. When one of them does say anything, (and this is the case with the Republican) it invariably claims that the "patent side" is better than the home one. If they realy believed this, we should think they would have both sides printed at Chicago, and save all expense for material and hands. There is just two "reasons" for these papers. 1. Want of patronage, which is at the same time a want of demand for any paper at all. 2. The laziness and general worthlessness of their proprietors. The last reason is the most productive of "patent sides."—Press.

The Press is at its old tricks again, and we must correct it again. We have copied the remarks of the Press, in regard to patent outsides into the Courier, several times before. But let the reader look over the 22 columns of neatly printed and well selected reading matter on the inside of the Courier, and then compare it with the sickly looking eight columns on the outside of the Press and decide which suits them best. Local papers very rarely, if ever, devote any space on their outsides to local matter. That of the Press is generally selected from these patent out sides, or else filled up with some dry stuff which few care to read. See the summary of news served up every week, fresh and crisp in the Courier. Notice the condensed report made weekly of the doings of Congress when in session. And observe the extended market reports given every week. Take up the Press and see if you can find any of these features in that beautiful paper, and then ask which is the greatest fraud.

Again observe the extended report of the National Grange at St. Louis, a matter of interest to the reading public generally, and then notice how much the Press contains of the same. Our experience tells us that we are giving a ten fold better paper now than we ever did; we have published them on both plans, while the Press has always adherred to the old plan of given seven or eight columns on the outside, of an inferior selection, when not taken from those ready printed sheets. It was not all their fault that better selections were not given, because they had not the time nor facilities for getting them An experienced editor is paid $125 a month to do nothing but look over all the principal daily papers of the country and select the matter which forms the inside of our paper. So much for the fraud of the thing. None but an idiot will ask why both sides are not printed at Chicago One side must contain local matter in order to be a local paper. Does the outside of the Press contain local matter? It is the inside that makes it local and if this kind of information was not contained therein, even of a meagre character it might as well be printed in Halifax as at Waterloo. We have room enough for all local matters and we consider it an advantage to the reader to give him by this co-operative plan, a larger and better quality of general news than we could by any other means. As to the reasons given by that illuminated sheet for the adoption of this plan, we only have to refer to our business. Our subscription list has steadily and largely increased until we have now a circulation of nearly one thousand If the Press can beat that it may talk about patronage. This office employs three full hands, no cubs, and they have all they can do to meet the demand made upon their labor. If the Press can beat that then it may talk.

As to laziness, we have nothing to say. A peep at the local matter served up every week, as compared with the Press, will show perhaps where laziness comes in. As to worthlessness, we are mute, we never expect to realize the tone and character of the high born idiot of the Press, and we will be supremely happy if we are only permitted to contemplate the matchless beauty of Charles Washington, at a distance. We insist on the last clause as distance lends enchantment, you know.

The first whistle sounded from the new plaining mill was heard on last Saturday morning. This is a large establishment, and with the machinery which will be placed therein a large amount of work will be turned out daily

Smash up.—While an Eel River train was crossing the Grand Rapids road last Tuesday evening a train on that road came along and dashed into it, scattering things generally and breaking several cars loaded with corn

Our small-pica friend down at Waterloo the Indianian, did not give our notice of the improvement of that paper to its readers, as it did with other papers simply, we suppose, because it was not on the whole a flattering one. It commented, however, and made a very strong case in its favor. Well, we forgive you Reub, and hope you will be able to enjoy the fruits of your own egotism. But we will leave it to any three persons, not prejudiced, whether the Courier does not contain as much and as good a selection of reading matter as the Indianian. Now Reub, show your nerve.

Court Doings.

The February term of the DeKalb Circuit Court commenced on Monday last Hon. W. A. Woods, of Goshen, presiding, Judge Best being now employed holding the Elkhart Circuit Court. The Docket is a large one, considering the fact that it has been but two months since the regular session, and a special term having been held since then. There are 220 cases on the Docket, three-fourths of which have already been disposed of. The remaining cases are nearly all at issue and ready for trial, and will no doubt be disposed of during the term. A large amount of Probate business has been disposed of, administrators and guardians "taking the hint" from the order of Judge Best.

We notice but few foreign [illegible] far this term, the business being principally transacted by the attorneys of our own county. Everything connected with the court seems to pass off pleasantly, and Judge Woods' affable and prompt manner of dispatching business meets with the approval of the members of the bar and all concerned.

In the case of W. F. Davidson, the man killed at Butler one day last week, the Coroner's jury returned the following verdict.

We the undersigned, Jurors, empannelled and sworn on the 11th day of February, 1874, at the township of Wilmington, in the county of DeKalb, by James J. Latson, Coroner of said county, to inquire and true presentment make in what manner and by whom, one W. F. Davidson, whose body was found at a place on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad, opposite the coal yards of said railroad, in Butler, Indiana, on the 10th day of February, 1874, came to his death. After having heard the evidence, and examined the body, we do find, that the deceased came to his death by being run over and crushed by Engine No. 3, of the Eel River railroad company, and not by violence on the part of any person.

Given under our hands at the time and place of said Inquisition above mentioned.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE firm of Thomas Perkins & Co., of New York, has been bankrupted by its dishonest clerks, who have for a long time been speculating with the funds of the establishment and lost heavily. They have made a full confession.... Booth, the tragedian, has joined the grand army of bankrupts. His liabilities are put down at $200,000.

THE Massachusetts Legislature has tabled, by a large vote, the resolutions relating to the centennial celebration.... Three prominent Boston hotel-keepers were arrested and taken before a police court the other day, for violation of the liquor law. One of them plead guilty and escaped with a $50 fine. The other two plead not guilty, and were sentenced each to three months' imprisonment at hard labor and a fine of $75. They have appealed, and will carry the case through the courts.

A BILL appropriating $100,000 for the centennial celebration has passed the New Jersey Senate.

A MAN named Guss, who has for some years been in charge of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Cassville, Pa., is charged with the most beastly, horrible practices toward the innocent creatures placed under his care. It appears that he has in the last six years debauched a large number of young girls in the Home, in many cases using force to accomplish his hellish ends. The wretch is under arrest.... Owing to the fact that the names of William M. Tweed and Thomas C. Fields are on the Commission to represent New York at the Centennial Exhibition to be held in Philadelphia, the Assembly of that State has abolished the whole Commission.... Charles Kingsley, the English author, has arrived at New York.

The West.

THE ice crop in Indiana will prove a total failure this winter.... The women of Southern Ohio continue their crusade against the whisky saloons, and are meeting with encouraging success.

ELIJAH SMITH, Richard Worthington and Jesse Thatcher were recently killed near Chariton, Mo., by the explosion of a boiler in a saw-mill.

REV. FLORENCE MCCARTHY, a Baptist preacher of the sensational school, and pastor of one of the leading churches of Chicago, having been locked out of his church by the Trustees for indecorous language in the pulpit, is creating something of a sensation by going about the city preaching in the streets, in saloons, billiard halls, etc.

THE woman's whisky war in Ohio spreads like wildfire, and is about breaking out in Toledo, Columbus, and Wheeling. At Harmony, Clark county, the last saloon in the place has been closed. The crusade has reached Cambridge, Ind., and the women, armed with prayer and hymn-books, are invading the saloons. Not a single drop of spirits is left in the town of Hocking, Logan county, Ohio. At Blanchester, Clinton county, the saloons have been prayed out. At Pomeroy, the ladies, to the number of eighty, make daily visits to the sixty saloons, but are not meeting with very great success. At Syracuse they are also on the war-path. At Ripley, nearly every saloon-keeper capitulated after a week's siege. At first it was the prearranged plan that all saloons in that place should shut the ladies out. The weather was stormy and cold, and, as the ladies sung and prayed in the cold, public sentiment overwhelmingly vetoed the cowardly course of the saloon-keepers, and they were glad to apologize and open their doors. Van Pelt, the New Vienna saloon-keeper, whose conversion required so many days of constant watching and praying, has joined hands with the crusaders, and is delivering telling lectures to his former companions in iniquity.... Advices from the West report that evidence is daily accumulating that the Indians, being ill-treated on the reservations, contemplate an uprising in the spring, and are even now swarming the prairies prepared for war.

A DISPATCH from Cincinnati says of the women's whisky war: "The temperance movement receives fresh impetus from repeated successes. In Washington C. H., a man named Passmore opened a new saloon last week. Immediately the whole moral and religious power of the town turned upon him. Ladies prayed before the door all day and till half-past 10 at night during the snow-storm. At the business men's prayer meeting a message from Passmore announced that he had closed. An immense procession immediately marched to Beck, who had enjoined the women from using a tabernacle in front of his place. Those enjoined remained in church to pray. Beck, on seeing the procession, said he, too, would stop. Only one remains. At Blanchester, all the saloons are closed. At Logan, the ladies likewise celebrate a complete victory. At Lancaster and Athens, work is beginning. At Pomeroy a society has been organized on the principle that there is enough moral and religious power in the city to exterminate the business of trafficking in intoxicating drink, and will resort to law only when other means fail."... An Omaha dispatch says: "The excitement over the Indian news is becoming very great. There is no doubt that in consequence of the failure of agents to provide for them the Indians are leaving their reservations for the purpose of providing themselves at the expense of the settlers, herders and ranchmen."

DISPATCHES from the West are full of accounts of Indian raids on the settlers in the Laramie valley. Several soldiers and ranchmen have been murdered, and large numbers of stock driven off. The Indians claim to be retaliating for raids made on them by whites, and the impression is general along the frontier that they have agreed upon a general war. Lieut. Robinson, Corporal Coleman, and Acting Indian Agent Frank Appleton were recently murdered near Fort Laramie, and their bodies shockingly mutilated. There is great excitement all along the frontier. Gen. Ord, it is stated, is doing all in his power to meet the threatened trouble.

THE Wisconsin Episcopal Diocesan Council has adjourned after a protracted and somewhat acrimonious session, being unable to elect a Bishop. Dr. DeKoven received a majority of the clerical delegates, but the laity exercised their prerogative by vetoing the election by a vote of 31 to 16.

The South.

BRANCH K. BRUCE, colored Senator-elect from Mississippi, was for several years a steamboat porter.... Joseph W. Davis and W. H. McCotter were hung in Maryland on the 6th of February—the former at Westmoreland, the latter at Cambridge.... The Trustees of the Cincinnati Southern railway have assigned the contract for making the road bed ready for the rail, exclusive of two river bridges and iron trestles for eighty miles between South Danville, Ky., and the Tennessee State line to eighteen out of the 164 bidders. The cost will be $1,500,000.

Washington.

A PROPOSITION is on foot to ask Congress to declare the 12th of February—Abraham Lincoln's birthday—a legal holiday.

CALEB CUSHING has received his instructions as Minister to Madrid, and will leave for his post of duty at an early day.... The House Committee on Pensions has agreed to report a bill placing survivors of Indian wars and the war with Mexico on the same footing, with respect to pensions, as soldiers of the war of 1812.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "The House Committee on the Judiciary have decided to report back favorably the Civil Rights bill upon the first call of the committee. It is not now expected that the words 'schools and colleges' will be stricken out."

A WASHINGTON dispatch states that the "report of the Senate Transportation Committee is nearly ready. The testimony alone covers 900 printed octavo pages. It is believed that the committee will either report absolutely against Government aid, or else favor the adoption of one particular route, to be completed under national patronage.... The House Committee on Railroads and Canals has decided to report in favor of chartering a narrow gauge railroad from a point in North Carolina to Leavenworth, Kan.

THE Army Reduction bill, under consideration by the House Military Committee, provides for sweeping reductions in the army; among others, of five regiments of infantry, two of cavalry, and one of artillery. Officers who may necessarily be affected by the reduction are to receive one year's pay on being mustered out.

Political.

THE Republican State Convention of Connecticut, in session at Hartford last week, nominated Henry B. Harrison for Governor. The platform declares that States should be left to regulate their own internal affairs; indorses the course of the National Administration in reference to the recent election in Texas; opposes any further increase of paper currency; favors early resumption of specie payments and equal taxation; denounces land grants to monopolies; demands prompt punishment of dishonest officials, and strict economy in national and State Governments.

MAJ.-GEN. JAMES B. STEEDMAN, has been elected to succeed Chief-Justice Waite as a member of the Ohio Constitutional Convention from Toledo.

The Grange.

THE National Grange, at St. Louis, has unanimously adopted a declaration of purposes and principles. They state that they mean to co-operate for their mutual advancement in every way, morally, socially, and industrially. As they energetically put it, they propose to meet together, talk together, work together, buy together, sell together, act together, in short, do about everything together, except vote together. Every Patron is left free to act with any party that he thinks will best carry out his political ideas. They take pains to disown anything like hostility to middlemen or to railroads, but they will not have a surplus of the former nor submit to any monopoly by the latter. There is a plea for education of a practical sort in agricultural colleges. The women of the country and their friends have not failed to notice that women have taken part in the deliberations and committee work of the grange, and the declaration closes with a pledge that has more promise in it for the rights of woman than any other thing that has been said or done in her behalf in America.

THE National Grange circular for January shows an increase, since the 13th of December, when the last circular was issued, of 1,566 granges. The total at that date was 9,296; the total at that of the last circular was 10,862. The membership is only approximately stated at about 780,000. The increase is largely in the South and the Valley States.

General.

AN extensive cave, abounding in articles and hieroglyphics of great antiquity, has been discovered near Ottawa, Canada.... The Council of the Choctaw Nation has entered its protest against a Territorial Government for the Indian Territory.

THE National Crop Reporter of the 9th inst. publishes estimates of the percentage of the last crop of barley and rye in the hands of producers Jan. 15, in the States of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Ohio, and Wisconsin. The percentage of barley on hand at the date named in the five States, which produced in 1873 some 9,500,000 bushels, is placed at 31 3-10 per cent. The rate of consumption, by which is meant both shipments and home consumption, is highest in Kansas and lowest in Wisconsin, being respectively 76 and 96 per cent. The per centage of rye on hand averages 26 5-10 per cent., which, with a total production last year of about 4,300,000 bushels, indicates an amount now on hand equal to a trifle less than 1,149,000 bushels. The consumption is heaviest in Kansas—80 per cent.—and lightest in Wisconsin—70 per cent.

DISPATCHES from the West continue to furnish details of Indian outrages. Indian Agent Howard telegraphs from the Whitestone Agency to Washington an urgent appeal for military protection. It is estimated that 8,000 Sioux, Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians are ready to take the war-path, and that at least 10,000 soldiers are needed to protect life and property.

Foreign.

A LONDON dispatch of the 7th says: "So far 484 members of Parliament have been returned, of whom 255 are Conservative, 229 Liberal. The Conservatives replace 71 Liberals, and the latter have ousted 27 Conservatives. Baron Rothschild is defeated in the city, standing at the bottom of the poll. It is now rendered certain that Disraeli has secured a fair working majority in Parliament. The defeat of the Gladstone party is attributed to Bruce's unpopular licensing act; the division of the Liberal party on side issues—such as the Education act, female suffrage, the Permissive bill, etc." Sir Charles Dilke and the Marquis of Lorne have been re-elected.... Sickles has left Madrid for home.... Another railway disaster is reported from England. Two trains on the Great Western road collided, killing and injuring many people.... A London dispatch announces the death of Baron Meyer Rothschild.

THE news from Cuba is important. Captain-General Jovellar, who has lately been invested with extraordinary powers by the Madrid Government, has issued a proclamation placing the whole island in a state of siege, and ordering the mobilization for active service of four volunteers out of every ten, this mobilization to begin immediately, and continue six months. All persons between the ages of 20 and 45 not volunteers on the 1st of February are to be enrolled in the militia. Voluntary enlistment is to be for one year, and any volunteer who may enlist for one year will be exempt from all future drafts. Every drafted volunteer will receive $100 bounty. The proclamation embraces other stringent orders, which the Spaniards think will have the effect of ending the war before the summer is over.... Two women lately fought a duel in Sinaloa, Mexico, one of them being killed and the other wounded.

A COMPANY has been organized in London to lay a new cable from Great Britain to Halifax, via the Azores, by which messages will be conveyed at a shilling a word.... David Fredrich Strauss, the eminent German theologian, is dead.... An attempt was recently made at Yeddo, Japan, to assassinate Iwakura, the head of the Japanese delegation that visited America last summer.

UP to the 11th inst. 536 members of the British Parliament had been elected, of whom 283 were Conservatives, and 253 Liberals and Home Rulers.... The Paris Patrie says sharply-worded notes have recently been exchanged between the Governments of Germany and the United States. The subject of the correspondence is not stated.... A Paris dispatch announces the death of Jules Michelet, the well-known author.... British Columbia is having trouble. An attempt by the Ministry to force an alteration of the terms of the Confederation through the Legislature without submitting it to a vote of the people was resisted by the latter, who proceeded to the hall, 1,000 strong, and broke up the sitting.

A LONDON dispatch announces the loss of the German bark Hercules. Fourteen of her crew perished.... The war in Ashantee is closed, and the English troops are en route for home. The savages have been completely subdued, have surrendered the British subjects held by them, and given guarantees for good behavior in the future.... A London telegram says there is a disposition on the part of the counsellors of the Queen of England to appoint the Earl of Derby as Premier instead of Disraeli.

SINCE the establishment of the Government it has given away 74,052,800 acres of land to soldiors, making in all half a million farms of 160 acres each. If the half million of farms were occupied by these soldiers, they would greatly add to the productions of the country; but they are sold to speculators who hold them for years, awaiting good prices and a large profit.

HERE is another of those delightful facts of science: "Feeling is a much slower sense than sight. If a man had an arm long enough to reach the sun, and were to touch that body with the tip of his finger, he would never find out whether it was hot or cold, as he would be dead before the sensation arrived at headquarters, which would require one hundred years."

Items of Interest.

COMMON lye of wood ashes will soften hard putty in a few minutes.

VERMIN DESTROYER.—The following mixture has recently been patented for the destruction of all kinds of vermin in the house, car or stable, together with the larvæ: Bi-sulphide of carbon, 80 parts; essence of petroleum, 20 parts. The liquid is to be applied with a brush.

THE editor of the Boston Journal of Chemistry says: "It is curious that a chain of the compressed cakes of gun cotton, tied around the trunk of a large tree, and exploded, will cut it down instantly by the violence of its action. The cut through the trunk is as sharp as the keenest ax. It may be useful in this way in clearing out forests.

NEVER put a particle of soap about your silver, if you would have it retain its original luster. When it wants polish, take a piece of soft leather and whiting and rub hard. The proprietor of one of the oldest silver establishments in the city of Philadelphia says that "housekeepers ruin ther silver by washing it in soap-suds, as its makes it look like pewter."

ELASTIC VARNISH.—As an excellent and easily manufactured varnish for wicker-work, Mr. Rhien recommends the following composition: One part of good linseed oil is boiled down to a sirupy consistency, and mixed with 20 parts of copal. This mass is then diluted with oil of tupentine to the proper thickness. The varnish dries easily, and remains elastic, so as not to crack by the bending of the basket.

LIFE IN OCEAN DEPTHS.—Light only penetrates water for a few hundred fathoms. Sunlight is positively absent at two hundred fathoms. Agassiz contrived that a photographic plate, inclosed in a case, should be covered by a lid revolving at a set time, according to the depth that was meant to be tested, and with a result as stated. This absence of light is undoubtedly the reason of the cessation of plant liif below that distance.

WAR AND DISEASE.—A report made by Dr. Engel, Director of the Statistical Office at St. Petersburg, who has collected from various sources a large amount of interesting information concerning the loss of life in the German army during the late war, shows that out of a total—in round numbers—of 41,000 deaths, about 12,000 were caused by disease, more than one-half of these, or 7,000 cases, being due to typhus fever. The number who died of dysentery was 2,000; and next in fatality were phthisis, pulmonic diseases, other internal acute disorders, gastric fever, variola, and sudden death.

BORAX FOR COLDS.—A writer in the Medical Record cites a number of cases in which borax has proved a most effective remedy in certain forms of colds. He states that a sudden hoarseness or loss of voice in public speakers or singers, from colds, relief for an hour or so, as by magic, may be often obtained by slowly dissolving, and partially swallowing, a lump of borax the size of a garden pea, or about three or four grains, held in the mouth for ten minutes before speaking or singing. This produces a profuse secretion of saliva, or "watering" of the mouth and throat—probably restoring the voice or tone to the dried vocal cords, just as "wetting" brings back the missing notes to the flute, when it is too dry.

Cicero on Old Age.

Nothing can be more void of foundation than to assert that old age necessarily disqualifies a man from engaging in the great affairs of the world. As well might it be affirmed that the pilot is totally useless and unengaged in the business of the ship, because while the rest of the crew are more actively employed in their respective departments, he sits quietly at the helm and directs its motions. If in the great scenes of business an old man cannot perform a part which requires the force and energy of vigorous years, he can act, however, in a nobler and more important character.

It is not by exertions of corporal strength and activity that the momentous affairs of State are conducted; it is by cool deliberation, by prudent counsel, and by that authoritative influence which ever attends on public esteem; qualifications which are usually strengthened and improved by increase of years. The truth is, if abilities of this latter kind were not the peculiar attributes of old age, our wise ancestors would not surely have distinguished the supreme counsel of the State by the appellation of the Senate. The Lacedæmonians, for the same reason, give to the first magistrates in their Commonwealth the title of Elders; and in fact they are always chosen out of that class of men.

New Cereal.

A new cereal has been grown in Oregon, and the people are puzzled as to whether it belongs to the wheat family, or more nearly resembles rye, barley or oats, opinions being very nearly equally divided. From seven to ten stalks grow from one root, to a height of about four feet, and these stalks, or straw, are thin and hard. The radicals are tough, and spread widely. The heads are six inches in length, and covered with a heavy beard, each filament being five inches long. The grain is double the length of a kernel of wheat, and instead of being firm and compact, is hallow, the cavity containing glutinous matter. While the grain bears a closer resemblance to wheat than anything else, the straw looks more like that of rye or barley. Its origin is somewhat peculiar, the first grain having been taken from the stomach of a wild goose, by a farmer of Tillamook county, nearly three years ago. He was struck with its appearance, and planted it, and the succeeding season sowed the product. He distributed a portion of the second crop among a few friends in different parts of the State, who this year raised small quantities. It will require another year to determine the value of the grain.

WHEN the jury returned a verdict that John Jackson, of Green Bay, was guilty of burglary, Mr. Jackson rose up and said: "I'll bet a hundred dollars I ain't!"

BRICKS adapted for ordinary building purposes are made in England from the refuse of the coal mines.

Education Among European Nations.

An Italian journal publishes some interesting reports as to the educational condition of different European countries.

In Saxony education is compulsory; all inhabitants of the kingdom can read and write, and every child attends school.

In Switzerland all can read and write, and have a good primary education. Education is obligatory, and greater efforts, in proportion to its means, are made to impart primary instruction than in any other European nation.

In all the smaller States of North Germany education is compulsory, and all the children attend school.

In Denmark the same is true. All the Danes, with a few exceptions, can read, write and keep accounts. The children all attend school until the age of fourteen.

In Prussia, almost all the children attend school regularly, except in some of the Eastern districts. An officer who had charge of the military education of the Landwehr, in twelve years had only met with three young soldiers who could neither read nor write. An inquiry having been instituted, it was found that those three were the children of sailors, who had been born on the river, and had never settled in any place. Instruction is obligatory.

In Sweden the proportion of inhabitants who can neither read nor write, is one in a thousand. Instruction is obligatory.

In Baden every child receives instruction; and in Wurtemburg there is not a peasant, or a girl of the lowest class, or a servant in an inn, who can not read, write and account correctly; every child goes to school, instruction being obligatory.

In Holland "public assistance is taken away from every indigent family that neglects to send its child to school. It is estimated that the number of illiterate is three per cent.

In Norway, almost all the Norwegians can read, write and account passably well. Instruction obligatory.

In Bavaria, among one hundred conscripts, but seven whose education was incomplete, or entirely wanting, were found. Instrucation also obligatory.

France, with its twenty-three illiterate conscripts in a hundred, occupies the twelfth class. It is followed by Belgium, Italy, Austria, Greece, Spain, Portugal, Moldo-Wallachia, Russia and Turkey, in the order named.

In Italy, however, the conditions vary much, according to the province.

Rough on Phelim.

The hero of the following narrative, says the Danbury News, must have had his curiosity satisfied. Phelim O'Callaghan, a well-to-do, jolly tempered Hibernian, who "never spoils a joke for relations' sake," tells the following on himself:—

During a recent visit to the metropolis, Phelim observed while strolling up one of the principal streets, a fierce-looking (liqueous) Modoc in front of a tobacco shop, which suggested, naturally, a smoke, Phelim walked in.

A bright-eyed Caucasian woman was in attendance, of whom such a satisfactory purchase was made, that Phelim asked the price by the box, when the young woman called to her husband, who was in an adjoining room, for the desired information. Much to the consternation of Phelim, in walked (in response to the inquiry) a thick-lipped, white-ivoried, wooly-patted, unadulterated son of Guinea, who examined the quality of the cigar, named the price, and retired.

"Is that your husband," whispered Phelim, with protruding eyeballs, after the apparition of the "Lord and Master" had withdrawn.

Upon the woman replying affirmatively, he continued: "What in the divil did such a pretty white young gal as ye marry a nagur for?"

"Oh, said the better-half, I have a sister who did a great deal worse than that!"

"Was nor that!" echoed Phelim, dumbfounded, "By the blue blazes if I know how that could be!"

"Well, said the woman, archly, "she married an Irishman."

Reminiscence of Lord Palmerston.

Then we have some criticism upon the unsociable character of modern fashionable society, some remarks upon the art of conversation, and some reminiscences of Lord Palmerston. At a dinner-table, or in general society, Lord Palmerston, though always genial, did not always shine; but when you were at home with him, or when you were at work with him, or when you were walking with him, he was a charming companion. And what was said about his avoidance of the past, and his intense interest in the present and the future, is exactly true. I saw a great deal of him in the last ten years of his life, and I only remember two or three instances when he went back upon the past; but, as regards our hopes and prosects for the future, he was always ready to discourse at large, whether the subject was agriculture or law, or politics or political economy.

A Preliminary Difficulty.

The professor of natural philosophy in a certain college recently gave the class a problem to think of during the night and answer the next day. The question was this: "If a hole were bored through the center of the earth, from side to side, and a ball dropped into it, what motion would the ball pass through and how would it come to a state of rest?" The next morning a student was called up to solve the problem. "What answer have you to give to the question?" asked the professor. "Well, really," replied the student, "I have not thought of the main question, but of a preliminary one. How are you going to get that hole through?"

THE cultivation of the liquorice plant in England is confined to the neighborhood of Pontefract. The plant resembles a bunch or young ash saplings, growing in twigs of four or five from each root to about two feet in height. The roots are about two or three feet deep, requiring very deep soil for full growth. At first it is set in a deep trench, and afterward earthed like celery. Cabbages are generally grown in the furrows, which come to perfection some weeks earlier than those on the open market gardens, from the shelter of the ridges.

The Temperance Crusade in Southern Ohio.

(Correspondence Chicago Tribune.)

CINCINNATI, Feb. 4.—The woman's whisky-war shows no signs of abatement. At Franklin, Warren County, the siege of the saloons is kept up without intermission. On commencing their work for last week, the ladies directed nearly all their efforts against one saloon, kept by Mr. Webber. Nobly and bravely did they stick to their post from early dawn to late at night, watching and praying in front of the saloon. On Saturday evening he came to time, and signed the pledge never to engage in the business again in the place. The committee then presented the pledge to a Mr. Spader who also signed. After signing the pledge Mr. Webber opened his doors and invited the ladies in, and they held a general prayer and praise meeting. None seemed to enjoy it much more than he did, shaking hands with the women who had prayed so fervently for him during the week, and he seemed happy that he had taken the step at last. Only two saloons and one drug-store remain which have not complied with the conditions of the pledge. These, of course, will receive all attention possible.

At Hillsborro, Highland County, the eighty-three ladies who occupied the tabernacle in front of Dunn's drug-store have removed their shanty and suspended operations on account of having been served with an injunction from Judge Safford.

Mr. Dunn has entered suit against the ladies for trespass and defamation of character, laying his damages at $10,000. When the injunction is dissolved, the ladies propose to continue their work of love in prayer and song. In the the meantime immense temperance meetings are being held in churches. At London, Madison county, the temperance excitement is at fever heat. A petition to stop the traffic in the town has received over 1,000 signatures. Crowded meetings, alternating between churches, have been held every evening. The ladies called on druggists, and, without exception, they signed the pledge and entered heartily upon the work. The dealers, of whom their are twenty-five or thirty, have not yielded, though they are visited daily by from fifty to one hundred ladies. Feeling is becoming more intense every hour.

Yesterday morning it was resolved to close all the business houses for one hour from 9 a. m., till victory is secured. At the tap of the bell, banks, stores and shops are closed, and the people assemble for prayer.

Strong symtoms of a crusade have broken out in Logan, Hocking county; also at Cedarville, Greene county. At the latter place two saloon-keepers have struck their colors in anticipation of trouble and will move away.

The ladies went their rounds yesterday, as usual, at Morrow, Warren county. At Jerold's saloon they were received kindly by Jerold and his wife, who entertained them, and thanked them for the call. Mrs. Jerold joined in urging her husband to sell out. Another saloon-keeper called on was courteous but says though he has banished strong liquors he will continue to sell wine and beer. At Waynesville, Warren county, the war for total suppression is actively maintained. Three law-suits have been begun by wives, under the law. One grocery-keeper has sold out to a temperance man. The women held a prayer-meeting yesterday at Roper's saloon. He received them moodily, but let them proceed without interruption.

Hostilities have commenced at Moscow, Clermont county. The first meeting was held last Wednesday, at which sixty ladies were enrolled. The first visit was made next day at 11 a. m. Twenty-six ladies went to Wintzel's saloon. He took each name at the door in writing. When the ladies got inside they discovered that red pepper had been placed on the stove and scattered on the floor. Those who sang were obliged to go outside, but several remained in and prayed while the proprietor danced and made irreverent remarks. His wife and daughter ordered the ladies away, but were met with pious expostulations. In the afternoon the praying-band went to Arm's saloon. The greeting of the proprietor and his wife was polite, and both were moved to tears by the persuasive talk of the visitors. The saloon-keeper, however, would make no promises.

At New Vienna, Clark county, the only saloon-keeper holding out is Van Pelt. The guard over his house consisted of eight or ten ladies, who are relieved every two hours. Van Pelt seems to enjoy their prolonged visits, and invites them in warmly, treating them with every civilty. This daily watching does not suit the customers, who object to having their names enrolled as frequenters. Van Velt says he will not quit the business as long as he can raise money to buy a pint of rum, and the women say they will never raise the siege until they pray him out.

Sea-Sickness.

The opinion so commonly held in regard to sea-sickness, namely, that it is due either to a congestion of the brain, or to a commotion in the abdominal viscera caused by the motion of the vessel, are very plausibly combatted by M. Pellerin, who, in a paper read before the French Academy, attributes the malady to a deranged circulation of the blood produced by the alternate rolling and heaving of the vessel. The result of this, he says, is not a congestion of the brain, which is, on the contrary, deprived of some of the blood required to keep up a stimulus of that nervous center; that sensation which is felt in sea-sickness resembling, peculiarly, what is felt immediately after a letting of blood when the patient sits or stands, namely, a disposition to vomit, or actual vomiting. In support of this opinion, mention is made of the fact that persons who are liable to sea-sickness experience its effects in a much slighter degree when they are in a horizontal position, the relief thus afforded being like that which is produce in the same position when a person is in a state of syncope.

FLATTERY.—It is easy to tell when others are flattered, but not when we ourselves are, and every man and woman will lend firm belief to the soft nothings of the very man they believe to be an arrant flatter when others are in the case.

THE GRANGERS.

Proceedings of the National Convention of the Patrons of Husbandry, at St. Louis.

FIRST DAY.

The National Grange met in the ladies' ordinary of the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, on Wednesday, Feb. 4, Mr. Dudley W. Adams, Grand Master, in the chair. After prayer by the Chaplain, Mr. T. R. Allen, Master of Missouri, welcomed the delegates in a brief and cordial speech, adding something about the great spread and prosperity of the order in Missouri. Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Grange, responded in a few felicitous remarks. An address from Grand Master Adams followed, which was full of suggestions and words of encouragement. The following is the address in full:

Brothers and Sisters of the National Grange:

The work of the National Grange for the past year has been almost exclusively one of organization. In this direction its success has been such as to excite the constant wonder of even its own members, while those outside the gates have beheld our growth with undisguised amazement. At our last annual meeting there were represented nine State Granges, having under their jurisdiction about 1,300 subordinate granges. To-day there are State Granges in thirty-two States, two Territories, and the Province of Quebec, in the Dominion of Canada, all of which are to-day present through their chosen representatives, and claim under their jurisdiction nearly 12,000 subordinate Granges in America.

The causes which have led to the great uprising, which have rendered the work of organization possible, and even easy, are few but grave, and mainly of a nature never contemplated by the originators of the order. In its inception it was intended to be chiefly a social and educational institution, something after the nature of a farmers' club, only more comprehensive in its plan, including both sexes, and rendered more attractive by a pleasing ritual and the subtle charm of secrecy. It was intended to bring together at frequent and stated periods the agricultural population, to interchange views, discuss agricultural, literary and scientific questions, and cultivate the social amenities of civilized life. In short, it was intended to improve the standing of the tillers of the soil, mentally, morally, and socially. As such it has been and is being a most magnificent success. Though some other features, which have been engrafted on the parent stock at a later day, have occupied a more prominent place in the eye of the public than this, yet it cannot be denied that none are of equal importance to the permanent welfare of the order and its members, for, really, moral worth, mental power and social culture lie at the foundation of all real progress. There is danger that, in grappling with the gigantic questions of the hour, we may lose sight of the rock on which we builded. When the first subordinate granges had been organized one of the first and most proper subjects for discussion was, How to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before. During these discussions the fact soon became prominent that how to sell crops was fully as knotty a question as how to grow them. It came to the conviction of members that we received 60 cents for a bushel of wheat, while the man who ate it paid $1.20 for it. We were selling corn at 20 cents per bushel, while the consumer was paying 80 cents for it. In what we bought there was the same discrepancy between first cost and what we were obliged to pay. For mowers, sewing-machines, plows, musical instruments, etc., we were paying from 20 to 200 per cent. above the original cost. We asked ourselves whether this amazing difference was a necessity, or the result of circumstances over which we had control. The solution of this problem soon became a leading idea in the order. Subordinate granges, county councils and State Granges have given this one point more thought and attention than perhaps any other, and I am happy to know that satisfactory progress has been made—millions of dollars saved to the members of the order—and still the outlook is, that we are as yet only on the threshold of this great work. Almost universally we find manufacturers and consumers equally anxious to be relieved of so much as is possible of the loss in transit occasioned by a surplus of middlemen. Most of those manufacturers of small agricultural implements have been found ready to sell direct to granges at wholesale rates. With the manufacturers of reapers and mowers the case has been different, not that they were unwilling to do so from any principle or prejudice, but no one State was strong enough to show them that they could offer a more certain market for their wares than could be obtained through their present system of agencies.

In such cases as these it is the duty of the National to lend its aid to the State Granges, or by itself grapple with the difficulty. The subject of co-operative stores is one in which subordinate granges have manifested much interest, but the want of definite information as to the most approved and successful plan for conducting them has prevented their general establishment. I am of opinion that the National Grange should propose a careful and elaborate plan for such stores, using therefor the abundant materials which the experience of the Rochdale and other societies affords. This would be hailed with delight by thousands of Patrons who are now groping in the dark.

Transportation of farm products to market is an outgrowth of and properly a part of the same question, and a part which has laid firm hold on the conscience of our people. In a country of magnificent distances, the transportation of heavy farm products by wagons to market is, of course, out of the question. Railroads are a necessity of the times and circumstances. Fully recognizing this, the Government has kindly fostered and liberally subsidized them. The people have heavily taxed themselves to aid in their construction, expecting substantial benefits in return. While we readily assent to the proposition that railroads, even as now conducted, add immensely to the development of the country and the convenience of the people, still, in our inmost soul we feel deeply wronged at the return made for the kind and liberal spirit we have shown them. Rates of freight are often exorbitantly high and frequently changed. Often a larger bill is charged for a short distance than a long one, thus discriminating against places, and often higher rates are charged one individual than another, thus discriminating against persons. When we plant a crop we can only guess what it will cost to send it to market, for we are the slaves of those whom we created.

Where lies the remedy? For even in our own ranks there is a Babel of opinion. Some advocate new routes East, subsidized by Government, either rail or canal; others would have new roads made by private enterprise and trust to competition.

The first of these would require many years before they can afford the relief which we want now, and besides will surely develop into other Credit-Mobiliers. The second will only add one more link to the chain which now binds us hand and foot. I see no solution for this question but for Congress to avail itself of its constitutional right to regulate commerce between the States, and for the States themselves to regulate the tariffs within their own boundaries. That this right is vested in the Government of the States and nation seems wholly clear. When a railroad is to be built, the line of which crosses my private property, and I do not wish to have this property mutilated, I frankly so inform the railroad. Government now steps in and very properly says: "This railroad is for the development of the State, and on the ground that the public good demands its construction, you must sell them your right of way and we will allow you a reasonable compensation therefor." Now, it seems clear to me that the same Government which can take my land for the public good and fix the price therefor, can say to this railroad, "The public good demands that you carry freights and persons at reasonable rates, which you henceforth must do, and we will decide what those rates shall be."

As well as any one I fully appreciate the difficulties which are in the way of a traffic fixed by law—I can easily see where it may sometimes work hardship and even actual wrong. But it is amazing, it seems to me preposterous, that disinterested men are not as competent as those interested to fix rates which shall be just to the railroads and the people. To rely on competition for relief will only bring renewed disappointment. Our past history shows that the rapid increase of railroads has only resulted in more gigantic combinations.

It will doubtless be difficult to induce our National Legislature and most of our State Legislatures to pass any such law which will be efficient, for there is no money in it. The propositions which will be most likely to meet with favor in those august bodies will be the building of new railroads, or digging vast canals, which will allow them the opportunity to spend $50,000,000 or $100,000,000, which we will at last have the producer's privilege of paying. When such amounts as that are to be expended, it is easy to advance a class of arguments which usually carry conviction to legislators. Besides these artificial highways nature has placed a most magnificent river right through the heart of the agricultural region of our country, reaching from the wheat fields of Minnesota to the sugar plantations of Louisiana, which, with a small expenditure, can be made capable of bearing on its bosom the products of a continent. Even now a single rapids, a sand-bar, and a most heartless towboat ring are all that seriously impede its navigation.

Matters of such importance as these should receive at your hands most patient investigation and careful consideration.

The clause of Article 6 of our Constitution which reads, "Any person interested in agricultural pursuits," is capable of such varied construction that much confusion and misunderstanding has resulted. During the infancy of the order, when members were few, our strength puny, and our chief aim simply social and educational, there was little danger in construing this clause liberally and admitting nearly all who would pay the fee and consent to join such a weak and unpopular institution. But now all these circumstances are changed. To be a Patron of Husbandry is no longer of doubtful propriety, but the proudest in the land are knocking at our doors. The order has become recognized as one of the great powers in the land, and the gates are besieged from ocean to ocean, by hordes of speculators, demagogues, small politicians, grain-buyers, cotton-factors, lawyers, who suddenly discover that they are "interested in agricultural pursuits." It is true that they are interested in "agricultural pursuits," but only as a hawk is interested in the sparrow.

You would do well to give this matter a most careful review, and by law determine the proper construction of the Constitution, so we may be able to keep our gates closed against those whose only interest consists in what they can make out of us. To have such admitted to our counsels can only result in evil and sow seeds of internal strife.

Art. 12 also demands most serious consideration to definitely decide what interpretation shall be put upon the word political. I am gratified that our members are substantially a unit in the opinion that the order should not, in any sense, become a political party. But, at the same time, there are questions most fundamentally affecting our material interests, which can only be reached through legislation. It seems imperative that such questions be discussed in the grange. Shall it be ruled that such questions are political in the meaning of the Constitution? The questions of transportation, taxation, finance, corruption in public places, are such as come home to the consciences and pockets of our members, and they wish to know whether they will be denied the privilege of canvassing them on the ground of politics. This body should clearly set forth an authoritative interpretation for the guidance of members.

I am gratified to be able to say that generally I have met with the most cordial co-operation of the officers and members, thus lightening a work which would have otherwise been herculean. I feel it my duty, however, to call your attention to one painful exception in the case of the Boston Grange. A grange was organized last summer in the City of Boston, Mass., by Deputy Abbott, composed of a class commonly known as middlemen, in direct violation of his instructions. This is a class of members never contemplated by the constitution. At the request of numerous members of the National Grange, and two members of the Executive Committee, the member, Mr. Saunders, being sick, the Master of the National Grange recalled the dispensation of the Boston Grange, and directed its return to Deputy Abbott. They refused to obey this demand, and have continued as a grange, thus proving themselves a revolutionary and dangerous element. The Master of the Massachusetts State Grange has countenanced and sustained their conduct, by directing the installation of their new officers and investing them with the annual word for 1874. Unless such defiance of authority is properly rebuked and punished, your executive officers will be powerless in the future, and anarchy will reign in the order.

Brothers and sisters, the future progress, preservation, and usefulness of our order depend largely upon our action at this session. Without doubt, this is the most important meeting of agriculturists ever held in any land. The responsibility resting upon us is enormous. The whole country, both within and without the gates, is searchingly watching our every act—the enemy to find a weak point to attack; our friends hoping and expecting much good to result. The agriculturists of the nation are now on trial. The Order of Patrons of Husbandry has brought them together in council, and it remains for our acts to prove whether we have administrative, executive and business capacity equal to the occasion.

With patience in investigation, wisdom in enactment, firmness in execution, and justice in all and to all, we may place our order on an enduring basis, and confidently look to the future in the just expectation of seeing the agriculturists of the country intelligent, happy, prosperous, powerful, drawn together by a silken band encircling the whole land, and permeated all through with the kindest sentiments of fraternity.

The Secretary's report show that 8,000 subordinate Granges had been added during the year, but the increased membership could not be exactly told.

The Treasurer reported over $50,000 on hand.

The report of the Executive Committee, read by Mr. Saunders, the Chairman, was long, and full of facts and suggestions touching the welfare of the Order. It spoke of the newness of the Order, and the difficulty under which the Committee labored in collecting and collating such facts as might be used as lessons or warnings for the future. The continuance of secrecy was strenuously advised. The report rehearsed at full length the system of gathering crop and census statistics through the Granges, which, the committee declare, will soon be the most perfect ever adopted. The co-operative system is heartily indorsed, and it is confidently stated that, through stores, agencies, grain elevators, etc., the members of the Order have saved at least $8,000,000 during the past year. The basis of membership is discussed with some elaboration. The words "interested in agriculture," seem to satisfy the committee, as some of them have labored under the reproach of being gentleman farmers. They do not desire to restrict the membership to farmers. They profess to look at the question from a wider standpoint, and think the interests of the Order require, sometimes, the admission of persons not directly interested in the tillage of the soil. The report speaks at some length of the transportation question, and says there is and has been the greatest harmony between the committee and railroad officials. They express the opinion that it is in the highest degree unwise to wage war on the railroads. There should always subsist the best relations between them and the farmers, that the price of transferring products from the producer to the consumer may be reduced to the minimum. Railroad officials have always treated the members of the committee with the greatest consideration, where they have come in business contact or have had correspondence.

Committees were then appointed on each of the following subjects: Finance, auditing accounts, co-operation and transportation, good of the order, and business agencies.

The grange met with closed doors, the gatekeeper taking the pass-word.

SECOND DAY.

The actual business of the second day's session, so far as made public, amounted to very little. An appropriation of $5,000 was voted to the State Grange of Iowa, in consideration of the great expense incurred by that grange in relieving the wants of distressed brethren in Northwestern Iowa. Appropriations of $1,000 to Minnesota and $750 to Dakota were also made.

THIRD DAY.

The Committee on the Good of the Order made a partial report, one of the points being that the Constitution and by-laws of the grange be printed in all spoken languages as may be directed by the Executive Committee.

It was voted that no member could speak on any one subject more than once, and that the time be limited to five minutes.

The roll of States was called to give each an opportunity of presenting what business he desired.

Master A. B. Smedley, of Iowa, presented suggestions on business organizations, and stated that they had made a contract for the Werner Harvester for Iowa and the rest of the States, and had also entered into an arrangement with the State of Iowa for a seeding-machine, which it was reported might be used by all the States in the Union but one, as it was not available for cotton-planting. The whole matter was referred to the Executive Committee of the National Grange for action. Master M. D. Davis, of Kentucky, presented resolutions for some constitutional amedments which were appropriately referred.

Master S. F. Brown, of Michigan, presented a series of resolutions on constitutional amendments.

Mr. D. Wyatt Aiken, of South Carolina, member of the Executive Committee, presented a petition from the Grangers of Canada, asking for a dispensation to get the sixth and seventh degrees and establish a Dominion Grange. He also presented some documents in regard to the patent laws, which were referred.

Master Daniel Clarke, of Oregon, moved that Charleston be selected as the place of meeting for the Eighth Annual Grange, which motion prevailed with applause.

On motion of Past Master Wright, of California, Mr. Eben Thompson, Representative of Canada, was invited to make a report of the condition of things across the border, and the wants of the order in that Dominion. Mr. Thompson said that they had ten granges in Canada, some numbering over 100 members; that they wanted to establish a Dominion Grange, so that they might have a fixed headquarters for the order, and that their most earnest desire was to see the organization become international in its character.

A committee of five was appointed to prepare a series of resolutions to be placed before the public as the sentiments of the National Grange. The committee consists of Wardlaw, of Florida; Hamilton, of California; Jones, of Arkansas; Maxwell, of Tennessee; Hinckley, of New York.

The various committees were announced by the Chair.

The grange then adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

FOURTH DAY.

The call of States was continued. Master Hudson, of Kansas, presented a memorial regarding the establishment of a Territorial Government over the Indian Territory. Referred to the Committee on Commercial Relations.

Gen. Vaughan, of Massachusetts, presented a claim from Master Lewis, of Louisiana, also one from the National Deputy of the same State. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

Master Chase, of New Hampshire, offered a resolution to have printed 500 copies of a complete list of members of the National Grange present with their wives, and their Post-Office address; also a list of committees appointed. Carried.

Master Porter, of Nebraska, moved a Committee on Statistical Crop Reports, and the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws was appointed such committee.

Several other resolutions were referred to the Committees on Resolutions, and Constitution and By-Laws.

The evening session was devoted to conferring the sixth degree on Masters of State Granges and their wives, they being the only persons entitled to receive it.

FIFTH DAY.

The consideration of the report of the Committee on Ritual was postponed to the next annual session.

When the roll of States was called, California presented a resolution to have the bulletin of the granges printed and sent to the officers of all the State and subordinate granges.

Indiana presented a resolution on the currency, requesting that a petition be sent to Congress from the National Grange, which was appropriately referred.

Massachusetts presented a resolution for a constitutional amendment.

Minnesota offered a resolution to remove the headquarters of the National Grange to St. Louis. Referred to a special committee of five, consisting of Parsons, of Minnesota; Warden, of Florida; Hamilton, of California; Cotton, of Vermont; and Allen, of Missouri.

Col. William M. Grosvenor, Secretary of the Transportation Committee of the St. Louis Board of Trade, met the Transportation Committee of the National Grange by appointment in the afternoon, and had an extended conference.

Master Allis, of Massachusetts, submitted to the Convention a lengthy statement in regard to the Boston Grange, prepared by a Committee of that organization, in which they claim to be regularly organized, and ask to be recognized as a Grange, in full sympathy with the order.

The evening session was devoted to the consideration of the Constitution and By-Laws. A great number of changes were recommended, mostly verbal, and not of special interest to the public. The by-laws have been so amended as to allow the National Grange to fix the compensation of its members. The by-laws have been also amended by adding Article 14, as follows:

"There may be established District Granges in the fifth degree, not to exceed one in each county, composed of Masters and Past Masters of subordinate Granges and their wives, who are Matrons, and such fourth-degree members may be elected thereto, after having been duly examined as to their proficiency in the work. These Granges shall have charge of the educational and business interests of the Order in their respective districts, and shall encourage, strengthen, and aid the subordinate Granges represented therein. Dispensations for such Granges shall issue from the State Grange, and under such regulations as the State Grange may adopt."

SIXTH DAY.

Master Taylor, of South Carolina, presented the report of the Committee on Commercial Relations. The committee cordially indorse the intention of the resolutions offered by Mr. Aiken, as to asking Congress to restrict the time and royalty allowed to patents, and recommend that seven years be fixed for the patentees to enjoy the sole benefit of the patent, and that they be allowed 25 per cent. upon the cost of production.

The following resolution accompanied the report: Resolved, That the Master and Executive Committee of the National Grange be and are hereby appointed a committee, with instructions to memorialize Congress, at as early a day as practicable, on the subject of Patent laws, and ask that body to restrict protection to a maximum limit of five years, with a proviso of renewal based upon a profit of 25 per cent. above the cost of production.

The following communication was received:

Grand Master Adams and Gentlemen of the National Grange:

I have been requested by members of the National Board of Trade and of Congress to call your attention to the bill establishing Territorial Government over the so-called Indian Territory, and to ask that the bill may receive the approbation of your earnest consideration.

(Signed) JOHN J. MARTIN.

Your Committee have taken under consideration the request of brother Martin, in reference to a bill now before Congress in regard to establishing a Territorial Government over the so-called Indian Territory, and beg to be excused from further consideration of the matter, as they have no knowledge of the bill.

A partial report in regard to crop statistics, presented by the Committee on Good of the Order, was approved.

Master Adams presented as the Committee on Centennial Celebration, Messrs. Saunders, of Washington; Chambers, of Alabama; Hudson, of Kansas; Wright, of California; Chase, of New Hampshire; Brown, of Michigan; and Davis, of Kentucky.

SEVENTH DAY.

After the transaction of some minor business, the report of the Committee on Resolutions was received and adopted unanimously. It is as follows:

Profoundly impressed with the truth that the National Grange of the United States should definitely proclaim to the world its general objects, we hereby unanimously make this declaration of purposes of the Patrons of Husbandry.

First—United by the strong and faithful tie of agriculture, we mutually resolve to labor for the good of our order, our country, and mankind.

Second—We heartily indorse the motto: "In essentials Unity; in non-essentials Liberty; in all things Charity."

Third—We shall endeavor to advance our cause by laboring to accomplish the following objects: To develop a better and higher manhood and womanhood among ourselves; to enhance the comforts and attractions of our homes and strengthen our attachments to our pursuits; to foster mutual understanding and co-operation; to maintain inviolate our laws, and to emulate each other to labor to hasten the good time coming; to reduce our expenses both individual and corporate; to buy less and produce more, in order to make our farms self-supporting; to diversify our crops, and plant no more than we can cultivate; to condense the weight of our exports, selling less in the bushel and more on the hoof and in fleeces; to systematize our work, and calculate intelligently on the probabilities; to discountenance the credit system, the mortgage system, the fashion system, and every other system tending to prodigality and bankruptcy. We propose meeting together, talking together, working together, buying together, selling together, and generally acting together for our mutual protection and advancement, as occasion may require. We shall avoid litigation as much as possible, by arbitration in the grange. We shall constantly strive to secure entire harmony, good-will, and vital brotherhood among ourselves, and to make order perpetual. We shall earnestly endeavor to suppress personal, local, sectional and national prejudices, all unhealthy rivalry and all selfish ambition. Faithful adherence to these principles will insure our mental, and moral, social and material advancement.

Fourth—For our business interests we desire to bring producers and consumers, farmers and manufacturers into the most intimate relations possible. Hence, we must dispense with a surplus of middlemen, not that we are unfriendly to them, but we do not need them. Their surplus and their exactions diminish our profits. We wage no aggressive warfare against any other interest whatever. On the contrary, all our acts and all our efforts, so far as business is concerned, are only for the benefit of producers, but also for all other interests that tend to bring those two parties into speedy and economical contact. Hence we hold that transportation companies of every kind are necessary to our success; that their interests are intimately connected with our interests, and that harmonious action is mutually advantageous. Keeping in view the first sentence in our declaration of principles of action, that "individual happiness depends upon the general prosperity," we shall therefore advocate for every State the increase in every practical way of all facilities for transporting cheaply to the seaboard or between home producers and consumers, all the productions of our country. We adopt it as our fixed purpose to open out the chances in Nature's great arteries, that the life-blood of commerce may flow freely. We are not enemies of railroads, navigable and irrigating canals, nor of any corporation that will advance our industrial interests, nor of any laboring classes. In our noble order there is no communism, no agrarianism. We are opposed to such spirit and management of any corporation or enterprise as tend to oppress people and rob them of their just profits. We are not enemies to capital, but we oppose tyranny of monopolies. We long to see the antagonism between capital and labor removed by common consent, and an enlightened statesmanship worthy of the nineteenth century. We are opposed to excessive salaries, high rates of interest, and exorbitant per-cent. profits in trade. They greatly increase our burdens and do not bear a proportion to the profits of producers. We desire only self-protection and the protection of every true interest of our land by legitimate transactions, legitimate trade, and legitimate profits. We shall advance the cause of education among ourselves and for our children by all just means within our power. We especially advocate for our agricultural and industrial colleges the practical agriculture, domestic science, and all the arts which adorn the home, be taught in their courses of study.

Fifth—We emphatically and sincerely assert the oft repeated truth taught in our organic law, that the Grange—National, State, or subordinate—is not a political or party organization. No Grange, if true to its obligation, can discuss political or religious questions, nor call political conventions, nor even discuss their merits in its meetings; yet the principles we teach underlie all true politics, all true statesmanship, and, if properly carried out, will tend to purify the whole political atmosphere of our country, for we seek the greatest good of the greatest number; but we must always bear it in mind that no one, by becoming a grange member, gives up that inalienable right and duty which belongs to every American citizen to take a proper interest in the politics of his country. On the contrary, it is right for every member to do all in his power legitimately to influence for good the action of any political party to which he belongs. It is his duty to do all he can in his own party to put down bribery, corruption and trickery; to see that none but competent, faithful and honest men, who will unflinchingly stand by our industrial interests, are nominated for all positions of trust, and to have carried out the principles which should always characterize every grange member—that the office should seek the man, and not the man the office. We acknowledge the broad principle that difference of opinion is no crime, and hold that progress toward truth is made by differences of opinion, while the fault lies in the bitterness of controversy. We desire a proper equality, equity and fairness—protection for the weak, restraint upon the strong—in short, justly distributed burdens and justly distributed power. These are American ideas, the very essence of American independence, and to advocate the contrary is unworthy of the sons and daughters of an American Republic. We cherish the belief that sectionalism is, and of right should be, dead and buried with the past. Our work is for the present and the future. In our agricultural brotherhood and its purposes we shall recognize no North, no South, no East, no West. It is reserved by every Patron, as his right as a freeman, to affiliate with any party that will best carry out his principles.

Sixth—Ours being peculiarly a farmer's institution, we cannot admit all to our ranks. Many are excluded by the nature of our organization, not because they are professional men, or artisans, or laborers, but because they have not a sufficiently direct interest in tilling or pasturing the soil, or may have some interest in conflict with our purposes; but we appeal to all good citizens for their cordial co-operation to assist in our efforts towards reform, that we may eventually remove from our midst the last vestige of tyranny and corruption. We hail the general desire for fraternal harmony, equitable compromise, and earnest co-operation as an omen of our future success.

Seventh—It shall be an abiding principle with us to relieve any of our oppressed and suffering brotherhood by any means at our command.

Last, but not least, we proclaim it among our purposes to inculcate a proper appreciation of the abilities and sphere of woman as is indicated by admitting her to membership and position in our Order.

Imploring the continued assistance of our Divine Master to guide us in our work, we here pledge ourselves to faithfully and harmoniously labor for all future time to return by our united efforts to the wisdom, justice, fraternity, and political purity of our forefathers.

A memorial to the Patrons of Husbandry in the cotton States was also presented and unanimously adopted. It is an argument in favor of mixed husbandry in the South, instead of expending the energies of the people in raising a single crop. The memorial is signed by the Masters of State Granges of South and North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Arkansas, Louisiana, Georgia, Tennessee, and was not only heartily approved by the Committee on Resolutions, but indorsed by every member of the National Grange.

EIGHTH DAY.

At the morning session E. R. Shankland, of Iowa, was re-elected as a member of the executive committee. Mrs. Thomas Taylor, of South Carolina, was elected Pomona, and Mrs. J. T. Moore, of Maryland, was elected Flora, the office having been declared vacant on account of the absence of Mrs. J. S. Abbott, of Iowa.

At noon 60 members and several ladies visited the merchant's union exchange, and witnessed the transaction of business.

The consideration of the report of the committee was resumed and completed. The committee presented a supplementary report, recommending the adoption of an additional by-law as follows:

Past Masters are Masters who have been duly elected and installed, and have served out the term for which elected.

Also an additional by-law, as follows:

[illegible] in office may be called to any meeting of the grange.

Also the following by law:

Subordinate granges may be consolidated in a mode and on such terms as State Granges may prescribe.

The report was adopted.

Mr. Hamilton, of California, offered a supplement to the by-laws, providing that the Master of the National Grange shall be ex officio a member of the Executive Committee.

Adopted and made part of the by-laws.

The following Resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has been determined to hold an exhibition of the industrial productions of the world at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876, therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed by the Master of the National Grange, to represent the Patrons of Husbandry at such Exposition, and report to the National Grange at the next annual meeting.

Adopted. Messrs. Chambers, Hudson, Wright, Chase, Brown, and Davis were appointed.

Mr. Parsons, of Minnesota, offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That amendments to the constitution of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry adopted at this session of the National Grange be immediately certified by the Secretary and Master, under seal of the National Grange, to the Secretaries of the several State granges for ratification. Said certificates shall set forth the fact of amendments adopted at the seventh annual session of the National Grange by a two-thirds vote.

Resolved, That the Secretaries of State granges be directed to lay the amendments before the State granges at the next meetings, for ratification, the amendments to be submitted to State granges as follows: The Secretary to prepare two copies for each State grange, numbering the amendments on the margin of each copy, so that the word "ratified" or "rejected" can be written opposite each amendment; amendments to be voted separately by granges, and "ratified" or "rejected" written opposite each amendment; copies to be certified under and by the secretary of the State grange, as copies submitted to the State grange; one copy to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the National grange, and the other reported to the Secretary of the National grange, to be filed in this office. In case three-fourths of the State granges approve any amendments, the Secretary of the National grange shall complete the constitution, embodying such amendments adopted, subject to the revision of the executive committee, and cause to be printed such number as the executive committee may direct.

Mr. Chase, of New Hampshire, submitted the following, which was adopted:

The Secretary of the National Grange shall send one copy of the proposed amendments to each member of the National Grange as soon as practicable.

Mr. Chambers, of Alabama, offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the National Grange that the expression "interested in agricultural pursuits," in article 5 of the Constitution, means engaged in agricultural pursuits, and having no interest in conflict with our purposes.

The evening session was devoted to the installation of officers elected in the morning, exemplification of work on the sixth degree, and the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Boston Grange. The committee from the Boston Grange was present, and were heard on their side of the question, followed by an animated discussion of the whole subject.

Fish Diet.

Those nations who eat fish with one meal, each day, are undoubtedly the most active in intellect, and the most capable of brain labor without exhaustion or fatigue. Not only is such phosphatic food conducive to the activity of the brain, but it promotes fecundity, and increases the ability to endure cold, fatigue, etc.; and while the facilities for obtaining it are constantly increasing, it would be well for the rising generation were they made to partake of and realize it as second only in many respects to the staff of life; and the husband and father who occasionally takes half a day from his legitimate business to fill his basket with delicious fish, should not be considered as a mere "sportsman," but a "good provider" for his family of those things which are of vital utility.—Herald of Health.

How Many Figs They Care.

The trade in dried fis, which has always had its seat at Marseilles, has increased in an extraordinary manner during the last ten years. Not satisfied with obtaining supplies from the departments of the Bouches-du-Rhone and the Var, the fruit of which enjoys such great reputation in Paris, the trade of Marseilles also receives a considerable quantity of figs from abroad. In 1862 the importation amounted to 2,421 tons; that quantity had increased in 1872 to 6,686 tons, of which 4,010 were received from Italy, and 2,016 from Algeria; Turkey also contributed 459 tons and Spain 178.

THE construction of the proposed Darien Canal will cost $60,000,000.

A Case of Somnambulism.

Altogether the most interesting case of somnambulism on record is that of a young ecclesiastic, the narrative of which, from the immediate communication of an Archbishop of Bordeaux, is given under the head of somnambulism in the "French Encyclopedia." This young ecclesiastic, when the Archbishop was at the seminary, used to rise every night, and write sermons or pieces of music. To study his condition, the Archbishop betook himself several nights to the chamber of the young man, where he made the following observations:

The young man used to rise, to take paper, and write. Before he wrote music he would take a stick and rule the lines with it; he wrote the notes, together with the words corresponding with them, with perfect correctness, or, when he had written the words too wide, he altered them. The notes that were to be black he filled in after he had completed the whole. After completing a sermon, he read it aloud from beginning to end. If any passage displeased him, he erased it and wrote the amended passage correctly over the other. To ascertain whether he used his eyes, the Archbishop interposed a sheet of pasteboard between the writing and his face. He took not the least notice, but went on writing as before. The limitation of his perceptions to what he was thinking about was very curious. A bit of aniseed cake that he sought for he ate approvingly; but when on another occasion a piece of the same cake was put into his mouth, he spit it out without observation. The following instance of the dependence of his perceptions upon, or rather their subordination to, his preconceived ideas, is truly wonderful. It is to be observed that he always knew when his pen had ink in it. Likewise, if they adroitly changed his papers when he was writing, he knew if the sheet substituted was of a different size from the former, and appeared embarrassed in that case; but if the fresh sheet of paper which was substituted for that written on was exactly of the same size as the former, he appeared not to be aware of the change; and he would continue to read off his composition from the blank sheet of paper as fluently as when the manuscript itself lay before him; nay, more, he would continue his corrections and introduce the amended passage, writing it upon exactly the place on the blank sheet which it would have occupied on the written page.

Sensation of Starving.

For the first two days through which a strong and healthy man is doomed to exist upon nothing, his sufferings are, perhaps, more acute than in the remaining stages—he feels an inordinate, unspeakable craving at the stomach, night and day. The mind runs upon beef, bread and other substantials, but still, in a great measure, the body retains its strength. On the third and fourth days, but especially on the fourth, this incessant craving gives place to a sinking and weakness of the stomach, accompanied by a nausea. The unfortunate sufferer still desires food, but with loss of strength he loses that eager craving which is felt in the earlier stages. Should he chance to obtain a morsel or two of food, he swallows it with a wolfish avidity, but five minutes afterward his sufferings are more intense than ever. He feels as if he had swallowed a living lobster, which is clawing and feeding upon the very foundation of his existence. On the fifth day his cheeks suddenly appear hollow and sunken, his body attenuated; his color is ashy pale, and his eye wild, glassy, cannibalish. The different parts of the system now war with each other. The stomach calls upon the legs to go with it in quest of food; the legs, from very weakness, refuse. The sixth day brings with it increased suffering, although the pangs of hunger are lost in an overpowering languor and sickness. The head becomes giddy—the ghosts of the well-remembered dinners pass in hideous processions through the mind. The seventh day comes, bringing increased lassitude and further prostration of strength. The arms hang lifelessly, the legs drag heavily. The desire for food is still left, to a degree, but it must be brought, not sought. The miserable remnant of life which still hangs to the sufferer is a burden almost too grievous to be borne; yet his inherent love of existence induces a desire still to preserve it, if it can be saved without a tax upon bodily exertion. The mind wanders. At one moment he thinks his weary limbs cannot sustain him a mile, the next he is endowed with unnatural strength, and if there be a certainty of relief before him, dashes bravely and strongly forward, wondering whence proceeds this new and sudden impulse.

How the Siamese Twins Got Their Wives.

Much speculation has always been rife as to how the twins courted, and finally became joined in the bonds of Hymen. It happened that they were traveling through the South, and stopped at the town of Traphill, in Wilkes county, N. C. The country in this locality being very romantic, and the land good, the twins determined to settle, and accordingly engaged in business in the village, being excellent traders, and their novel condition soon attracted many persons to them; among these a farmer named Yates, who lived in the immediate vicinity, and was possessed of two bouncing daughters. Chang and Eng looked upon these women tenderly, and evinced great affection for them, and, like ordinary young folks, made numerous calls at the residence of their bewitchers, and there being a pair of them all around, a match was soon made, and the four were two (or one). These wives always displayed great affection for their liege lords, and manifested the usual jealousies common to the human family. From this double union there were some twenty-two children born. Mrs. Chang presented her husband with some nine or ten, and of these but two were boys, while in the Eng family the daughters were proportionately outnumbered. The offspring, contrary to the general opinion and preceding statements, with few exceptions, were healthy, robust children.—Cor. Philadelphia Press.

A Horrible Death.

The San Domingo, California, World tells of the singular death of a Chinaman there a few days since.

Our readers know that the abalone meat is a prized delicacy of the Chinaman, and that the shell of the abalone, when properly polished is one of the most fancied and beautiful things in nature. The abalones are generally sought lower down the coast, but are also found in the neighborhood of San Diego. Day before yesterday, Fung Chou, a professional fisherman, residing near Roseville, known among Americans by the nickname of "Chowder," started out to the Coronades in his boat to hunt for abalones. Of course his movements can only be surmised by the event. The supposition is that he moored his boat and began his quest. The Coronades are quite abrupt in their formation—precipitous, but occasionally broken. "Chowder" saw an enormous abalone in a cleft of of the rock, in a place covered with water when the tide was in, and, throwing himself on his stomach, he dropped over the ledge to wrench the delicacy from its fastness. Abalones are univalvular, and if, in detaching one from the rock, to which it can fix itself almost immovably, one happens not to wrench it loose at once, it often closes its single shell on the rock, prisoning the spoiling hand and causing inexpressible agony.

This was poor "Chowder's" fate. As his evil star would have it, the abalone was unusually large, and the poor Chinaman, unable to release himself, must have early realized that he was doomed. From his position leaning over the rock, he could not brace himself, or obtain any leverage by which, at the sacrifice of his hand, if need be, he could tear himself free. We can imagine the agony suffered by the poor wretch as he waited long hours for the rising of the tide, which should end his misery by death. The actual pain endured must have been unspeakable, and no help was nearer than 18 miles. The inexorable waters, however, shortly did their work. There came a time when the poor Chinaman could strain no longer, and when the briny flood sucked from his lungs the breath of life. When, yesterday, Chowder's body was recovered by a brother Celestial, his dead hand was still clutched in the remorseless grasp of the abalone, which had so terribly avenged the invasion of his rocky home. The agony the poor fellow had endured was imprinted on his face.

Mrs. Chief Justice.

Mr. Waite is a member of the Episcopal Church at Toledo. Judge Swayne and family and Judge Field and family also attend the same church. Of course we ladies are interested in Mrs. Waite, and the accounts are not so favorable as those we have of the husband. She is reported to be extravagantly fond of dress and society. She is not handsome, but that will not make much difference here unless she puts on airs, and then she will be upbraided for that over which she can least help herself, beauty of person. I had the pleasure of being introduced to Judge Waite a year ago, when he returned from Geneva. He is a rather short, stout man, with features which are by no means handsome, the mouth being especially large, but the moment I looked at him I took this diagnosis: Here is a man who is above the men you usually meet in society, and if you wish to make yourself agreeable to him you must affect the superiority you are not conscious of possessing. He will make an excuse to leave you in five minutes if you can't say something worth listening to.

Co-operation Among Farmers.

At the meeting of the Illinois farmers at Decatur, last Thursday, a paper was read by Mr. Creighton on the question of co-operation among farmers, which contains some new and excellent points. We extract the following:

The present system of buying and selling renders the farmer entirely helpless. The buyer and seller both have him in their power, and each considers him legitimate prey. In the spring he plows his field and plants his seed. From daylight until dark he labors; from early spring until the last ear of corn is harvested in winter, July's scorching sun and December's freezing storm alike find him at his daily toil. And, when the fruits of his year's labor are ready for market, does he—yea, can he—count the capital he has invested in his farm, in his team, and in his tools; the expenses of keeping up repairs, and reasonable wages for his labor, and say: "This or that cost me so much, and, to get pay for my labor and interest on my investment, I must have so much for corn and so much for pork? He who eats bread and meat must pay the cost of production." Does he say that? Can he say it? No. He does not pretend to put a price on his own labor. He simply goes to the buyer, the dealer, the speculator—not the consumer—with the product of his year's labor in his open hand, and humbly says, "Here it is; what will you give me for it? Here is the cream of the soil I have labored years and lived hard to buy. I and my wife and children have toiled like slaves to produce it. Here it is;" and as humbly accepts what the buyer may choose to offer as the veriest beggar would receive a penny, though the price be not sufficient to pay fifty cents a day for the labor of producing it.

But when he goes to the agent or merchant the scene is changed. From the smallest to the largest article of merchandise the farmer asks, "What will you take?" The dealer fixes a price, and says, "I must have my money back, with profit." If the farmer does not see fit to pay the price just then, the merchant puts his goods back on the shelf until the farmer is compelled to have them and accepts his terms.

The consequences of this system are that the farmer is hard-pressed; farming does not pay expenses and leave anything to support the farmer's family; debts accumulate against him; mortgages are piled upon his land; with his meagre income his taxes prove a heavy burden; he is not able to spare the time and means to educate his children; has no leisure for enjoyment or self-culture; and is deprived of all the luxuries and many of the comforts of life.

He has vainly tried to remedy this by increased hours of labor, by tilling more acres of land, by taxing himself and his soil to their utmost capacity to produce more bushels of grain and more pounds of meat. But, alas! the more he produces the less he realizes on it.

These and other abuses have driven us to the wall. We now stop and think, and resolve to organize for self-protection. It is obvious that there must be a change and, in my judgment, if pecuniary benefit is to be obtained by organization, it must be, to a very great degree, through co-operation in buying and selling. The first question that will suggest itself to the mind of a prudent man probably will be: Is it practical? Can we adopt a plan of co-operation in buying and selling that will bring us some relief? Can we so arrange it as to buy for less and sell for more? I think we can. I think it is practical. We must buy directly of the manufacturer, and sell as nearly as possible to the consumer. When we are once thoroughly organized in a large district, say the State of Illinois, we can easily make our wants known to the manufacturer and wholesale dealer, who would be glad to secure our trade through any channel that would give them access to us. They will not persist in selling their machinery to agents, who have no use for it, when they can reach directly the hand for which it was made.

◆

Hon. John B. Gordon, of Georgia, in a speech in the United States Senate, on the 20th ult, on the currency and specie payment, pertinently remarked:

"It is a notorious fact that the cultivation of the soil in this country is not remunerative. It is a notorious fact that its profits are year by year absorbed by others than the tillers of the soil. It is a notorious fact that the price paid for the use of money is and has been for years so exorbitant as to make it rather a burden than an aid to the producer. It is a notorious fact that wealth disseminates itself less and less, and that the power of concentrated money is fast becoming so measureless that, like Omnipotence, it has but to speak and it is done; but to will, and values expand and diminish according to its will; but to stretch forth its arm and the wheels of industry stand still. And I verily believe if this system of finance, unaltered, unmodified, with its rigidity of volume, with its non-elasticity, with the ability therefore of capitalists to control it, is to continue; the day is not remote when concentrated money will dictate the profits on every industry and enterprise of this country; will hold in its own hands the material interests, if not the private rights and personal liberties of the citizens; will dictate the legislation that is to be had in both wings of this capitol, as it does now in some of the States, and will in no small degree become the arbiter of this experiment of representative government.

An Educated Dog.

There are few travelers on the Harlem Railroad who have not heard of the educated dog at Scarsdale depot. His name is Knapp. He is the property of Mr. George Ullman, the station master. Knapp is a shepherd dog, about two feet high, and is covered with a dark-brown shaggy coat of fine hair. He was born in the Scotch Highlands nearly four years ago. In his infancy Knapp was imported at considerable trouble by a gentleman of Scarsdale, who, being suddenly called to Europe shortly afterward, gave him to Mr. Ullman. Noticing genius and intelligence in Knapp, Mr. Ullman began to train him. Now Knapp can perform many wonderful feats. He has been taught to assist his master in the performance of his duties around the depot. Knapp has learned to tell by the clock when a train is due; and at night when the hands point to the proper hour, Knapp takes a lantern in his mouth and stands on the platform with the light guiding the engineer to the stopping place. Knapp knows an express train from a mail train, and a mail train from a way train. In day time when an express train approaches the station and the track is clear Knapp shows a white flag, which signifies all is well.

Not many days ago Knapp appeared with the white flag as the express train hove in sight, but seeing two small children going down the wagon road ignorant of the approach of any train, he saw that the children would reach the crossing simultaneously with the train. Knapp dropped the white flag and seizing the red flag in his mouth, he darted toward the crossing. The engineer saw the red flag and shut off steam before the animal reached the children. Arrived at the crossing he stood there and prevented the train from passing until the children were safely over the track, then he laid the flag down and the train went on.

On another occasion Knapp snatched a child from in front of a way train just as it was stopping at the depot. The child's clothes were torn by the wheels of the locomotive, so narrowly had it escaped death.

Knapp consults the clock every day for the arrival of the mail trains. A few moments before the mail is due Knapp stations himself at the mail rack, and when the bag is thrown from the car he carries it to the Post Office, and if it contains any letters for his master he takes them back to him.

When freight trains begin to switch cars at the depot Knapp always takes a red flag and trots up or down the track, as the case may be, and flags any train that heaves in sight. Knapp always keeps his position faithfully until called in by signals, just as any other flagman is. Engineers all know Knapp, and faithfully act upon his signals. After the departure of freight trains Knapp often walks down the track and carefully examines the switches to see that the brakemen have left them all right. Satisfied that no blunders have been made, he walks back to the depot, and if the clock shows him that he has a few leisure moments he signifies to his master a desire for a pipe. Mr. Ullman has taught him to smoke, and he always keeps Knapp's pipe ready for lighting when he calls for it. The pipe being lighted, the animal sits on a chair and smokes with as much apparent ease and comfort as his master.

Mr. Ullman is a good musician.—He has a piano in the ladies' room of the depot, and often performs on it. Knapp has been taught to sing or whine the tunes which Mr. Ullman plays. The dog often perches himself on a chair beside his master with his fore feet on the piano frame, and accurately turns the sheets of music with his tongue. Knapp can waltz, dance a schottische or a polka as well as any one can on four legs.

Of late some of the mischievous brakemen have thrown snow balls at Knapp just as the trains started, or have made ugly faces or stamped their feet at him. He seemingly took no notice of these insults, but on Monday one of the brakemen went into the depot to get a drink of water. When he started out Knapp stood in the door and would not allow him to move. He made a movement as though about to administer a kick, and Knapp opened his mouth and uttered a growl, which convinced the brakeman that such a proceeding would be dangerous.—Knapp kept his prisoner in the room until the train had gone so far that the brakeman couldn't catch it, and then releasing him, Knapp walked away as unconcernedly as though nothing had happened.

Since that time the brakemen have been exceedingly civil to Knapp, but he treats them with lofty indifference.

INDIANA NEWS.

From three to five cents a pound is all that is offered for the tobacco crop in Pike county.

A thirty-two year old Washington, Daviess county, cow recently gave birth to twin calves.

The revival in the Christian Church in Remmington, Jasper county, resulted in 70 accessions, many of whom were heads of families.

A singular disease is decimating the cattle in Tippecanoe county. Veterinary surgeons denominate it a species of St. Anthony's fire.

An interesting old-fashioned Methodist revival was inaugurated at Medora, Jackson county, three weeks ago last Sunday, and is still progressing with unabated furor. So far the meetings have resulted in 102 conversions.

The cattle are taken with an intolerable itching, and in their agony frequently rub the skin off their bodies. Where the skin comes off a greenish fluid comes from the pores, which after death emits a most offensive smell. In a few hours after being attacked the cattle commence jerking in the muscles and limbs, and finally lay down and die, although retaining their appetites to the very last. As yet there has been no remedy found that will cure the malady.

Don't Do It.

Don't strain your voice scolding your children. The little wretches won't appreciate your sacrifice.

Don't judge from appearances. Butchers are heavy men, yet they often weigh light.

Don't abuse a large, muscular man. Remember that God made him.

Don't imagine that wood haulers are the only men who sell short cords. Jones bought a clothes line by the yard last week.

Don't fail to provide new amusements for your children. Remember that the poor things can't play "button" until the style changes.

Don't attempt to reach Heaven by the way of St. Louis. The route from that point has not been surveyed.

Don't censure the school teacher because your child doesn't learn rapidly. You can't stock a tanyard with a shoe string.

Don't spend all your money in the study of astronomy. You can't always "see stars" at the theatre.

Don't look as innocent as a lamb in the presence of your pastor. He knows all the old—sheep in his flock.

Don't rely wholly on the Lord's prayer. Try one of your own occasionally.

Don't boast of your wealth. "Coal-oil Johnny" cou'd double discount you in his palmy days.

Don't wear a smile continually. Second hand garments do not always fit.—Pharos.

The Ohio Grange met in Convention at Xenia yesterday, commencing a protracted meeting. Five hundred and fifty-five Masters of Granges were present. There are about six hundred Granges in Ohio, which include a membership of not far from thirty thousand. As the manufacturing interests of Ohio are so considerable, the grange movement is not so commanding in that State as in the North-west and north-west. But its importance, which cannot easily be over estimated, is patent from the following it has even in this State. When nearly one thousand, representatives of a cause of such fundamental importance to society and to our National prosperity as is this, assemble themselves together and deliberate, the fact is not without significance; and if they deliberate and act wisely, the grange movement will prove to be of great public advantage.

HOW THEY [illegible] A STRANGER.

A stranger from the mountains came slowly riding down,
And stopped to get his dinner in Montezuma town,
And his rough-haired, cow-hocked, played-out, tired and hungry-looking steed,
He sent out to the stable to recuperate with feed.

It wasn't such a fancy horse—his joints were very large,
And his legs hung out each side of him like oars upon a barge,
And the stranger who came riding that nag to Montezuma,
Had no exalted opinion of his qualities, I presume.

But when they went to chaffing him—those sports across the Range—
That he should get his dander up is nothing very strange,
And when they talked of betting that they had a colt "right thar"
That could beat his horse, he bridled up with "Gentlemen, I'll swear,
"Altho' I don't much keer to run, I never let a banter
Slip me while I have horseflesh that can walk or trot or canter,
So if you've got a [illegible], [illegible] you in,
And I'll try to make it lively, even if nary a red I win."

Then like wild-fire spread the rumor, throughout that mining town,
That they'd caught a "greeny" napping, and would do him up so brown,
That 'twould make his head swim, maybe, for they entertained no doubt
Of their open-and-shut ability to clean that stranger out.

From fifty-dollar greenbacks down to Montezuma scrip
They staked their money lively, with a reckless "let her rip,"
And they gathered up their bronchos and every nag they had,
For they wanted to wax that stranger and his horse almighty bad.

Then straightway that stranger started with those citizens en masse,
To find a level spot of ground all covered o'er with grass.
For said he, "I reckon we mout as well just let the critters go,
There's no waitin' any longer, for it muchly looks like snow."

The rivals in that scrub lit out; the stranger got the lead;
And the "ornery" horse developed extraordinary speed,
He got away right easy with those Montezuma nags,
And that stranger smiled serenely as he pocketed their rags.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

Let me try to lift the curtain
Hiding other hearts from view,
You complain, but are you certain
That the fault is not with you?

In the summer sunny hours,
Sitting in your quiet room,
Can you wonder if the flowers
Breathe for you no sweet perfume?

You must go to them, and stooping,
Cull the blossoms where they live;
On your bosom gently drooping,
All their treasure they will give.

Fairly sought, some point of contact
There must be with every mind;
And perchance the closest compact
Where we least expect to find.

Closed the heart-door of thy brother,
All its treasures long concealed,
One key fails, then try another,
Soon the rusty lock shall yield.

Seldom can the heart be lonely,
If it seek a lonlier still,
Self-forgetting, seeking only
Emptier cups of love to fill.

JAKE'S LUCK.

"Whatever will Mr. Squimps say? Oh, girls, to think of it—poor, washed-out Amanda Liza, with her check aprons and faded calicoes—to think of her turning out an heiress! Whew! it takes my breath away. What'll Jake do now, I wonder?"

Miss Jennie Smith was an acknowledged leader in the Squimps academy. She had maintained her rotund person and round, good-natured face in spite of sour bread and scant rations. We thin and starveling girls looked up to her as a star of the first magnitude. We clustered around her in high conclave, as she sat on a desk in the school-room during the temporary absence of our worthy preceptor.

"Oh, she'll never think of Jake again," cried a sharp-faced girl in the corner.

"I'll bet she will," rejoined Miss Smith, slapping her hand energetically on her old grammar. Miss Smith had "big brothers," which may partly account for the vim with which she was wont to express herself. "But, oh, don't I wish it was me! To think that Amanda Liza, that I used to lend my old collars to——"

"Young ladies, Miss Bimm!" cried a warning voice; whereat Jennie, with more haste than dignity, abandoned her lofty position, and there was a general stampede for seats as Miss Bimm, the head teacher came sailing in, followed by Mr. Squimps, the principal, black, tall and solemn as the shadow of a lamp-post. Now for stricter rules, longer lectures on propriety, and a general surveillance founded on "certain recent occurrences."

What would Mr. Squimps say? Ay, to be sure that was always a question of importance, and Mr. Squimps always said a good deal. Here was an especial theme for his eloquence; for the case of poor Amanda Liza, who had been his handmaiden for ten years, cuffed and cornered, making no sign, and at last turning out to have relations of her own and a heap of money, and leaving his establishment "for good and all" in his absence, was a leetle too much for human nature, as he declared. For Mr. Squimps did not disdain to descend to "familiar colloquialisms" once in a while as a relief from the high mental strain of too much Latin and lexicon.

Mr. Squimps should have been a public speaker—so his wife declared, so all his friends affirmed—only the trouble was he would never have known when to stop. There was no "cork up" to him, the girls declared. Once given a little scope, a small vexation, an accidental jarring of his arrangements, and Mr. Squimps flowed out into limitless rivers of rhetoric. He argued his point down to the last whittle, wound up splendidly, touched up his side-whiskers, looked round for applause, turned over [illegible], and before you knew it, began again.

This was a splendid opening, this of Amanda Liza's—a girl whom he had taken out of "pure" charity when her parents died of fever, a girl whom he had educated, brought up in his very family, [illegible]—Mr. Squimps felt [illegible] on this occasion of all [illegible] trade necessary for an [illegible].

"[illegible] Mr. Squimps like a father to [illegible] too," cried Mrs. Squimps, elevating her shriveled little hands.

Mrs. Squimps was a small wrinkled lady, rustling about of an afternoon in a [illegible] voluminous silk, so little, so shriveled she seemed to rattle in it as she walked, like a withered kernel in a walnut shell. She had had the benefit of Mr. Squimps' eloquence the greater part of her life, and was much like a worn out text—thin and thumbed and faded.

The good lady was humbly aware of her deficiencies. A mere bit of quartz, she did not attempt to shine even in her husband's refulgence. All real authority in her department was delegated to Miss Bimm, who carried things with an air, taught the "higher branches," and took the lead.

Mrs. Squimps meekly took the kitchen, eminently fitter, as her husband declared for that department, which was the foundation of all others. The foundation prepared under Mrs. Squimps' supervision was not very substantial. But elegance was the aim, gentility the law, at the academy, as Mr. Squimps observed, and no one asked twice for the same dish. An army of hungry girls, he remarked privately to Mrs. Squimps, would devour all before them unless properly restrained. Under this aspect sour bread and chill pancakes were judicious.

Amanda Liza, the girl about whom we were all just now in a furore, had assisted Mrs. Squimps and the maids in the kitchen of a morning, likewise of an evening; between these she generally sandwiched the thin hour of study which was denominated her "education." She was a slim, drooping-eyed little thing, who never spoken up for herself; and if Jake hadn't spoken up for her once in a while, I think she would scarcely have held her own even under Mrs. Squimps' motherly sway.

"Old Jake," as we called him, was a black-eyed, ragged lad of eighteen, the factotum of the school, general fag, boot-black and boy-of-all-work to the establishment, with an occasional elevation to coachman. Jake was subject to a state of chronic outbreak, restive, forgetful of rules, and "dreadful sassy," the maids declared. But Jake had his ideal, and that ideal was "Miss Manda Liza." Her pale, patient face, her soft quiet voice, were potent with him. The girl was really poorer than Jake, lower in the scale, and with no apparent chance of rising from her bondage, but she recited with the young ladies, and it was Jake's high ambition to help her through with her chores and get her into class. Jake's guardianship of the girl was an accepted fact, in the school and village round about. No boy dared play any tricks on Amanda Liza.

"Just you wait till I get my luck, an' I'll teach you!" was Jake's admonition, accompanied with a clinching of his sturdy fist, that ably seconded the argument.

The girl took it all very quietly in her gentle way, and seemed to have a kindly regard for Jake—mending his coat occasionally or darning his stockings—a thing Jake gallantly declared "she shouldn't do never again; he wouldn't have no ladies waitin' on him."

Ladies! The girls used to nudge each other and smile; but for all that they were very good to Amanda Liza, whose faded dress and meek ways set her apart from the noisy youthfulness of the rest of us. We never begrudged the extra polish which Jake, in his capacity of bootblack, bestowed upon her shoes, and we did not laugh when those same shoes made their appearance one day adorned with a resplendent pair of steel buckles, which were afterwards discovered to be extracted from the coachman's rig in which Jake occasionally did duty, and to which, I am sorry to add, he was ignominiously obliged to restore them.

Occasionally, on some rare holiday, we girls had the privilege of a drive out into the country, when the Squimpses' superannuated sorrel, covered with an elaborate netting to conceal its deficiencies, and pricking up its tasseled ears with quite a show of spirit, would set off on a brisk trot, animated, no doubt, by the prospect of a grassy nibble along the road. Gay times were those. Jake was at his jolliest, and we all—old Dobbin included—forgot our "short commons" and long lectures, and grew hilarious together. Even poor Amanda Liza, quietly stowed away in the back seat, brightened up in the sunlight, and was meekly merry. Once, I remember, old Dobbin cantered along so friskily that he upset the whole party on a mossy bit of rising ground, and whisking his long tail facetiously, quietly betook himself to pasture, while we picked ourselves up as best we could.

"We might have had worse luck," said Jake, as he plucked Amanda Liza out of the heap, shook her out, and wiped the dust from her black apron, leaving the rest of the party to look after themselves. Which we did, scolding and laughing by turns, and giving, quite by accident, the front seat beside Jake to Amanda Liza the rest of the way. Ah! the twilight that summer evening was warm and mellow, the fields were gilded, the meadows fragrant, and we heard a refrain of the grand eternal poem on the jolting seat of the old wagon, though Jake was silent the rest of the way, looking furtively now and then at the girl beside him, and being very attentive to old Dobbin. Poor Jake! Amanda Liza had shot up clean out of his reach since then, and what we wanted to know was whether the girl would remember him now in the days of her elevation.

A wealthy uncle, a splendid home, and money on her own account—ah! no wonder we had not seen Amanda since.

"They touched her off like a skyrocket, and she vanished," said Jake, ruefully.

Had she vanished for good? Then poetical justice was a myth, and Amanda's patched shoes and faded dresses were not more worthless than she. We waited. We watched the windows furtively. We pricked up our ears at every ring of the door-bell, but weeks passed, and the golden coach-and-six in which our Cinderella was to arrive did not rattle up the drive to the Squimps Academy.

I think we had almost given it up, and Amanda Liza's base forgetfulness and ingratitude were becoming an old story, when one day at noon Jake came rushing in among us, hot and shining, and holding between his thumb and forefinger a dainty billet. He looked like an embodied "hurrah" at that moment.

But, to tell the truth, Jake could not quite make out the writing, for with all his "opportunities," as our worthy principal designated his vicinage to wisdom and learning in the capacity of shoeblack, the lad was unable to decipher manuscript, and hadn't the patience," he declared.

Jennie Smith read the letter for him amid the general applause. 'Justice and righteousness had triumphed,' it appeared, and Amanda Liza had proved herself a "regular brick," as Jennie, with beaming eyes, observed, handing back the precious scrap of paper to Jake, who carefully wrapped it in his ragged handkerchief. The letter contained a brief invitation to the lad, urging him to come and see his old friend—a day was appointed for the visit, and the street and number where she was to be found were written out in a schoolgirl hand. A fashionable and wealthy quarter of the city where Jake was not likely to be very familiar.

Jake set himself to work without loss of time, about blacking his boots, albeit the appointed day was somewhat about a week ahead. But it would take a deal of fixing, he explained confidentially, to get ready, and he hadn't much to fix with. Jake's normal condition was not that of a dandy, certainly. He could only, as a general thing, be lured by the prospect of a drive to "red himself up," as Mrs. Squimps said. To be ragged and let alone was his heaven. But this time he arose to the greatness of the occasion—he brushed and scoured, washed out his sole white shirt, dusted and straightened his battered old hat, and mended his trousers.

Deeply interested in Jake's fortunes, we watched the proceedings.

"But, Jake," said Jenny Smith, one day, "what are you going to do for a coat?"

Unhappy suggestion! Jake looked aghast. He hadn't thought of that. Certainly he couldn't make his appearance in that overgrown coachman's rig, in which he was won't to illustrate the academical respectability on the road. And he had nothing else. No necessity had ever before developed itself for anything save shirt sleeves and a woolen jacket.

An awful pause came over our deliberations for Jake. Miss Smith whistled, and finally suggested her waterproof—we were all ready to fling ours at his feet—but Jake couldn't go muffled like an Italian brigand. He shook his head.

Night closed without any solution of the difficulty; but we trusted that somehow the lad's quick wit would find a way out of it.

The next morning, however, a new sensation turned us from the contemplation of Jake's disasters. The house had been robbed. We were all terribly scared, and Squimps was in a fever of declamation and wrath. His coat—his best beloved blue-black coat, in which he was wont to dignify trustee meetings, ornament his pew on a Sunday, and pay visits of state to his patrons—his coat had been stolen. His coat, a man so devoted to the interests of education that he scarcely had time to go to the tailor's; to think that an ungrateful, inappreciative, idle world should have permitted him to be robbed! He raved, he stormed, he threatened vengeance, he lectured us on the degeneracy of the times, and forgot our Latin.

Vague forebodings of lurking assassins, masked robbers, and frequent skirmishes into the wardrobe and dormitories about this time kept us all in a nervous flurry, to the exclusion of all thought of Jake. But late one twilight afternoon, as we sat huddled in the windows of the long school-room, waiting the supper-bell, we saw him issue from the outhouse. Oh, horror! Oh, apparition of terror! For with its tails nearly touching the ground, his long sleeves overlapping his hands, Jake wore without a doubt the missing coat, boldly marching in his stolen finery down towards the road in sight of us all.

In sight of sharper eyes, too, it seemed, for not far from the house Squimps himself pounced upon him.

Poor, kind, light-hearted Jake! We held our breath that day and the next, for Jake had been marched off to prison, and Squimps' eloquence and morality were in full flow. He said a longer grace than ever at dinner, and we were all glad when, hungrily eyeing the scanty board, we heard the visitors' bell summon him to the parlor. I think we were in better appetite than usual that day, and we left little behind us for our Mentor as we filed up stairs towards the schoolroom. Passing the parlor door, there rushed out upon us a little figure in a trailing silk dress and bonnet full of nodding French flowers. It was Amanda Liza.

"Oh, girls!" she cried, hysterically, bewildered with an apparent desire to embrace the whole troop. "Poor Jake!"

Squimps, tall and solemn, rose with dignity, and closed the parlor door upon their further conference. We heard him make this consoling remark:

"I always knew he'd come to no good!"

It seemed that Amanda had learned of Jake's mishap through some stray newspaper, where the well-known name of the virtuous and vengeful Squimps had met her eye. She comprehended the situation, and came to the academy to plead for her old friend.

We waited the news of Jake's fate breathlessly, nodding and whispering among ourselves. For there would be a trial or something terrible, of course we hardly knew what. Squimps was away all the afternoon, the classes were demoralized, and we stood idly gazing out of the window at four o'clock, when a carriage came up the drive. To our amazement Jake sat on the box, elate and erect. He sprang down and opened the door with a flourish, and out stepped Squimps.

"And I'm going to live with Miss Mandy Liza forever!" cried Jake, when he came among us, his face lit up with a glory as if he were departing for heaven.

Would Amanda Liza dress him in a blue coat and brass buttons, and make him her coachman at good wages? Ah, what a rise for poor Jake! Amanda Liza was his saint, his angel, the hem of whose garment he touched reverently. There was no common-place element about such love as this, and Jake would be content to let down her carriage step and look after ponies all the days of his life, we thought. And that was the last we saw of him at the Squimpses.

But years after, when I was traveling in Australia with my husband, Mr. Smith and myself were invited to the [illegible] of one of the magistrates there, whose broad estates covered miles of mountain and meadow, and who owned almost literally "the cattle upon a thousand hills." In the lady of the mansion, a delicate and dainty personage, I recognized with a cry of surprise and delight my old schoolmate, Amanda Liza; but I did not know the portly dignitary upon whose arm she hung until I heard her laughing whisper—"Oh! Jake, don't you remember old Squimps?"

Raising Peanuts.

Familiar as we all are with the taste and quality of peanuts, but few of us are aware of where they are raised. The little State of Delaware has the honor of growing about all that are grown in the United States. The ground pea (peanut) grows beneath the surface of the ground, as its name imports. The plant has the appearance of the common dwarf garden pea, though more bushy. It is cultivated in hills. The pea grows on tendrils which put out from the plant and take root in the earth. The fruit is picked from the roots by the hand, and the vines are a favorite for horses, mules, and cattle. From 30 to 80 bushels are produced on an acre. There are some planters who raise from 1,000 to 15,000 bushels a year.

Boilers are made of wrought iron plate riveted together. An engine of 600 horse power is about the average—3,080 being the largest. Common engines consume from thirty-five to forty tons of coal per day. The durability of engines depends largely upon their construction and use. Wheat and Vigor.

The following from the Science of Health, deserves the attention of all. The facts it contains are of the greatest moment:

"Nothing is more sure in the chemistry of life, than that great wheat eaters are great thinkers, or that the phosphorous which wheat contains, in the outer kernel, immediately beneath the husk, is the feeder of brains, and the material substance which provokes the thought, study and reason, and all the forms of nervous energy. There are physiologists who attribute the remarkable success of States like Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to the bounty and perfection of the wheat crop, and the intellectual stimulus, or rather food which it affords the brain.

"Certainly no Commonwealth in the world has evinced a higher sense of law and order, or more rapidly developed a social system which has no equal in the world. The constitution of Indiana for instance, the very centre of the wheat zone, beyond comparison the best in the Union, and produces the highest results in our civilization.

"There is a Southern wheat belt, which includes Australia in part, South Africa, New Zealand, and a part of South America, where a civilization equal to that of the central North of the United States is growing up.

"But the value of wheat as a civilizer will never be fully realized until wheat meal takes the place of bolted flour, and the people learn to make bread without yeast or risings—good bread is emphatically the "staff of life;" but the commercial article is the way to dyspepsia and permature death."

Wife-Catching.

The marriage ceremony is performed curiously by the Esquimaux. When a boy kills a polar bear, it is considered sufficient proof of his ability to maintain a family; he is therefore told to go and catch a wife. Watching his opportunity at night, he pounces on a victim and attempts to carry her off. She, however, struggles and shrieks until she has collected around her a group of sympathizers. She then turns upon her captor, and bites and scratches until he is compelled to release her; then she darts into the crowd and attempts to escape. The expectant bridegroom follows her, but not unmolested. All the old women take scourges of dried seal-skin and flagellate him unmercifully as he passes, making at the same time every effort to arrest him in his course. If, despite these little impediments to matrimonial bliss, he should catch his victim, the biting and scratching scene is renewed, and, in all probability, he is compelled to release her, and the chase, with its attendant discomforts, is resumed. Should he overcome all obstacles, the third capture proves effectual, and the victim, ceasing her struggles, is led away amid the acclamations and rejoicings of the assembled multitude.

Mild Winters.

The mildness of the present season, though unusual, bears no comparison to that of some winters "long gone by." In 1172 the temperature was so high that leaves came out on the trees in January, and birds hatched their broods in February. In 1289 the winter was equally mild, and the maidens of Cologne wore wreaths of violets and corn-flowers at Christmas and on Twelfth Day. In 1421 the trees flowered in the month of March, and the vines in the month of April; cherries ripened in the same month, and grapes appeared in May. In 1572 the trees were covered with leaves in January, and the birds hatched their young in February, as in 1172; in 1585 the same thing was repeated, and it is added that the corn was in the ear at Easter. There was in France neither snow nor frost throughout the winters of 1538, 1607, 1609, 1617 and 1659; finally, in 1662, even in the north of Germany, the stoves were not lighted, and trees flowered in February. Coming to later dates, the winter of 1846-47, when it thundered at Paris on the 28th of January, and that of 1866, the year of the great inundation of the Seine, may be mentioned as exceptionally mild.—Pall Mall Gazette.

SOLOMON RAY.

A hard, close man was Solomon Ray;
Nothing of value he gave away;
He hoarded and saved,
And he pinched and shaved,
And the more he got the more he craved.

The hard-earned dollars he toiled to gain
Brought him little but care and pain;
For little he spent,
And all that he lent
He made it bring him twenty per cent.

This was the life of Solomon Ray,
The years went by and his hair grew gray;
His cheeks grew thin,
And his heart within
Grew as hard as the dollars he worked to win.

But he died one day, as all men must,
For life is fleeting, and man but dust;
And the heirs were gay
That laid him away;
And that was the end of Solomon Ray.

They quarreled now, who had little cared
For Solomon Ray while his life was spared;
His lands were sold,
And his hard-earned gold
All went to the lawyers, I am told.

Yet men will cheat, and pinch, and save,
Nor carry their treasures beyond the grave.
All their gold, some day,
Will melt away,
Like the selfish savings of Solomon Ray.

He doesn't wish it any more heartily than we do.

Always Speak for Yourself.—Jenkins (five foot nothing): "Tall women are all very well, but they don't do for men of our height, my boy! Fancy you and me dangling in the wake of two fair giantesses! He! he! ho! ho! ho! ha! ha!" (Smothered indignation of Tomkins, who is nearly five feet five!")

Let Dogs Delight.—It appears that legislation is not perfect in Japan: "Dog-fighting has been prohibited throughout Japan, and any transgressors in this respect are to be fined, and the dogs will be killed." We should fine the dogs and kill the transgressors, who are much more to blame than the dogs.

"You have heern, gentlemen of the jury," said an eloquent advocate—"you have heern the witness swar he saw the prisoner raise his gun; you have heern him swar he saw the flash and heerd the report; you have heern him swar he dug the bullet out with his jack-knife, and you have seen the bullet produced in court; but whar, gentlemen, whar, I ask you, is the man who saw that bullet hit that dog?"

A CULINARY EPITAPH.

"Underneath this crust
Lies the moldering dust
Of Eleanor Batchelor Shoven,
Well versed in the arts
Of pies, custards and tarts,
And the lucrative trade of the oven.
When she lived long enough,
She made her last puff,
And now she doth lie,
And make her dirt pie,
In hopes that her crust may be raised."

Curious Effects of Lightning.

At the last sitting of the French Academy of Sciences a letter was read from M. E. Parent, giving an account of the effects of a stroke of lightning which fell on the 26th ult. at at Troyes (Aube), in a central quarter of the town, with a noise equal to the report of several pieces of artillery. The phenomenon seems to have been confined to the Rue de la Monnaie, where, at No. 37, a young girl who was standing on the threshold of her dwelling, saw a fiery globe, of the size of an orange, fall at her feet, then roll along the street, and disappear. She experienced a violent shock, causing a tremor that did not cease until the following day. The pins in her hair were torn away, as well as all the other metal articles she had about her per person. Her father, who was leaning against the iron bars of a window of the next house, was paralyzed for a few seconds, and did not recover from the commotion for several days. At No. 24, same street, in the "Election House," as it is called, the electric fluid fell on a turret behind the house, pierced a hole through the weathercock, slid down the roof along the zinc which covered it, got inside by loosening the beams that supported the woodwork, broke through a partition, then through the floor into the lower story, made its way through a wall into a garret, got through the window, ran along the spouts and pipes down to the first story; thence passed to the next house, broke into a warehouse where there were some iron stoves, with the usual cast-iron ornaments, such as wreths, flowers, etc., all of which it faithfully designed on the ceiling with the precision of photography; then melted the wire of a bell, the trace of which it left on the wall, and at length took a fancy to some gilt wooden rods intended for sale, and wrapped up in paper. These it enriched with fantastic but elegant designs, and, after a few more vagaries, took its leave.

Trichina Spiralis.

(Cincinnati Letter to Chicago Tribune.)

Two of the victims of trichinosis at Aurora, Ind., have died from the effects of the poisoning, and the bodies have undergone post-mortem examination. The victims are Henry, second son of Mrs. Threnart, the German lady in whose family the infected pork was first eaten, and Mrs. Benter, the wife of the German Methodist minister, who came to nurse the smitten family. Prof. Sutton conducted the post-mortem examination, and submitted portions of the flesh of both the victims to a thorough scientific examination. He says that after an attack of trichinosis the posion still remains in the flesh for years, ready to develop disease when this flesh is eaten or taken into the stomach; but after hogs recover from hog-cholera they are fattened and sold to our butchers, and the meat becomes one of the principal articles of food in the West, under the form of bacon, sugar-cured hams, etc. He concludes, therefore, that, if the trichina is a cause of the hog-cholera, which is now prevailing to a great extent in some parts of Kentucky, there are none of the usual signs accompanying it. None of the carcasses of cholera hogs show any signs of the trichinæ, while those of which the human victims partook as food exhibit as many as 80,000 to the cubic inch of flesh. The microscopic examination of portions of Mrs. Benton's flesh and of the boy Threnart developed the startling fact that millions of the trichinæ were seen alive, coiling and uncoiling in the tissues.

The fact has created a profound sensation throughout that section of Indiana in which Aurora is situated, and, taken in connection with the deaths named, has completely killed the sale of pork. Experiments made with the infected pork show that 195 degrees Fahrenheit will destroy the worms; but as it requires 212 degrees to boil water, meat thoroughly boiled would be harmless. But the question is, who would eat meat, no matter how much it was boiled, that was known to have been infected with trichinæ.

A Life of Washington is issued by a Yeddo publisher. This literary novelty, says a correspondent, is brought out in no less than forty-four volumes in the Japanese characters, and is profusely illustrated in highest style of art. Washington is represented in the clothes and fashion of the present day, and with a moustache, carring a cane, and accompanied by a Skye terrier. He is gazing at a lady with a train, Grecian bend, and a hideous waterfall.

Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs in Russia.

These instruments are making their excellence known to the sovereigns of Europe as well as those of America. London alone has had nearly one thousand of them since the beginning of last year, and the London Choir mentions it as significant that one of the best portraits of the Russian Princess, whose recent marriage to the Duke of Edinburg is so magnificently celebrated, represents her as playing on one of these popular American organs.

Herbalistic Remedies.—In former days, if a member of the household became indisposed, the family-head, under instructions from the gray-haired dame, went to the forest or the field, to gather herbs or berries, from which were quickly made invigorating extracts, which ere many days brought the patient safely around, and saw the family gathering once more without a missing member. How is it now? The slightest indisposition brings the "family physician," with his handsome carriage. He feels the pulse, examines the tongue, looks very grave, writes a few lines of hieroglyphics, charges a big fee, and leaves, only to return the next day and find his patient mercuralized sufficiently to be really sick. A week or two of attendance follows, and therein lies the secret of "wealthy physicians." Compare the physique of the present age with the past, and the story is complete. Reader, discard chemicals and try herbs. If you are ill, try the great herbalistic remedy, Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters. 30

Harlemville, N. Y., July 9, 1873.

R. V. Pierce, M. D.:

Dear Sir—Your favor is just received. I intended to have written to you several weeks since concerning the improvement in my health, which is now very apparent. I have used one bottle of Favorite Prescription with the best results, although I will admit I was somewhat discouraged after its use (for a short time only). I took it under very disadvantageous circumstances—having the supervision of the house and during the season of "house cleaning" I was obliged, through the incompetency of help, to do more than I ought, and, of course, suffered dreadfully, lifted when I ought not to have raised my hand, and did all I could to bring "order out of chaos,"—but upon laying aside all cares and continuing the remedy I find after using less than one bottle to be so much benefited that I have discontinued the use, with no return of the symptoms of which I wrote you. I have suffered terribly, and what added to my distress was the consciousness of not procuring relief from ordinary sources, at times it seemed about impossible to stand, so great was the distress. All of those severe neuralgic pains have disappeared, they were so bad at times I could hardly walk without some external pressure. They seem to have left me like magic, suddenly, and have had no return; all other symptoms have been removed. The severe weakness and faintness have disappeared, and I can go up stairs with comparative ease now. I would have informed you ere this of my improvement, for I appreciated it, but I was fearful it was only transient benefit I was receiving, but I think sufficient time has elapsed to consider the beneficial results permanent. Accept of my best wishes for your future success and your kindness in advising me. Very truly, Mrs. M. Nettie Snyder.

If Congress had employed as much scientific skill in the arrangement of its "Reconstruction Policy" at the close, as the War Department did in the beginning of the war, in arranging for the manufacture of what was called Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, for the use of the cavalry horses, no doubt the Union would have been restored long ago.—Exchange.

We noticed in one of our exchanges this week the statement of Dea. John Hodgkins, of South Jefferson, Me., whose son was cured of incipient consumption by the use of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. We refer to this at this time as tending to corroborate the statement we made last week in relation to this Liniment as applied to consumption.—[Com.
